(f) The Honourable Member is referred to paragraphs 150 to 201 of the Clothing Regulations, India, and Army Instructions (India) No. B.97 of 1929, Nos. 39 and 46 of 1930 and No. 110 of 1931. If the Honourable Member wishes to know the scales on which the soldier is required to maintain personal clothing and necessaries, I would refer him to pages 119 to 152 of the Clothing Regulations. If however he wishes to know how each soldier spends that portion of his allowance which he does not spend in the Quartermaster's store, I am afraid that the information is unobtainable.

RECRUITMENT OF PUNJABI MUSSALMANS TO GUARD ARMY HEADQUARTERS.

1021. Sardar G. N. Mujumdar: (a) Is it a fact that fourteen Punjabi Mussalmans have been recruited to guard the Army Headquarters in New Delhi and Simla?

(b) What was the reason for their recruitment? Has there occurred any special necessity for doing so after the Great War?

(c) What extra expenditure has been caused to Government through this? From what Grant are they paid and what is the amount that each recruit receives?

(d) Are Government aware that many frictions have occurred between these gate-keepers and the Army Headquarters staff?

(e) Do Government propose to dispense with their services? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) To prevent the entry of unauthorised persons into Army Headquarters. The reply to the last portion is in the affirmative.

(c) The additional expenditure amounts to about Rs. 4,840 per annum. The gate keepers are paid from the Army Estimates at the following rate:

One Non-Commissioned Officer-in-Charge—Rs. 30-8-0 per mensem; Remainder—Rs. 25-8-0 per mensem.

(d) No, Sir.

(e) No, Sir, for the reason stated in the reply to part (b).

BARBED WIRE FENCE ROUND THE OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL IN SIMLA.

1022. Sardar G. N. Mujumdar: (a) Is it a fact that the offices of the Quartermaster General in India in Simla, have been fenced with barbed wire entanglements after the recruitment of the gate-keepers? What was the amount spent on them?

(b) Why was this entanglement not considered during the Great War and what special reason is there for it during normal times?

(c) Is it a fact that the building in which His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has his office has not yet been similarly fenced? If so, will Government be pleased to state why the building in which the Quartermaster General in India works has been fenced?

(d) What is the necessity for this fence when ex-soldiers picket the Quartermaster General's Branch?

(e) Do Government propose to remove the barbed wire fencing? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes; the amount spent was Rs. 2,230.

(b) To prevent the entry of unauthorised persons into Army Headquarters.

(c) Barbed wire fencing is not necessary in the building referred to, as it is already protected by barriers and gates.

(d) The gatekeepers are stationed at the open gates. The object of the fencing is to prevent unauthorised persons entering the building at other points.

(e) No, Sir, for the reasons given in my reply to part (d) of this question.

AYURVEDIC DISPENSARIES IN DELHI AND LACK OF SIKH HAKIMS OR VAIDS.

1023. *Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that there are 2 Unani and 3 Ayurvedic Dispensaries at Delhi and New Delhi run by the Delhi and New Delhi Municipalities? If so, in which localities and when were they opened?

(b) Is it also a fact that there is no Sikh Hakim or Vaid working in any of these dispensaries? If so, who are the gentlemen employed in these dispensaries and what are their qualifications, pay and other allowances?

(c) Is there any likelihood of there being any addition in the establishment of the Hakims or Vaids in the near future or in 1932 under any of these Municipalities? If so, under what categories and when?

(d) If the reply to part (c) be in the affirmative, are Government prepared to order the recruitment of a Sikh Hakim in the next vacancy? If not, why not?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Yes. A statement showing where these dispensaries are located and when they were opened, is laid on the table.

(b) Yes. A statement giving the rest of the information asked for by the Honourable Member is also laid on the table.

(c) and (d). A Hakim will be required for the new Unani dispensary which is to be opened in New Delhi during the next financial year. Applications have been invited and the claims of Sikh candidates will be duly considered with others when a selection is made.

Statement referred to in reply to part (a) of starred question No. 1023.

	Opened.
Unani dispensary at Chandni Mahal, Delhi . . .	1925-26
Ayurvedic dispensary at Nai Sarak, Delhi . . .	1925-26
Unani dispensary at Sabzimandi, Delhi . . .	1927-28
Ayurvedic dispensary at Ajmeri Gate, Delhi . . .	1928-29
Ayurvedic dispensary at Gol Market at New Delhi . . .	1930

Statement referred to in reply to part (b) of starred question No. 1023.

There are seven Vaids and Hakims employed in the dispensaries, five Hindus and two Muhammadans. Four are in the grade of Rs. 70-4-100 p. m., with free quarters, two in the grade of Rs. 40-3-70 p. m. and one on a pay of Rs. 50 p. m. As regards qualifications, excepting the Vaid in charge of the Ayurvedic dispensary, at New Delhi who has passed the Ayurvedicharya examination of the All-India Ayurveda Maha Mandal and Vidya Pith of Madras in 1925 and is a graduate in Medicine of the Gurukul Medical College, Gurukul University, Hardwar, all of them fulfil the conditions laid down by rules framed by the Local Administration.

INCREASE OF PERCENTAGE AFTER RETRENCHMENT OF HINDUS IN THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

1024. *Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan (on behalf of Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad): (a) Will Government kindly state the percentage of the Hindu, Muslim, and European Officers in the Archaeological Department, Class I, before and after retrenchment?

(b) Is it a fact that the percentage of the Hindu officers has considerably increased as compared with that of the Muslims?

(c) Is it a fact that while European and Muslim officers of six or seven years' service have been retrenched a Hindu officer has been appointed only in July last? If so, how do Government justify his appointment?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) A statement giving the information required is laid on the table.

(b) Only slightly owing to decrease in the European strength of the Department.

(c) Yes; this officer has been retained in view of his special technical qualifications.

Statement showing the percentages of Hindu, Muslim and European officers in the Archaeological Survey of India before and after retrenchment.

Before retrenchment.

Hindus.	Muslims.	Europeans.
52.4	28.6	14.3

After retrenchment.

57.9	31.5	5.3

NEW APPOINTMENTS IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT IN THE PUNJAB, NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE AND DELHI.

1025. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Will Government please lay on the table a statement showing the number of the following appointments made in the Income Tax Department, Punjab, North-West Frontier and Delhi Provinces, in connection with the sur-charge and lowering of taxable limit from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 1,000?

Name of Appointment.	Total No. employed.	Muslims.
Income-tax Officers Inspectors
Head Clerks
Head Assistants
Assistant Clerks

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The information is being obtained and will be laid on the table in due course.

EMPLOYMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT.

1026. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please give a detail of the assistant clerks employed for surcharge and ordinary work, and for Income Tax Officers?

(b) Is it a fact that most of the Muslims have been employed specifically for surcharge work and that all of them will be turned out in March?

(c) If so, are Government prepared to consider the advisability of retaining the Muslims in such a number as to remove the previous inadequacy in the representation of Muslims in the Income Tax Department?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Certain information is being obtained and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

DISPOSAL OF ESTABLISHMENT CASES IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT IN THE PUNJAB, NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE AND DELHI.

1027. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that all the establishment cases in the Income Tax Department are dealt with by a non-gazetted Superintendent in preference to a gazetted Personal Assistant to the Commissioner in the Provinces of Punjab, North-West Frontier and Delhi? If so, are Government prepared to consider the advisability of assigning the whole or part of the establishment work to the gazetted officer?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Establishment cases, like other files, are submitted to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and Delhi by a Superintendent who is a non-Gazetted officer since there is no regular Gazetted Personal Assistant. They are dealt with by the Commissioner himself.

The Government are not prepared to interfere with the Commissioner's discretion as to the distribution of work in his office.

APPOINTMENT OF A MUSLIM AS ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX.

1028. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that Government have never appointed a Muslim Assistant Commissioner so far? If so, do they propose to give the next appointment to a Muslim?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I presume that the Honourable Member's question relates to the Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and Delhi. No Mussalman has hitherto been appointed as Assistant Commissioner in these Provinces. It is not likely that any early vacancy will occur, and I cannot foretell what promotion will be made when it does occur. I can only say that promotions must, according to the Government's settled practice, be regulated primarily with reference to the qualifications and claims of individual officers and the interests of efficiency rather than by communal qualification.

APPOINTMENT OF A MUSLIM AS COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX IN THE PUNJAB, NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE AND DELHI.

1029. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that the post of the Income Tax Commissioner in the Punjab, North-West Frontier and Delhi is reserved for an I. C. S. officer?

(b) If so, are Government prepared to consider the advisability of appointing a Muslim I. C. S. officer to that post?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The post of Commissioner of Income-tax is not reserved for the I. C. S. At present three Income-tax Commissionerships are held by officers who are not members of the

I. C. S., including the post of Commissioner, Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and Delhi to which the Honourable Member refers.

(b) The aim of the Government is to fill these Commissionerships by promotion within the Department as far as possible and such promotion is not regulated by communal considerations. I might mention as a matter of interest that, of the two Indians who at present hold posts as Commissioners of Income-tax, one is a Mussalman and the other a Parsi. So far as can be foreseen no vacancy in the appointment of Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and Delhi is likely to occur in the near future.

BYE-LAWS FOR SWEETMEAT SHOPS AND MEAT SHOPS IN DELHI.

1030. Bhai Parma Nand: (a) Is it a fact that the Health Officer of Delhi City Municipality, considering the insanitary state of meat shops in Delhi, framed certain bye-laws about six years ago for their better supervision?

(b) Is it a fact that the Health Officer originally did not think it necessary to frame bye-laws for sweetmeat shops, but later on he did so?

(c) Is it a fact that these bye-laws were unanimously passed by the Executive Committee but were not confirmed at the ordinary meeting for a very long time?

(d) Is it a fact that when these were passed, no Christian member was present in the committee?

(e) Is it a fact that these bye-laws were unanimously passed?

(f) Is it a fact that the Health Officer considered the framing of bye-laws as urgent in the case of meat shops but not in the case of sweetmeat shops?

(g) Is it a fact that the Local Government have given their approval to the sweetmeat shops bye-laws but withheld their approval for the meat shop bye-laws?

(h) Is it a fact that almost all the meat shops are owned by the Muslims and most of the sweetmeat shops by Hindus?

(i) If the reply to parts (c) and (f) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons that led the Honourable Chief Commissioner to make this distinction?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Material for answering the question is being collected, and the information asked for by the Honourable Member will be laid on the table in due course.

PREVIOUS SERVICE OF MR. MONOHAR LAL, NOW IN THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF ORDNANCES (PROVISION).

1031. Mr. B. N. Misra (a) With reference to part (b) of the reply to unstarred question No. 133, dated the 7th March, 1932, is it a fact that Mr. Manohar Lal was not recruited from the Ferozepore Arsenal for service in the office of the Assistant Director of Ordnance Services (Provision)?

(b) Is it a fact that prior to transfer to his present office Mr. Manohar Lal was serving as Assistant Cashier of the Quartermaster General's Branch which he entered some 12 years ago?

(c) If the answers to parts (a) and (b) above be in the affirmative, will Government please say how they reconcile the two facts as explained by them in parts (a) and (b) of the answer given on the 7th March, 1932?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Mr. Manohar Lal was recruited from the Perozepore Arsenal in 1920, for service in the office of the Director of Ordnance Services, which then included the present office of the Assistant Director of Ordnance Services (Provision).

(b) Yes. Mr. Manohar Lal was employed as an Assistant Cashier in the Quartermaster General's Branch from the 1st April 1924 to the 31st March 1929.

(c) Mr. Manohar Lal was originally recruited from an arsenal. Moreover, the orders at present in force were issued in October, 1929, and had reference to future recruitment only, and not to promotion.

PREVIOUS SERVICE OF MR. MONOHAR LAL, NOW IN THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF ORDNANCES (PROVISION).

1037. Mr. B. N. Misra: (a) With reference to parts (b) and (c) of the reply to unstarred question No. 135, dated 7th March, 1932, is it a fact that until the date of his latest promotion to the upper-time scale, Mr. Monohar Lal was carrying the Cashier's allowance with him, the amount, having been merged into his lower-time scale assistant's pay?

(b) If the answer to part (a) above be in the affirmative, how do Government reconcile the discrepancy between the answer given on the 7th March, 1932, and that now given?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (b). The Cashier's allowance was merged into Mr. Manohar Lal's initial pay in the 1st Division as a personal allowance to be absorbed by subsequent increments, in order to protect him against a reduction in his emoluments on promotion, and not in consideration of his performing the duties of a Cashier in addition to other duties.

RETRENCHMENT OF THE APPOINTMENTS IN ARSENALS OF CERTAIN MEN BROUGHT FROM ARSENALS TO ARMY HEADQUARTERS.

1038. Mr. B. N. Misra: (a) With reference to parts (a) and (b) of the reply to unstarred question No. 137, will Government please state the number of men on lower rates of pay who have been brought up from arsenals to replace the six Army Headquarters clerks?

(b) In view of the fact that they have not been replaced on the arsenal establishments, will Government please say whether these men were not surplus to the requirements of the arsenals from which they have come?

(c) Having regard to the crying need for retrenchment everywhere, do Government propose to consider the possibility of reducing the number of men in the arsenals by six?

(d) Is it a fact that the saving effected by reducing the six Army Headquarters clerical appointments is being utilized to finance the two posts of Superintendents now created temporarily, and that the reduction of the six clerks bears no connexion with the lower paid arsenal clerks?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Nine clerks have been brought up from arsenals temporarily, not to replace the six Army Headquarters clerks, whose appointments were abolished, but to assist in the introduction of a new procedure for the control of stores.

(b) They were not surplus to requirements in arsenals, from which they have been temporarily spared in order to carry out urgent reorganisation work at Army Headquarters.

(c) The matter will be considered when the reorganisation work at Army Headquarters has been completed.

(d) Yes.

DUTIES OF MEN PROMOTED IN THE OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF ORDNANCE SERVICES (PROVISION).

1034. Mr. B. N. Misra: Is it a fact that the duties of the men who have been lately promoted Superintendents and upper-time scale assistants in the office of the Assistant Director of Ordnance Services (Provision), Army Headquarters, have undergone no change?

Mr. G. M. Young: There has been no change in the duties of assistants who were formerly employed as Superintendents and have now been graded as such, but the duties of assistants promoted to the upper time scale have increased.

PROMOTION OF A CASHIER IN THE OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF ORDNANCE SERVICES (PROVISION).

1035. Mr. B. N. Misra: Is it a fact that a Cashier has been promoted to the upper-time scale in the office of the Assistant Director of Ordnance Services (Provision) and are Government prepared to instruct all their offices that there is no bar against a cashier rising to a superintendentship?

Mr. G. M. Young: No, Sir. The assistant after promotion was not employed solely as a cashier, but combined that with various other duties. The latter part of the question does not therefore arise.

THEFT BY BRITISH SOLDIERS IN THE BAREILLY BRITISH INFANTRY BAZAR.

1036. Mr. K. P. Thampan: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that a dacoity was committed by the British soldiers on the 24th December, 1930, at Bareilly British Infantry Bazar and the Sessions Judge at Bareilly convicted some of the soldiers with imprisonments ranging from 3 years to 3 months?

(b) Is it a fact that though the matter was reported to the military authorities at Bareilly the next morning after the occurrence and they were satisfied (by the discovery of some of the lost articles in the box of one of the soldiers and by the identification of the bed irons left behind in the shops as belonging to the barracks) that the soldiers had something to do with the dacoity the military authorities refused to allow the Civil Police to make a search of the barracks till after the expiry of 2 weeks?

(c) Was any departmental enquiry made by the Officer Commanding or any other military authority on the part played by the soldiers in this dacoity and were any of the soldiers other than those convicted by the Sessions Judge of Bareilly dealt with departmentally?

(d) Is it a fact that at the hearing of the case at the Session Court the more serious charges such as committing dacoity and being in possession of articles stolen in a dacoity were not pressed and the indictment was for minor offences of theft, etc.?

(e) Will Government state whether they have perused the judgment of the Sessions Judge at Bareilly (Trial No. 3 of 1931) and the connected papers and considered the question as to whether condign punishment has been meted out to the offenders?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) No, Sir. A search was carried out in the lines of the 1st Battalion, The Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, in the presence of civil police officials, on the day following that of the dacoity.

(c) A military Court of Enquiry was held on the 29th December. The enquiry proved abortive, as civilian witnesses failed to identify any of the soldiers. The case was then handed over to the Civil Police.

(d) No, Sir.

(e) Government have read the judgment, and see no reason to question it.

COMPENSATION FOR THEFT BY BRITISH SOLDIERS IN THE BRITISH INFANTRY BAZAR, BAREILLY.

1037. Mr. K. P. Thampan: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) whether they received any memorials from some of the shopkeepers at Bareilly British Infantry Bazar, praying that they may be compensated for the loss suffered by them in the dacoity committed by the British soldiers on the 24th of December, 1930, and their petitions were rejected;

(b) whether Government have been giving any compensation to the sufferers in cases of such excesses committed by the soldiers; and

(c) whether they are prepared to consider the desirability of doing something to allay the discontent?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Petitions have been received at Army Headquarters.

(b) No.

(c) Government are not liable to pay compensation in such cases, nor is it their practice to do so.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: May I know whether the Government have consulted their legal advisers and made sure that there is no legal obligation to make good the losses sustained by these people in this dacoity?

Mr. G. M. Young: The answer is in the negative.

CONSTRUCTION OF A ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH AT MINGALADON CANTONMENT.

1038. Sirdar Sohan Singh (on behalf of Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi):

(a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the plans and estimates of the Mingaladon Cantonment Roman Catholic church have been completed and sanctioned?

(b) Are Government prepared to take necessary steps and issue necessary instructions for the early completion of the church?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state when they expect the church to be available for the British troops in the Mingaladon Cantonment?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) A plan and a preliminary estimate relating to the project were received, but have recently been returned to the Local Government for further scrutiny in certain respects.

(b) and (c). I am afraid it is not at present possible to say when the church can be built. Owing to the existing financial stringency, Government have been compelled to postpone expenditure on all new civil major works.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION BY THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO. IN DISEMBARKING PASSENGERS.

1039. Sirdar Sohan Singh (on behalf of Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi): (a) Is it a fact that the British India Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., issue "Debarkation Passes" at Rangoon and Calcutta to Asiatic passengers and not to European and American passengers?

(b) Is it a fact that European and American passengers are allowed to disembark and pass through the gate at Rangoon and Calcutta without any "Debarkation Pass"?

(c) Is it a fact that Asiatic passengers—even first and second class Asiatic passengers—are not allowed to disembark and pass through the gate at Rangoon and Calcutta without being called upon to produce the "Debarkation Passes" issued by the British India Steam Navigation Co., Ltd.?

(d) What is the object of the British India Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., in observing this racial discrimination and in imposing this restraint on Asiatic passengers?

(e) Are the Government of India prepared to issue necessary orders to stop this practice?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India are not in possession of the information asked for. Enquiries are, however, being made from the local authorities, and on receipt of the information, a reply will be laid on the table of the House.

ALLEGED RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF LADY PASSENGERS EMBARKING AT CALCUTTA FOR RANGOON.

1040. Sirdar Sohan Singh (on behalf of Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi): (a) Is it a fact that first and second class European and American lady passengers are allowed to embark at Calcutta for Rangoon without any medical examination and without being passed by the Calcutta Port Health Officer or his Assistants?

(b) Is it a fact that first and second class Asiatic lady passengers are not allowed to embark at Calcutta for Rangoon without medical examination or without being passed by the Calcutta Port Health Officer or his Assistants?

(c) What is the object of the Calcutta Port authorities in observing this racial discrimination?

(d) Are the Government of India prepared to issue necessary orders to stop this practice?

Sir Frank Noyce: The information asked for by the Honourable Member is being obtained and will be furnished to the House in due course.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN LIGHT AND HEAVY "LATHI" CHARGES.

1041. Sirdar Sohan Singh (on behalf of Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi):

(a) Will Government be pleased to explain the distinction between a "light lathi" charge and a "heavy lathi" charge?

(b) Have the Government of India prescribed, by any official circular or instructions issued to any of the local Governments, what kind of "lathies" are to be used by the Police in charging or dispersing crowds?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The answer would depend on the context in which these phrases were used. The reference might be to the measures of force it was necessary to use, or to the kind of lathis used.

(b) No. This is a matter entirely within the competence of the Local Governments.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Will the Honourable Member give a physical demonstration on the floor of this House as to what a light lathi charge is as distinguished from a heavy lathi charge? (Laughter.)

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Not on the Members of the Assembly.

SUBJECTION OF WOMEN TO LATHI CHARGES.

1042. Sirdar Sohan Singh (on behalf of Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi):

(a) Are the Government of India in a position to cite the case of any civilised Government which has subjected women to "lathi charges"?

(b) Are the Government of India aware of the intensity of public opinion and feeling on this question?

(c) Are the Government of India prepared to reconsider and revise the present policy and practice of subjecting women to "lathi charges"?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a), (b) and (c). I must protest strongly against the suggestion contained in the Honourable Member's question that it is either the policy or the practice of the Government of India or of Local Governments to subject women to lathi charges which is entirely without foundation.

In the dispersal of unlawful assemblies, care is taken, where this is possible, to separate women if they are present, before the dispersal is made and it is always a matter for regret when women are injured as the result of a dispersal.

I would suggest to the Honourable Member that he would better serve his purpose if he used his influence against the participation of women in unlawful assemblies, instead of making charges by innuendo which are totally unfounded.

NUMBER OF WOMEN ARRESTED AND IMPRISONED FOR POLITICAL OFFENCES.

1043. Sirdar Sohan Singh (on behalf of Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi): Will Government be pleased to state how many women have been (a) arrested, and (b) imprisoned throughout India during the past three months either in connection with the civil disobedience movement or for alleged offences under any of the Ordinances?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I have no information in regard to arrests. The information at my disposal shows that 1,481 women were convicted in connection with the civil disobedience movement up to the end of February 1932.

EXPENDITURE FROM CENTRAL REVENUES ON PROVINCIAL SUBJECTS.

1044. Mr. B. Das: With reference to the following observations of the Indian Statutory Commission (para. 189, page 155, Simon Report, Vol. II):

"The view is authoritatively held in India on the construction of the present Devolution Rules, that it is not permissible to incur expenditure from central revenues on provincial subjects or to make assignments from central to provincial revenues for expenditure on a provincial subject."

will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement of their views which they supplied to the Statutory Commission?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to paragraph 86 of the memorandum on Financial Relations between the Government of India and the Provincial Governments—Parts C to J—submitted to the Indian Statutory Commission, a copy of which will be found in the Library of the House.

EXPENDITURE FROM CENTRAL REVENUES ON PROVINCIAL SUBJECTS.

1045. Mr. B. Das: With reference to the conclusions of sub-paragraph of paragraph 189, page 155, Simon Report, Vol. II stating as follows:

"But we are strongly of opinion that so rigid a division between expenditure on central and provincial subjects should be modified. We recommend that it should be rendered constitutionally possible under suitable restrictions to assist provincial objects from central funds and vice versa " :—

(a) What action have Government taken so far on the abovementioned recommendation and what steps they are taking to amend the constitution to make such financial assistance possible?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the drafts in the Devolution Rules they contemplate?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Pending the future constitutional changes the Government of India do not propose to take any action on the recommendation of the Indian Statutory Commission.

Mr. B. Das: May I enquire if the Federal Finance Committee had gone into this aspect of the question, and if the Government of India laid their views on this matter before the Committee?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: In answer to the first part of the question, I have no means of ascertaining whether the Federal Finance Committee are going to deal with that question. As regards the second part, the Government of India, so far as I know, have not been asked by that Committee to give any expression of their views about that question.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: What measures do Government propose to take to get this rule changed?

Mr. Arthur Moore: Is it not a fact that the report of the Federal Finance Committee has been signed?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: In a newspaper for which my Honourable friend is himself responsible, I have had a statement that the report has been signed.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Does the Honourable Member's answer imply that the Government of India gave no evidence before the Federal Finance Committee?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: No, Sir.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Does the Honourable Member imply that on this particular subject the Government of India gave no assistance to the Committee?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: If my Honourable friend will read the question he will find that it refers to certain specific recommendations made by the Indian Statutory Commission. My answer to my Honourable friend's supplementary question was that, so far as I was aware, no representative of the Government of India had been asked by the Federal Finance Committee to express any opinion on this particular recommendation of the Statutory Commission.

SUBVENTION GRANTED TO THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

1046. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is not a fact that they have granted the subvention of one crore of rupees to the North-West Frontier Province for three years?

(b) Do Government contemplate to provide in the Government of India Act, 1921, by amending Devolution Rules for this subvention?

(c) Do Government contemplate to amend the Devolution Rules to apply only to the North-West Frontier Province or will the amendment be general and include all new provinces?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to the statement which I made in my Budget speech on March 7th.

(b) The Devolution Rules are, with the approval of the Secretary of State in Council, being amended for this purpose.

(c) An amendment to the existing Devolution Rules to validate the payment to the North-West Frontier Province only is all that is now contemplated.

DEFICIT SHOWN BY THE SIND COMMITTEE.

1047. Mr. B. Das: Is it not a fact that the Sind Committee has shewn a deficit of more than one crore of rupees?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Yes.

GRANT OF FINANCIAL AID TO PROVINCES.

1048. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have given any financial aid to any provinces since the new reforms besides the relief given by remission of provincial contributions?

(b) Did any of the provinces at any time ask for any special financial aid from Central revenues since 1921 and what are the reasons advanced to refuse such financial assistance?

(c) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table all correspondence between Provincial Governments and the Central Government on the subject of financial grants asked in the past since 1921 and also all papers asking for a revision of financial relations?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) In certain cases the position of Provincial Governments has been improved, for example, by the amendment of Devolution Rule 15.

(b) Certain provinces have from time to time complained against the financial arrangements known as the Meston Settlement and incorporated inter alia in the Devolution Rules. The Government of India have in general refused to reopen the question of the Meston Settlement, partly in view of the constitutional review provided for in the Government of India Act and at present being undertaken.

(c) The Government think that no useful purpose would be served by collecting all such correspondence at this stage. All Provincial Governments have had an opportunity of making representations as to their financial position on the occasion of the investigation by the Simon Commission and recently again in the memoranda submitted to the Federal Finance Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference.

Mr. B. Das: May I enquire if the Government of India have knowledge of the demand of the various Provincial Governments that the present financial distribution is inadequate for the provinces and that it should be readjusted?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I have already answered that in my answer to part (b) of my Honourable friend's question.

Mr. B. Das: May I enquire what is the intention of the Government of India, whether they are willing to concede the insistent demand of the provinces to give them more financial assistance?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid I cannot answer that question at present. My Honourable friend knows if he remembers my Budget speech, that I gave that as one of the questions which the Government of India will have to consider during this year. My Honourable friend is also aware that in the present financial and constitutional position it will be extremely difficult to take any action on those lines.

ALLOCATION OF SEATS IN THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AND COUNCIL OF STATE TO THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

1049. *Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to my starred questions Nos. 205 and 206 answered on the 10th February, 1932, will Government be pleased to state if they have reached conclusions on the report of the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province regarding the number of seats to be allocated to the North-West Frontier Province in the Assembly and Council of State?

(b) If so, what are the numbers allotted and on what principles have these been allotted?

(c) Will Government be pleased to reply categorically to the points raised in my questions Nos. 205 and 206?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) No, Sir.

(b) and (c). Do not arise.

Mr. B. Das: Do I understand that the Government of India wish to take a decision in this matter after the Legislative Assembly adjourns so that no short notice question may be asked on the floor of the House?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am quite sure that that motive is not present in the mind of the Government of India.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: But the result would be the same.

Mr. B. Das: Do I need to draw the attention of the Honourable the Leader of the House to the fact that the statement in the Press was in contravention of the practice in the different provinces, and whatever might be the recommendations of the Chief Commissioner of the North West Frontier Province, the Government of India ought to take the House into their confidence? Will the Government of India bring forward a motion when they are going to alter the present electoral rules in order to take the view of the House whether four Members should sit in this Assembly representing the North-West Frontier Province?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I can give no undertaking to that effect.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Will the Government please follow the practice of Berar and have the election first, and afterwards get the elected candidates nominated by the Government till such time that the rules are amended?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not know why the Government of India should follow the example of Berar, considering that the North-West Frontier Province is part of British India and Berar is not.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Do Government propose to consult this House with regard to the numerical strength of Members from the North-West Frontier Province in this House?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I cannot promise that it will be possible to do so before the conclusion of this session.

CANDIDATES GRANTED SCHOLARSHIPS FOR TRAINING IN MARINE ENGINEERING.

1050. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state the names of the candidates to whom scholarships for receiving training in Marine Engineering in England were granted during the years 1930 and 1931, and also to give an account of the progress made by them?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Marine Engineering State scholarships were awarded to Messrs. Brahm Swarup Sud, D. A. Moghe and Qamarud Din Ahmad in 1930 and to Messrs. Balkrishna Gupta, Mohd. Ibrahim Kidwai and W. K. Katre in 1931. The only report so far received is in respect of the batch of scholars sent in 1930, and this report states that the work and progress of the scholars have been satisfactory.

SCHOLARSHIPS GRANTED FOR THE TRAINING OF INDIANS IN MARINE ENGINEERING.

1051. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they are awarding three scholarships tenable in England for the training of Indians in Marine Engineering for the year 1932?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons thereof?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). Owing to the need for economy in Central expenditure it has been decided not to award any scholarships this year.

TRAINING OF MARINE ENGINEERS.

1052. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether any letter was addressed by them to the Government of Bombay in April, 1930, on the subject of training of Marine Engineers in India and whether any Committee was appointed as a consequence thereof?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether any report of that Committee has been received by them?

(c) If the answer to part (b) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state when they expect to receive the report of that Committee?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes, a letter was addressed to the Government of Bombay on the subject in April 1930. The Local Government referred the matter to the Board of Trustees of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, Bombay, who appointed a Committee to prepare a scheme.

(b) and (c). For certain reasons, the Committee has not been able to proceed with the preparation of a report. The question of the training of Marine Engineers in India has, however, been further examined by the Government of India, and a provisional scheme has been formulated by the Local Government in the light of the suggestions made by the Government of India. It is therefore not now necessary for the Committee to submit a report.

TRAINING OF INDIANS IN MARINE ENGINEERING.

1053. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have under contemplation any scheme for providing facilities for giving training to Indians in Marine Engineering in this country?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if they will consult the Indian commercial and shipping opinion on this subject?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state when they expect to formulate that scheme and start training Indians as Marine Engineers in this country just as they have started the Training Ship for giving training to Indians as deck officers?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes.

(b) The technical aspect of the scheme is still under examination. The desirability of consulting shipping and other commercial interests will be considered when the scheme has taken practical shape.

(c) Government are not at present in a position to say when the scheme is likely to be brought into operation.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire if the scheme is awaiting the new constitution to be formulated?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir. It is financial considerations very largely which have held up the whole thing.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Did the Retrenchment Committee suggest retrenchment of these scholarships and expenditure under this head?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I should like to have notice of that. It is not within my recollection.

INCREASE IN THE NUMBER OF CADETS ADMITTED TO THE TRAINING SHIP
"DUFFERIN".

1054. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) if they propose to make a cent. per cent. increase in the number of cadets they have been admitting every year to the I. M. M. T. S. "Dufferin".

(b) if the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, the reasons which lead them to make such an increase?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) No.

(b) Does not arise.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that without incurring any additional cost it is possible to double the number in this particular school?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I cannot answer that question offhand. It sounds to me very improbable.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I put a question some time ago and sent a note on this very question.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Then the Honourable Member must know the answer.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I did not put a question in the Assembly but sent a private note.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not recollect the Honourable Member asking me.

EMPLOYMENT OF CADETS TRAINED ON THE "DUFFERIN".

1055. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) if the Governing Body of the Training Ship "Dufferin" have considered the prospects of employment as officers of those cadets coming out of the Training Ship "Dufferin" who may obtain their Certificates of Competency;
- (b) if the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, whether it is a fact that the Governing Body came to the conclusion that the prospects of employment as officers for the present number of cadets taken by the Training Ship were uncertain after they obtained their certificates of competency?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). The question has been engaging the attention of the Governing Body for some time and is still under their consideration.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE INDIAN MERCANTILE MARINE.

1056. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) whether it is not a fact that, after the failure of the Shipping Conference in 1930, they issued a communiqué on the 6th January, 1930, informing the public that the responsibility will rest with the Government of India as to what future action should be taken for the Development of the Indian Mercantile Marine; and
- (b) if the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, what action has been taken by them or what action do they propose to take for the development of Indian shipping?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: With your permission, Sir, I will answer questions Nos. 1056 and 1057 together.

The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given by me to a somewhat similar question asked by Mr. S. C. Shahani on the 29th January, 1931. The Government of India have nothing to add to that statement except that the consideration of methods involving the grant of direct financial assistance to the industry must for the present be postponed.

DEVELOPMENT OF INDIAN SHIPPING.

†1057. Mr. B. Das: (a) Are Government aware that the Honourable Sir George Rainy stated in the Legislative Assembly in September, 1929, that in case the Shipping Conference failed, the Government of India would explore other avenues for the Development of Indian shipping?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what other avenues have been explored by them or what other avenues they propose to explore for the development of Indian shipping?

NON-ADMISSION OF INDIANS TO THE PRINCE OF WALES SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE, BOMBAY.

1058. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) whether the building of the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute was raised out of public subscriptions and whether the Indian public subscribed a large sum towards that building fund.
- (b) whether it is not a fact that out of Rs. 5,69,373 received by public subscriptions for the building of that Institute during the years 1917, 1918 and 1919, Rs. 2,30,000 were subscribed by the Western India Turf Club and about Rs. 1,50,000 by Indians.
- (c) whether it is not a fact that the money subscribed by the Western India Turf Club is derived both from Indian and non-Indian sources,
- (d) whether it is not a fact that the Indian Officers and Seamen (Iascars) are not admitted in the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute, and
- (e) if the answer to part (d) be in the affirmative, why a public institute like the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute discriminates against Indians and refuses them admission?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government are not in possession of complete information. Inquiries have been made from the Government of Bombay and a reply will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

NON-ADMISSION OF INDIANS TO THE PRINCE OF WALES SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE, BOMBAY.

1059. Mr. B. Das: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the reply given in the Bombay Legislative Council on the 14th March, 1928, to the question put by Mr. Lalji Naranji (page 1385, of Vol. 22 of the Bombay Legislative Council Debates) that "the Institute (Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute) though undenominational in character does not cater specially for the needs of Indian seamen" and also to the following remarks made by the Bishop of Bombay at the Extraordinary General Meeting of the Members of the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute held in November, 1928:

"The Bombay Sailors' Home was an undenominational society and our Society is a denominational society how could these be amalgamated"?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1056.

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether it has still been held that the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute is an undenominational Institute?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Government have seen the reply to Mr. Lalji Naranji's question in the Bombay Legislative Council referred to but have no information regarding the alleged remarks by the Bishop of Bombay relative to the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute.

(b) Full information regarding this Institute has been called for and a reply will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

SUNDAY PENALTY FEES COLLECTED AND METHOD OF THEIR DISTRIBUTION.

1060. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the amount collected by way of Sunday Penalty Fees at the different ports in India during the last five years;
- (b) the amount contributed by them out of this Sunday Penalty Fees for the following charitable purposes during the last five years?
 - (1) for the benefit of the superior grade of Customs Officers.
 - (2) for the benefit of the subordinate grade of Customs Officers.
 - (3) for the benefit of European seamen.
 - (4) for the benefit of Indian seamen.
 - (5) contributions made towards the building fund of the Institutes which do not admit Indian seamen.
 - (6) contributions made towards Institutes which admit both European and Indian seamen, and
 - (7) contributions made towards building funds of Institutes started specifically for Indian seamen.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The receipts from Sunday fees for the last five years (i.e., actuals for 1927-28 to 1930-31 and revised estimates for 1931-32) amounted to a total of Rs. 20,70,146.

(b) (1) Nil.

(2) The contributions for the benefit of subordinate grades—Preventive officers, clerks and others—amounted to a total of Rs. 2,04,342.

(3) Rs. 2,12,119 apart from grants covered by (5) or (6).

(4) Nil, apart from grants covered by (7).

(5) or (6). Rs. 1,60,200. This sum represents the grant made to the Mayo Marine Institute, Rangoon, which admits Indian officers but not Indian seamen.

(7) Rs. 1,13,000.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it not a fact that the receipts from the Sunday fees have been given mostly to welfare institutions of non-Indian seamen rather than to those of Indian seamen?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I feel sure that my Honourable friend from his knowledge as member of the Standing Finance Committee has very full information on that subject. He will be able to calculate from the replies which I have given what is the position for the years specified in the question which I have just answered. It will also be within his recollection that, according to the statement prepared for the Standing Finance Committee, the distribution in the last year has been altered considerably in the direction of giving grants to institutions aimed at the benefit of Indian seamen.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire why no contribution had been made for the benefit of Indian seamen? Was it due to the fact that there were no Indian Seamen's Trade Unions asking for it?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I think it has been mainly due to the fact that, until last year, there was no specific institute in existence which aimed at giving these benefits to Indian seamen to which contribution could be made.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire if Mr. Kabeeruddin Ahniad, who was the representative of seamen on the Indian Labour Commission, raised this particular issue before the Labour Commission?

(No answer was given.)

PRINCIPLES FOR GRANTS OUT OF THE SUNDAY PENALTY FEES FUND.

1061. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the principles under which grants are made out of the Sunday Penalty Fees Fund to various charitable Institutions in the country; and
- (b) whether they propose to make any changes in the present procedure under which such grants are allocated and, if so, will Government be pleased to state the new changes which they propose to introduce in this connection?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The subject is too complicated to enable me to give a satisfactory answer within the limits suitable for a reply. The Honourable Member will find the situation fully explained in the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee to which I give the following references:

Paragraph 7 of the proceedings dated 16th January, 1930.

Paragraph 7 of the proceedings dated 16th June, 1930.

Paragraph 25 of the proceedings dated 19th June, 1930.

Paragraph 26 of the proceedings dated 23rd January, 1932.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO SAILORS' HOMES IN BOMBAY AND DISCRIMINATION AGAINST INDIANS.

1062. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Government of Bombay paid the sum of Rs. 4,44,375 to the authorities of the Bombay Sailors' Home, for the acquisition of their buildings somewhere in the year 1928 or 1929?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether the entire portion of Rs. 4,44,375 went to the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute under the new amalgamation scheme of that Institute with the Bombay Sailors' Home?

(c) Is it a fact that the original cost of the building of the Royal Alfred Sailors' Home, Bombay, was Rs. 3,66,000, of which a sum of Rs. 2,00,000 was contributed by His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda and Rs. 1,66,000 by the Government of Bombay?

(d) Is it a fact that the object of the Bombay Sailors' Home Society was primarily to provide a comfortable home for seamen frequenting or visiting the port of Bombay without any discrimination between European and Indian seamen?

(e) If the answer to parts (b), (c) and (d) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether the object for which the Royal Alfred Home was started is achieved by handing over the entire sum of Rs. 4,44,375 to the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute which discriminates against Indian seamen and Indian officers by refusing them admission into their Institute?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes.

(b) The whole of the amount went to the Bombay Seamen's Society (now known as the Royal Bombay Seamen's Society), which was formed by the amalgamation of the Bombay Sailors' Home Society with the Prince of Wales Seamen's Institute and Bombay Harbour Mission.

(c) Yes, except that the Bombay Government's contribution amounted to Rs. 1,40,000 only. The balance of Rs. 26,000 was presumably derived from other sources.

(d) The Home was open to seamen of all classes, but it does not appear to have been used to an appreciable extent at any time by Indian seamen.

(e) The Royal Bombay Seamen's Society are under no legal obligation to pay any portion of the sale proceeds of the Royal Alfred Home to any other institute. The Society, however, gave a voluntary donation of Rs. 1 lakh towards the construction of a Home which has recently been opened at Bombay for the use of Indian seamen.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

REDUCTION OF TRAVELLING AND OTHER ALLOWANCES OF MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. J. Ramsay Scott: (a) Have Government under consideration any proposals for reduction in the present scales of travelling and other allowances of Members of the Legislature?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether the House Committee will be given an opportunity to consider the proposals before a decision is arrived at?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes. The present allowance admissible to Honourable Members for journeys by rail is $1 \frac{3}{5}$ ths of a First Class fare. This allowance was fixed on a parity with that admissible for Government servants of the first grade. In the case of Government servants the allowance has been reduced to $1 \frac{1}{2}$ fares with effect from the 1st October, 1931, and Government feel it right that similar reduction should now be made in the case of Honourable Members also. Government have also considered the recommendation of the General Purposes Committee on page 60 of their Second Report to the effect that the rule permitting the drawing by Honourable Members of the cost of haulage of their motor cars irrespective of the amount, needs revision, and that a limit of Rs. 500 in all for both journeys, outward and return, should be imposed. In the opinion of Government such a provision would not work equitably in that it would penalise Members coming from long distances. They consider that the present rule should be retained, but that economy during the present financial crisis could be secured by the abolition of the allowance for petrol or forage of Rs. 75 per month at present admissible to Members who reside outside Delhi and elect for free haulage of their conveyances.

(b) Government had considered laying proposals on this basis before the House Committee, but on further examination they were convinced that consultation in a matter of this kind lay outside the scope of that Committee's functions. The more appropriate procedure would be to place the proposals before the House by means of a Resolution. Unfortunately it does not appear likely that time will be available to move such a Resolution this session. Government propose, therefore, to move a Resolution at the earliest possible occasion in the next summer session and to suggest that the reduction of railway allowance should, if accepted, take effect in respect of the journey to Simla.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: In view of the Honourable Member's reply, in which he attempted to draw a parallel between Government servants and Members of this House, will he please inform the House whether or not it is a fact that Government servants, in addition to their railway travelling allowances, are in receipt of a handsome salary which Members of the Assembly are not?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I hardly think my Honourable friend's question requires an answer. I would remind him that officials of the Government are also under considerable obligations for working every day of the year which do not apply to Honourable Members of this House.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member inform the House whether those additional remarks do not apply with greater force to Members of this House who also have to work every day of the year?

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

APPOINTMENT OF TELEGRAPH PEONS AS POSTMEN.

266. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that in order to give the peons in the Telegraph Branch some opportunity to earn pension and leave allowances at superior rates, orders were issued to permit their entry into postmen's grade by competitive examination? If so, from what date were the orders given effect to?

(b) Is it a fact that many telegraph peons went through this competitive examination and were appointed as postmen?

(c) Is it a fact that they had to furnish security bonds for these new appointments as are required from permanent postmen?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state the number of telegraph peons so appointed as postmen?

(e) Is it a fact that some of the telegraph peons so recruited to the postmen's grade have since been reverted?

(f) If the reply to part (d) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the number and names of the men so reverted and the reasons in each case for the action taken?

(g) Do Government propose to re-examine these cases and see that these men get back their appointments as postmen, if they are found to have been qualified for their appointments under the rules then in force? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) No.

(b) to (g). Do not arise.

SYSTEM OF SUPPLYING UNIFORMS TO TELEGRAPH AND POSTAL PEONS.

267. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the article published at page 315 of the Telegraph Review of September, 1931, under the caption of "Inferior staff to go without uniform"?

(b) Have Government made any enquiry in the matter? If so, to what effect?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state what is the present system of supplying uniforms to (i) the inferior staff in the Telegraphs and (ii) peons in the Postal Department?

(d) Will Government be pleased to quote the authority under which the peons were ordered to produce their old tattered dresses for inspection of the Chief Superintendent, Central Telegraph Office, Calcutta, as complained in the article?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state whether any order was issued beforehand to the peons requiring them to preserve torn and tattered uniforms for production for inspection when so ordered? If so, when and by whom?

(f) Is it a fact that some of the peons made written statements to the effect that their old uniforms were totally torn and thrown out or the like and hence could not be produced for inspection?

(g) Is it a fact that in spite of these statements fines for non-production of uniforms were still imposed on these peons by the Chief Superintendent, Calcutta?

(h) Will Government be pleased to state the number of such peons who were thus fined?

(i) Do Government propose to refund these fines to the parties concerned? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) No enquiry was made on the matter.

(c) The scheme for the supply of uniforms and warm clothing to the Posts and Telegraphs outdoor staff and inferior servants is described in the following statement:

Class I Offices—(Head Offices, Central Telegraph Offices, offices situated in stations where there are Head Offices and other important offices).

"A" Stations—Where the climate is usually warm to hot and there is no appreciable cold in the winter months.

Two complete sets of drill uniforms every year, putties at the discretion of Heads of Circles. Where putties are to be supplied only one pair between two sets of uniforms every year.

"B" Stations—Where the climate is cold for certain months of the year but not very cold.

Two complete sets of drill uniforms every year, one woollen jersey once in two years, putties as of "A" stations.

"C" Stations—Where the winter is severe and prolonged. The general criteria for classifying offices into class "C" should be a latitude of 28° North and/or an altitude of 4000 ft. If these criteria do not meet the special requirements of any place the Head of a Circle may suggest the inclusion of any particular station in class "C" and obtain the orders of the Director-General on the subject.

One complete set of serge uniform every alternate year, one complete set of drill uniform every year, one pair of putties every year.

Class II Offices—(Offices not included in Class I. Branch Offices excluded).

"A" Stations—Where the climate is usually warm to hot and there is no appreciable cold in winter months.

One complete set of drill uniform a year, putties as at "A" stations in class I Offices.

"B" Stations—Where the climate is cold for certain months of the year but not very cold.

One complete set of drill uniform every year, one woollen jersey once in three years and putties as at "A" stations in class I Offices.

"C" Stations—Where the winter is severe and prolonged. The general criteria for classifying offices into class "C" should be a latitude of 28° North and/or an altitude of 4000 ft. If these criteria do not meet the special requirements of any place the Head of a Circle may suggest the inclusion of any particular station in class "C" and obtain the orders of the Director-General on the subject.

One complete set of serge uniform and one complete set of drill uniform once in two years, one pair of putties between the two sets of uniforms.

2. (a) Uniforms should not be supplied to officials of branch offices.

(b) Village postmen at "C" class stations only should be supplied with uniforms admissible to postmen attached to such stations.

(c) Packers and other inferior servants, except in certain selected offices to be approved by the Director-General should be supplied only with blouse (alternatively jersey where justified) and pugree.

(d) Lungvi and Gaungbaung can be substituted for shorts (trousers) and Pugree in Burma.

(d) Orders were issued in May 1931 requiring all Heads of offices, Postal Traffic and Engineering, to inspect periodically the uniforms supplied to their subordinates as laid down in rule 736 of the Posts and Telegraphs Manual, Volume II.

(e) No special order was issued to the peons requiring them to preserve torn and tattered uniforms for production for inspection when so ordered, as the rule referred to above prescribes that it is the duty of Inspecting Officers to see that uniforms and warm clothing, where supplied, are kept clean and in good condition and that at kit inspections each man will be required to produce all the articles of clothing supplied to him.

 (g) } Government have no information.
 (h) }

(i) Does not arise in view of the reply to parts (f), (g) and (h). Copy of the question and of the reply to parts (c) to (i) will however be sent to the Postmaster-General for any further attention desirable.

SYSTEM OF SUPPLYING UNIFORMS TO TELEGRAPH AND POSTAL PEONS.

268. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that complaints were made by Posts and Telegraph peons expressing their inability to wear tattered dresses while discharging their duties in the office?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the steps they have taken or propose to take to remove such complaints?

(c) Is it a fact that peons have been taken to task and even fined in Calcutta and other places for not putting on their uniforms, even when the peons stated that they were very badly torn and hence could not possibly be worn?

(d) Do Government propose to refund the fines thus imposed? If not, why not?

(e) Do Government propose to allow sufficient uniforms to the peons or, in the alternative, allow them to wear their own dresses when their uniforms are torn and new ones are not supplied? If not, why not?

(f) Is it a fact that Government have issued revised rules for supply of uniforms to the peons in the Posts and Telegraphs Department? If so what are they?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Government have no information.

(b) Government have made some provision for the supply of uniforms to the outdoor staff and inferior servants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department on a limited scale.

(c) Government have no information.

(d) Does not arise.

(e) A reference is invited to the reply to part (b) of the question. Such outdoor and inferior staff of the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department as are not provided with uniforms at Government expense will naturally wear their own clothing.

(f) Yes. The revised rules have been quoted in reply to part (c) of the Honourable Member's question No. 267.

GRANT OF CONVEYANCE ALLOWANCE TO INSPECTORS OF TELEGRAPH PEONS.

269. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many Inspectors of Peons and Inspectors of Post Offices are employed in Telegraph and Postal Branches respectively?

(b) Is it a fact that the Inspectors of both these groups are required to perform indoor as well as outdoor work?

(c) Is it a fact that the Inspectors of Post Offices in towns are in receipt of Conveyance Allowances?

(d) If the reply to part (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if they propose to grant similar allowance to Inspectors of Peons in Telegraph Branch? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) There are 9 Inspectors of peons attached to the larger departmental telegraph offices. The number of Inspectors of Post Offices in charge of Postal Sub-Divisions and of Town Inspectors of Post Offices attached to First Class Head Post Offices is 418.

(b) and (c). Yes.

(d) The duties of Postal Town Inspectors differ widely from those performed by Inspectors of Peons in telegraph offices, and Government do not admit the necessity of the grant to the latter of a conveyance allowance similar to that drawn by the former. In certain offices, Inspectors of Peons are supplied with bicycles by the Department for the discharge of the duties required of them.

REVISED SCHEMES FOR PENSION ON THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

270. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that Government issued a circular to all the recognised organisations of the staff in the Posts and Telegraphs Department to obtain their opinion on certain proposed revised schemes for pension?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if replies from all such organisations have been received? If so, when?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if a final decision on the matter has been arrived at? If so, to what effect? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) If the Honourable Member is referring to a scheme for substituting a contributory fund or other benefits of a corresponding kind for pensionary benefits, the answer is in the affirmative.

(b) Replies were received by July 1930 from some 95 Service Associations, including various Posts and Telegraphs organisations.

(c) I would refer the Honourable Member to the speech made by the Finance Secretary in the debate held in the Council of State on the 3rd March 1932, and reproduced on pages 142, 143 and 144 of the Official Report.

PENSION SCHEME FOR SUBORDINATES ON THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

271. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that a large number of the employees in the Posts and Telegraphs Department in Subordinate Services are not in receipt of any pension?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if they contemplate to revise the whole pension scheme which will convert the present non-pensionable posts into pensionable ones? If not, why not?

(c) If reply to part (b) be in the affirmative with regard to some of the appointments, will Government be pleased to state (i) which of the groups are likely to be included in the same and also (ii) when the same is likely to take effect?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) While it is a fact that the service of certain classes of employees, such as cable supervisors, mechanics and artificers, telephone operators appointed on or after the 1st March, 1919, etc., is non-pensionable, the total number of employees serving under these conditions is not large.

(b) and (c). The question of admitting the non-pensionable personnel to the benefits of a Contributory Provident Fund or of making them eligible for pension, is under consideration. Government are not in a position to state when a final decision will be reached.

CUT IN PAY OF LOW PAID MEN IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

272. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the personnel and the lowest pay in the different departments of Government which have been spared from any cut due to retrenchment?

(b) Is it a fact that only in the Posts and Telegraphs and in Railways men drawing Rs. 40 and less have not even been spared from a cut in pay?

(c) Is it a fact that the Telegraph Department, unlike most other departments, is considered as both a public utility and safety service and at the same time a revenue-earning department?

(d) If the replies to the above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why men getting a pay of less than Rs. 40 have also been retrenched in the Posts and Telegraphs Department?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) All Government servants under the control of the Government of India drawing Rs. 40 a month or less, except those employed in the Railway and the Posts and Telegraphs Departments, have been exempted from the emergency cut in pay.

(b) Yes.

(c) The Posts and Telegraphs Department is a public utility department which, in accordance with the generally accepted policy of Government, is run on commercial lines.

(d) Reference is invited to the reply given by the Honourable Sir George Rainy on the 23rd March, 1932, to starred question No. 864, asked by Rai Bahadur Sukhraj Rai. It was considered proper to treat the staff of the two great commercial departments alike.

CUT IN PAY OF LOW PAID MEN IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

273. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they propose to retrench the pay of men below Rs. 40 in other departments?

(b) If the reply be in the negative, do Government propose to mete out similar treatment to men similarly situated in the Posts and Telegraphs Department?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) and (b). No.

SYSTEM OF PAYMENT FOR TELEGRAPH MESSENGERS.

274. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that press and triple rate messages are sent out singly for delivery to ensure their prompt disposal?

(b) Is it a fact that task work messengers used to get earnings for a complete bhaga (viz., 5 messages for a cycle peon and 3 messages for a foot peon) for delivering these messages singly without waiting for other messages? If so, how long has this system been in force?

(c) Is it a fact that this system has been abolished with effect from the 1st November, 1931, and the delivery messengers are now granted the earnings for one message only per trip for delivery of these press and triple rate messages?

(d) Is it a fact that triple rate messages are paid for at triple rates by the senders in order to ensure their expeditious disposal?

(e) Is it a fact that the Press get concession rates (very much cheaper than the ordinary rates) for sending their messages?

(f) Is it a fact that delivery messengers are still made to deliver these press and triple rate messages singly without permission to await any other telegram though they are paid for only one message per trip?

(g) If so, do Government propose to reconsider the question and revert to the old system? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) As regards triple rate messages, yes: as regards Press messages, not as a general rule.

(b) The practice described by the Honourable Member existed in the Calcutta Telegraph Office only. Government do not know how long it was in force.

(c) Orders were issued in 1931 abolishing the system in the Calcutta Telegraph Office and bringing the procedure there into line with that followed in other offices.

(d) and (e). Yes.

(f) Reference is invited to the answer to parts (a) and (c).

(g) Government do not see any necessity to alter the rules now in force.

SYSTEM OF PAYMENT FOR TELEGRAPH MESSENGERS.

275. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that under Bhaga System which was in force in the Central Telegraph Office, Calcutta, up to the beginning of 1931, it was required to give 5 messages in one lot for a cycle messenger and 3 messages for a foot messenger for every delivery, and that if the full number was not available after waiting for a reasonable time they would be sent out with a lesser number of messages but their earnings would remain the same?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state how long this system has been in vogue in the Telegraph Department?

(c) Is it a fact that various modifications were made to this system from time to time to avoid anomalies or to redress grievances of the delivery staff?

(d) Is it a fact that this system was stopped from the 1st March, 1931, without any notice to the staff? If so, what are the reasons?

(e) If the reply to the latter portion of part (d) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state, (i) when it was notified to the staff and also (ii) what was the reason, if any, that was given for the same?

(f) If the reply to part (d) above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why a system that has been in existence for such a long period has all on a sudden been abolished?

(g) Will Government please quote the rule or order under which this system was first introduced?

(h) If there be no rule or order, will Government be pleased to state how it came to be introduced?

(i) Is it a fact that the salary bills of the staff are checked and audited by the audit offices and that it is one of the fundamental duties of the audit office to hold under objection any item of expenditure which is not sanctioned by proper authority?

(j) If the reply to part (i) above be in the affirmative, will Government please state if any objection was ever raised by the Audit Offices against this system? If so, when and how was it disposed of?

(k) Will Government refer to parts (h), (i) and (j) above and state whether they propose to consider the advisability of amending the rules to conform to the age-long procedure? If not, why not?

(l) Is it a fact that the existing task work messengers of the Central Telegraph Office, Calcutta, were appointed as such when the previous system was in force? If so, do Government propose to permit them to continue under that condition till they retire? If not, why not?

(m) Will Government be pleased to state (i) who is responsible for the irregularity, if any; (ii) the amount spent so far in excess owing to this so-called irregular system, and (iii) how it is proposed to make good this loss to Government?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) Government have been unable to ascertain the date from which the practice was introduced.

(c) Yes.

(d) Yes. The system, for the original introduction of which no authoritative orders are traceable, was peculiar to Calcutta, and on review was considered not to be justified by the prevailing conditions.

(e) Does not arise.

(f) The reasons are indicated in the answer to part (d).

(g) Reference is invited to the answer to part (b).

(h) Government have no information.

(i) Yes.

(j) No.

(k) No. Reference is invited to the answer to part (d).

(l) Probably, but Government are not prepared to allow task work messengers of Calcutta to continue to enjoy earnings which have never been conceded to the task work messengers of other telegraph offices and for which they can find no special justification in Calcutta.

(m) (i) and (ii). Government have no information. (iii) It is not practicable to recover any loss that may have been incurred.

RECRUITMENT TO THE SUBORDINATE ENGINEERING BRANCH OF THE TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

276. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of men recruited for the Subordinate Engineering Branch of the Telegraph Department during the last year—(i) from the Departmental men and (ii) from outside?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the number of Departmental men (i) who applied for recruitment in the Engineering Branch, and (ii) who were admitted to the examination?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the number of Departmental telegraphists who have not been allowed to appear in the examination on account of:

(i) exceeding the age-limit,

(ii) unsatisfactory record of service, and

(iii) any other reasons?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state the number of Departmental candidates who were exempted from the bars referred to in part (c) in consideration of their nationality or community?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state the number of Departmental candidates who were not so exempted though they possessed previous experience in the Engineering Branch including the Telephone Branch for a considerable period?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state if any of the men referred to in part (e) were recommended by the heads of the Circle including the Engineering Officers?

(g) Is it a fact that the Department is heavily overstaffed with Departmental telegraphists and that outside recruitment meant additional expense?

(i) If the reply to part (g) be in the affirmative, will not the appointment of the Departmental candidates referred to in parts (e) and (f) in vacancies in the Engineering Branch mean reduction of surplus staff and employment of qualified hands at far less cost?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The Honourable Member apparently refers to the recruitment of Engineering Supervisors. If so, the number of departmental recruits was thirteen and of others twelve.

(b) and (c). As the selection of candidates for the examination is made by Heads of Circles, Government have no information on the points raised in these two parts of the question.

(d) No candidate was exempted from the tests in consideration of his nationality or community.

(e) and (f). Do not arise in view of the reply to part (d).

(g) It is a fact that there is some surplus staff of telegraphists and that outside recruitment for the posts of Engineering Supervisors does mean some extra expenditure.

(i) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative, and to the latter part, in the negative, as Government do not consider that those departmental candidates who were not exempted from or failed to pass the examination are thoroughly qualified.

TRAINING OF APPRENTICES OF THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

277. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Have Government invited the opinions of Mr. T. K. Ghosh, and Lt.-Col. B. H. Brown, late Works Manager and Superintendent of the Rifle Factory at Ishapore, in the matter of reducing and abolishing the theoretical and laboratory training to apprentices in that Factory?

(b) If so, what were the opinions of those officers? If not, do Government propose to take their opinions on the subject? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) No.

(b) Because it was unnecessary to consult officers who no longer held these appointments.

TRAINING OF APPRENTICES OF THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

278. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government be pleased to state whether the present scheme of technical training in lecture rooms and laboratories for the Rifle Factory Apprentices at Ishapore is "subject to modifications"? If so, does "subject to modifications" mean abolition of the scheme?

Mr. G. M. Young: The scheme itself is subject to modifications: and in addition, the whole subject of apprentice training in Ordnance Factories is under review, with reference to its suitability to the policy of gradual Indianisation of the factories.

TRAINING OF APPRENTICES OF THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

279. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Are Government aware of the fact that the existing apprentices in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore were all entertained on the clear understanding that they would be trained both in theory and practice in "Mechanical Engineering"?

(b) What justification have Government to train the existing apprentices in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore, now as craftsmen which they and their guardians do not approve of?

(c) Do Government propose to keep the existing scheme in force at least for the existing apprentices in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The syllabus issued contained a good deal of theoretical, in addition to practical training: but it was announced as subject to modification.

(b) The modifications were made in the interests of the Factory.

(c) The scheme will remain in force for existing apprentices, but as explained in answer to Starred Question No. 114, on the 3rd February, 1932, the amount of theoretical training has been greatly reduced, as such training is not essential.

DISEASES CAUSED BY MILITARY SERVICE.

280. Sardar Sant Singh: With reference to the answer to unstarred question No. 142 on the 9th March, 1932, are Government prepared to override the decisions of those Medical Boards, which have wrongly come to the conclusion that asthma or trachoma are not attributable to military service?

Mr. G. M. Young: Government have no reason to suppose that the finding of the Medical Board in any particular case was wrong.

ARREARS OF PENSION FOR DISABILITY SUBSEQUENTLY DECLARED AS ATTRIBUTABLE TO MILITARY SERVICE.

281. Sardar Sant Singh: With reference to the answer given to unstarred question No. 143, will Government please state as to what arrears do the rules allow, in cases in which a later Medical Board has reversed the decision of the first Medical Board, which held the attributability of the disability as not attributable to service?

Mr. G. M. Young: The rules do not specifically provide for the convening of a second Medical Board. Government are at liberty either to dispose of an appeal themselves, with the aid of their medical advisers, or to convene a second Medical Board if they feel justified in doing so on the grounds stated in the appeal. In either event they would be competent to grant a disability pension with such arrears as they might determine according to the merits of the case.

RATES OF MILITARY PENSIONS.

282. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that rates of all sorts of military pensions, including the pensions granted under the special powers of the Government of India, were increased on the termination of the Great War, and the enhanced rates made applicable to all-India ranks who served during the War?

(b) Is it also a fact that the increased rates were, for all practical purposes, disallowed to all such individuals as were pensioned under the special powers of the Government of India as contemplated in para. 587 of the Pay and Allowance Regulations, Part II?

(c) Are Government prepared to consider such cases as were pensioned after 4th August, 1914, and prior to the date with effect from which the new scale of pensions was inserted in Pensionary Regulations?

Mr. G. M. Young: It will take some time to investigate the points raised in the Honourable Member's question. A reply will be laid on the table as soon as practicable.

PENSIONS OF CERTAIN MILITARY MEN INCREASED BY RE-EMPLOYMENT DURING THE GREAT WAR.

283. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) With reference to the answer given on 9th March, 1932, to unstarred question No. 146, are Government prepared to send for the cases of the following individuals, whose pensions were increased by virtue of their re-employment during the Great War, under Army Instruction (India) Nos. 171 of 1921, and 1064 of 1923?

- (i) C. M. A. Mhow Pension Circular No. 10 of 16th March, 1928, re Subedar Bhura Singh.
- (ii) C. M. A. Mhow Pension Circular No. 24, dated 16th October, 1928, re Subedar Sher Singh.
- (iii) C. M. A. Mhow Pension Circular No. 30 of 1929 re Subedar Major Budha Singh.
- (iv) C. M. P. A. Mhow Pension Circular No. 83 of 1931 re Subedar Jagannath.
- (v) C. M. P. A. Mhow Pension Circular No. 80 of 1931 re Subedar Genda Singh.
- (vi) C. M. P. A. N. and E. Commands, Lahore, Pension Circular No. 42, dated the 16th January, 1929, re Jemadar Dip Chand.

(b) If so, will Government kindly state why the same rule was not applied to the cases of the following individuals:

- (i) Subedar Mam Raj (vide Government of India, Army Department, letter No. B.-16187/1-A. G.-14, dated the 4th September, 1931).
- (ii) No. 20, Havildar Sant Singh of 16th Bengal Lancers re-employed in Military Hospital Ambala (O. C. 6 Company I. H. Corps Poona, letter No. B./23/Casc/55, dated the 5th October, 1931)?

(c) Under what rules of limitation the aforesaid claims were treated to be within time while others declared time-barred?

Mr. G. M. Young: Inquiries are being made and replies will be laid on the table in due course.

PRACTICE IN REGARD TO GRANT OF DISABILITY AND FAMILY PENSIONS.

284. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Will Government please state as to what practice is in vogue with regard to the grants of disability and family pension claims in cases where (i) a medical board is silent on the point of attributability and (ii) where they express their inability to give a verdict on the point of attributability because of the loss or destruction of a man's medical history sheet kept by military hospitals in their custody?

(b) Have disability and family pensions been allowed in such cases from the date of casualty?

Mr. G. M. Young: Inquiries are being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

STATUTORY RIGHTS TO DISABILITY AND FAMILY PENSIONS.

285. Sardar Sant Singh: Are Government aware that statutory rights for the entitlement of a disability and family pension have been acknowledged under the War Pensions Act of 1919 and 1920? Do not they intend to recognise such rights in the case of Indian personnel? Is it a fact that the cause of action arose beyond overseas, the compensation of which is due from, and chargeable to the Home Government?

Mr. G. M. Young: The right to Great War disability and family pensions in the United Kingdom, provided that the conditions laid down are fulfilled, is conferred by statute in the United Kingdom. The same right is conferred by rule in India. Government do not consider it necessary or practicable to introduce legislation of the kind at this late date.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

286. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) With reference to the answer given to unstarred question No. 146, part (a), dated 9th March, 1932, will Government please state if para. 1031 of Army Regulations (India), Volume I (1915 edition) does not admit all former combatant service for being counted towards pension or gratuity?

(b) Is it a fact that the following individuals were discharged with promises of pension duly entered on their discharge certificates, Last Pay Certificates, etc.?

(i) Letter No. 2-119/1/9, dated 22nd June, 1931 of the Officer Incharge 10th Bn., 4/9th Regiment, re Havildar Baz Khan, No. 1131.

(ii) Letter No. 860/20/A.G., dated 16th November 1928 of the O./C. 'A' Coy., 1/4th Bombay Grens., re Ex-Sepoy Palto Khan, No. 3493.

(iii) Letter No. 2/109/5/384, dated 1st May, 1929 of the Officer Incharge, Records, 2/109th Infantry, re L/Nk Bodan Khan, No. 1684.

(iv) Letter No. B.-14073/3/A.G.-14, of the Army Headquarters, India, Adjutant General's Branch, dated 20th June, 1931, re Ex-Sepoy Mamu, No. 376.

(c) Referring to the answer given on 9th March, 1932, to the question quoted above, is it a fact that para. 1077 of Army Regulations (India), 1915 edition, lays down that an adversely affected person by new rules can claim to receive pension when the deceased joined the service; that note 4 appended to para. 591 of the Pay and Allowance Regulations, Part II, lays down that consent to the changed rules is necessary, and that there is a ruling of the Military Accountant General given in his letter No. 2610-At./B., dated 20th January, 1932? Are Government prepared to review the cases of these claimants?

PENSIONS WITHHELD ON ACCOUNT OF CONVICTIONS IN POLITICAL CASES.

287. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) With reference to the answer given on 9th March, 1932, to unstarred question No. 148, will Government kindly state if it is not a fact that para. 184 of the Pension Regulation does not debar the District or Independent Brigade Commander from withholding or reducing the pension or gratuity of an Indian military pensioner even if he be convicted of any crime of a political nature?

(b) Is it not a fact that such power is given only in cases of conviction of a serious crime, or of being found guilty of grave misconduct other than of a political nature?

(c) If so, are Government prepared to restore in full the arrears of pensions of those persons whose pensions have been withheld on account of convictions in political cases or on mere police reports?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (b). Under paragraph 184 of the Pension Regulations a District Commander, on the recommendation of the local civil authorities, is competent to order the forfeiture of pensions in cases relating to misconduct of a political nature

(c) Does not arise.

FACILITIES FOR CLAIMING MILITARY PENSIONS.

288. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) With reference to the answer to unstarred question No. 150 (b) given on 9th March, 1932, will Government please lay on the table a comparative statement showing adequate facilities for Indian military pensioners as against the facilities given to British ex-soldiers and their families?

(b) Is it not a fact that:

(i) a British pensioner can engage the services of any voluntary worker or friend whereas in India it is resented;

(ii) a British pensioner in Appeal Tribunals can engage a solicitor or barrister, a specialist and a friend while in India the C. M. P. A., Mhow, decided that no reply can be sent to the address of a pleader;

(iii) despite the high percentage of literates in England hundreds of committees, sub-committees and sub-sub-committees with a hoard of voluntary workers have been appointed and notices affixed on every post office and public building showing the location of these committees and addresses of voluntary workers, whereas in India the location and the new designation of disbanded units is not known even by Deputy Commissioner's offices, which usually ask the claimants about the location of their unit?

(c) If so, what were the facilities afforded to Indian ex-soldiers?

Mr. G. M. Young: Government are not prepared to argue the matter with the Honourable Member. They are satisfied that all genuine claims to pension are fully investigated, and they are always ready to examine any individual case themselves, if brought to their notice.

MILITARY DISABILITY AND FAMILY PENSION CLAIMS.

289. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) With reference to the reply given on 9th March, 1932, to unstarred question No. 152 (a) and (b), are Government prepared to see the cases detailed below?

- (i) Letter No. I. H. C./44/34, dated 31st October, 1931 of the Headquarters No. 2 (E. C.) Coy. I. H. C., Lucknow, re Mustt. Ghogri widow of late Sweeper Jail Lal No. 8268.
- (ii) Letter No. 18330/27/R.-8, dated 15th December, 1931 of the Officer Incharge Records, Indian Signal Corps, Jubbulpore, re Mustt. Nimbo, mother of late Driver Jai Ram No. 5083.
- (iii) Letter No. 2-102/1/28, dated 17th March, 1931, of the Officer Incharge Records, 2/102nd Grenadiers, Bareilly, re Mustt. Lado widow of No. 1747 Sepoy Hari Singh.
- (iv) Letter No. G.-4/4116, dated 29th January, 1932, of the C. M. A. and Pension, Lahore, re Mustt. Anaran, widow of late No. 3012 Sepoy Hazari Singh.
- (v) Letter No. F./P. A. D./55/1/9/3948, dated 27th October, 1930 of the C. M. A. S. C. Poona, re Mustt. Raham Daulat, mother of Fitter Jangsher Khan No. 6782.
- (vi) Letter No. 293/28, dated ^{24th August}_{25th August} 1928, of the O. C. 2/9th Jat Regiment to District Soldiers Board, Delhi, re No. 5117 Sepoy Jhawar.
- (vii) Letter No. 4/9/4/1/410, dated 3rd December 1931, of the Officer Incharge Records, 4/9th Jat Regiment, re No. 2105. ex-Sepoy Fathayab Khan.
- (viii) Letter No. 794/A./20, dated 7th May, 1931, of the Adjutant 5/11th Sikh Regiment, re No. 900 Reservist Nagender Singh.
- (ix) Letter No. 14763/2/A.-2. dated 28th November, 1931, of the Headquarters, Northern Command, Rawalpindi, re ex-Sepoy Narain Singh.
- (x) Letter No. A./13/1/679, dated 27th March, 1931, of the Adjutant 13th D. C. O. Lancers, re No. 724 Sowar Chanen Singh.

(b) Have not the affidavits of eye witnesses submitted to substantiate the facts of death and disabilities been disregarded by the authorities concerned?

(c) Have not the Ministry of Pensions issued instructions in the cases of deaths and disabilities unrecorded to allow the advantage of doubt to be beneficiaries?

Mr. G. M. Young: Inquiries are being made and replies will be laid on the table in due course.

MILITARY DISABILITY AND FAMILY PENSION CLAIMS.

290. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the practice prevalent in their department whereby proved and acceptable disability claims have been admitted by the Government of India with effect from the date of their sanction and on rates far below the minimum as against the date of casualty and the monthly minimum rate of Rs. 8 per mensem?

(b) Are Government aware that the above practice extends to family pensions of the Indian ranks?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (b). The answer is in the negative. All claims that are eligible and proved are disposed of in accordance with the rules.

PROMOTION OF TELEGRAPHISTS.

291. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Will Government be pleased to refer to unstarred question No. 403 (regarding promotion of Telegraphists) put in the Assembly on the 25th March, 1931, and state what decision has been arrived at in the matter?

(b) If so, will Government please state whether definite rulings have since been issued on the points raised therein; if not, when a decision may be expected?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) and (b). A decision on the subject has been postponed pending the consideration of certain connected questions relating to retrenchment.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS RETRENCHMENT SUB-COMMITTEE.

292. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the recommendations of the Posts and Telegraphs Retrenchment Sub-Committee as laid down in paras. 202 (Chapter X) and 164, sub-para. (b), (Chapter VIII) of their Interim Report have been accepted by Government?

(b) If so, to what extent? If not, what are the reasons?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) The suggestions in the paragraphs in question are being considered.

(b) Does not arise.

DETERMINATION OF SENIORITY OF BAUDOT SUPERVISORS IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

293. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Is it a fact that the Indian Telegraph Association requested the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, to issue clear and definite instructions for fixing seniority amongst the Baudot Supervisors qualified in different standards to fill up appointments carrying allowances?

(b) If so, will Government please state whether the instructions asked for have since been given? If not, when are the instructions likely to be issued?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative. The last part does not arise.

CONFIRMATION OF PROBATIONERS IN THE CHIEF ACCOUNTS OFFICE, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

294. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Is it a fact that there is a rule that the Administration Section of a Chief Accounts Officer's Office, should be manned by the most efficient staff?

(b) If so what steps are being taken to give effect to the views of Mr. Sankara Iyer, late Chief Accounts Officer, East Indian Railway, expressed on the eve of his transfer on the subject of the confirmation of probationers?

(c) Do Government propose to issue orders to those concerned, so that the views of Mr. Sankara Iyer are not overlooked?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The internal arrangements of the office are for the Chief Accounts Officer to decide, subject to the general control of the Controller of Railway Accounts, and Government do not propose to interfere in them.

CONFIRMATION OF PROBATIONERS IN THE CHIEF ACCOUNTS OFFICE, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

295. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Are Government aware that the prolonged period spent on probation by those men of the East Indian Railway Accounts Department, who were recruited on the results of the competitive examination, prescribed in Appendix B to the Financial Commissioner of Railways' Memorandum No. 5565-F., dated the 31st July, 1929, is in contravention of their "Letters of Appointment", and that it has debarred them from drawing their annual increments? If so, do Government propose to permit them to draw their annual grade increase?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether Government intend to issue necessary instructions to the Chief Accounts Officer, East Indian Railway for confirming these probationers against existing permanent vacancies? Will any additional expenditure be involved thereby in view of the Controller of Railway Accounts letter No. 336-C. R. A./E./30, dated the 1st November 1930?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for certain information on the subject and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

ABOLITION OF THE APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY ASSISTANT ENGINEER, TELEGRAPHS CONSTRUCTION.

296. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an insertion entitled Posts and Telegraphs Sub-Committee's Report in the Amrita Bazar Patrika, sometime in the last week of December, 1931?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state why one Deputy Assistant Engineer, Telegraphs Construction, is attached to the Patna Telegraph Engineering Branch? Is there any professional work for him to do?

(c) Have Government proposed to abolish the said post, in order to run that branch more economically?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Government have seen the article.

(b) The Deputy Assistant Engineer was attached to the Patna Division for the supervision of construction work.

(c) The question is under consideration.

ABOLITION OF THE APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY ASSISTANT ENGINEER, TELEGRAPHS CONSTRUCTION.

297. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Will Government be pleased to state why one Deputy Assistant Engineer is attached to the Patna Telephone Exchange? Is there any professional work for him to do? Did the special officer, Mr. P. N. Mittra, deputed by the department in connection with the reduction of staffs, approve a Deputy Assistant Engineer for Patna?

(b) Have Government proposed to abolish the said post to run the Patna Telephone branch more economically?

(c) Is it a fact that the connections there are less than five hundred?

(d) If the reply to part (b) is in the affirmative, do Government propose to appoint a Senior Telephone Supervisor for the Patna Telephone Exchange, instead of a junior, who will also be a Telephone adviser to the Divisional Engineer Telegraphs, Patna?

Mr. T. Ryan: Enquiries are being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF SUB-DIVISIONAL OFFICERS, TELEGRAPHS.

298. Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: Is it a fact that at present four Sub-Divisional Officers, Telegraphs, are attached in each Division, in the Telegraph Engineering Branch? If so, have Government considered the question of appointing three Sub-Divisional Officers with a few more clerks under them, in each division, for the sake of economy?

Mr. T. Ryan: The reply to the first part of the question is in the negative. The second part does not arise.

DEATH OF MR. K. V. RANGASWAMI IYENGAR.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): I think, Sir, before we proceed to the business of the day, it will be the wish of this House that something should be said of one who was formerly one of our Members and who passed away yesterday evening. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar had a very long connection with the Central Legislature. He was first a Member of the old Imperial Legislative Council, subsequently I understand of the Council of State, then for four years—during 1926-30—of the Legislative Assembly, and at the time of his death he was again a Member of the Council of State. A great many of the Honourable Members present to-day must remember very well his familiar figure on the benches opposite, and the very close attention he paid to the debates, notwithstanding the physical defect of his deafness, which must have made it very difficult. But he never allowed his disability to stand in the way of the performance of his duties as a Member of the Legislature. and I have often admired the firmness and perseverance with which he carried on under circumstances of difficulty. I knew him as a man of the most courteous and kindly nature and also of considerable ability, who could make a worthy contribution to the discussions in this House. We shall all miss him, Sir, and feel that we have lost a personal friend. I am sure it would be in accordance with the wish of every Honourable Member if you, Sir, were to communicate to his relatives an expression of our deep sympathy and sorrow.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I little knew when I went to see Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar last evening in the hospital that this morning what was left of him would be added to the sacred waters of the Jumna. Sir, he came here full of hope that he would continue his work for the country through the Legislature. He was a signatory, before the reforms came into existence, to the 19 Members' memorandum. He was then a colleague of Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee and Sir Bhupendra Nath Basu; and in those days when the reforms were yet to come into existence and when agitation had to be carried on in the country, he joined hands with Mrs. Besant, and travelled long distances preaching the gospel of Home Rule. He, however, did not join the non-co-operation movement which followed; but true to his duty as a legislator, he entered the Legislature, the Council of State, as a representative of the landholders of South India. Again when the Swarajists entered the Legislature, he came to the Legislative Assembly, joined the Swaraj Party, and was one of the most respected Members of that party, who enjoyed the confidence not only of its leaders but of the rank and file. Time and again he had to differ from his leaders. Independence which was an outstanding trait of his character shone when his conviction was not in agreement with their convictions. He then stood for the Council of State, and without any difficulty the province which had honoured him before sent him back to the Council of State. Sir, he came of a very aristocratic family in the South, and spent most of the money that was his in the public cause; and he will long be remembered in South India, as in this Legislature, as a great man and a good man, who was generous, even to a fault. When I look back to six days ago, when he was taken away from his house to the hospital, I could not imagine that he would pass away; he looked so very healthy. Sir, "in the midst of life we are in death". My party and I deeply mourn his passing away. We can only pray for the progress of his soul. It is very seldom that we come across one so good and so true. The hand we were pleased to touch has gone; the voice we loved to hear we shall hear no more. May he rest in peace "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I should like to associate myself and my party with the motion that has been made by my Honourable friend the Leader of the House. Mr. Kodivalam V. Rangaswami Iyengar was a well known figure in Madras politics and was in the public life of the country and of the Presidency for the last twenty years. When we remember that he was only 46 at the time of his death, we can realise at what early age he came into prominence in public life and what an active part he has taken during the last twenty years in every aspect of political affairs in the country. Not only did he take a leading part in national politics, as has been referred to by my friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, but he was also interested in parochial politics: he was the Chairman of the Municipal Council of Srirangam, his birth-place, and his name is a household word both in Trichinopoly and in Srirangam. In the old Imperial Legislative Council I believe he had the honour of being a colleague of yours, Sir, and for many years with the great men who then took part in the debates of that Council he joined in organising and expressing the public opinion of the country. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar has been from 1916, except for a short period of one year in 1925 or 1926, a member of the Central Legislature, either of the old Imperial Legislative Council or of the reformed Legislature at the centre. His personality, his charming figure, his absolute urbanity of temperament and his pleasant ways always will remind every one of us of the nature of his good qualities. I have never seen him—and I do not think any Member of this House has ever seen him—in a temper. Whatever might be the occasion, however much he might feel, he always kept that cheerful outlook and that cheerful personality which was his chief characteristic. Sober, always straight in his talk, and always mellowed in his language, Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar typified the rural gentleman at his best. I think that we will be doing our duty if we convey on behalf of the House our feelings of regret to the members of his family at the early demise of the gentleman. Sir, the circumstances under which he was parted from us are of the most tragic kind. Away from home, away from those who are near and dear to him, with only his brother who was just in time to see him in life, Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar has passed away in a strange place, comparatively speaking. These tragedies make us realise occasionally what those who are doing their best on the non-official side for the cause of the country may have to suffer. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar's death must bring home to every one of us that they also serve who only stand and wait, and they also serve who place before the authorities the best temper and the best opinion of their countrymen in this country.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): Mr. President, it is my most painful duty to associate myself with the previous speakers in expressing our sense of sympathy and grief for the bereaved family of our departed friend Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Iyengar. He belonged to the same place from where I come. He was my personal friend and was beloved by all communities alike. Though an orthodox Brahmin, he was very social with both Indians and Europeans. In him we have lost a genuine and genial friend. Sir, it was only the other day that I met him quite hale and hearty, and this morning I was shocked to find from the Hindustan Times that he had taken ill and passed away from this world. It pained me very much, because I had no opportunity of knowing that he had taken ill. Having heard suddenly about my friend's untimely demise, I ran up to the hospital this morning and took a last glimpse of his face. Sir, he was a staunch nationalist. His much-lamented father Mr. Kodialam Vasudeva Iyengar was a nominated member of the Madras Legislative Council who had many a virtue. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar had inherited all those virtues and was connected with many national institutions, and as Chairman of the Srirangam Municipality, which is only three miles off from Trichinopoly, he was very popular among all classes of people. As has been expressed by the Deputy Leader of our party, Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar has passed away from this world under very tragic circumstances. His beloved mother, who is much advanced in age, his daughters and other near relatives are far away from Delhi; they could not even come and have a last glimpse of the deceased; so, Sir, he died a very doleful death. Of course gentlemen of his stamp are very few, in whom are combined many good qualities. Being a nationalist of the first order he always interested himself in all causes which are calculated to lead to the advance of the country and the uplift of all Indians alike. With these few words, I support the motion before the House.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar was a great friend of mine. We were both colleagues in the first Council of State, and then he came back to the Assembly when I also came back here. I had known him for all this long period, and I can certainly say that he was a very conscientious legislator, a thorough gentleman and a good friend. It is a pity that he should have been snatched away from our midst at such an early age as 46, and I sympathise with the bereaved family and associate my party and myself with every word that has fallen from the previous speakers. I support this motion.

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): Sir, we here also wish to be associated to the fullest extent with all that has already been said concerning the sudden and tragic death of one who was our former colleague and who was so well known to many of us.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it is with great regret that we have heard the sad report of the death of Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar. Early in the morning we got the news from the newspapers, without knowing anything about his illness before, that he passed away last night. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar belonged to a very aristocratic family of South India and he represented the Landholders' interests in the Legislatures. I first met him in 1921 in this city. He was generous to a fault; he was very clever and a great student of politics. Though he was an orthodox Brahmin, still he was very social with all communities, and in this matter I think he has left behind an example for many of us to follow. I have been closely watching him since 1921, and I must say that he was a thorough gentleman and had a large heart. His writings on political matters and certain other social subjects have left some reminiscences of his life behind. I know he was writing some books, and I do not know if he was able to complete his labour of love before his death. He was so hard working, and so thoughtful, that whenever anything happened either here or in the other place, he would immediately take up the question and study it closely, and he made a lot of sacrifice even to his personal discomfort. Sir, I associate myself with the Honourable the Leader of the House and endorse each and every word that has fallen from the lips of my friends belonging to the different parties. It is only fair, Mr. President, that our expression of sorrow should reach the members of his family. I understand his brother hurried to this place from the South coast only a couple of days ago and he was able to meet the deceased just in time. It is really a pity that we were not informed of the serious nature of his illness nor of the exact hour fixed for his funeral, otherwise some of us at least would have taken a last glimpse of the deceased, and we have missed an opportunity of our life.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair wishes to associate itself with all that has fallen from Honourable Members in regard to the sad loss which the country has suffered by the premature passing away of Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar, a gentleman whom I had known for many years and with whom I had developed close ties of friendship. Mr. Rangaswami Iyengar was a very quiet worker in the cause of his country, and one of his greatest merits was that he was always found associated with all progressive movements for the advancement of his motherland. The Chair will communicate to his relatives the feeling of sorrow and sympathy to which the House has given expression.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: I have to inform the Assembly that the following Members have been elected to serve on the Committee on Public Accounts, namely :

1. Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah.
2. Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi.
3. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan.
4. Mr. S. C. Mitra.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE STANDING FINANCE COMMITTEE FOR RAILWAYS.

Mr. President: I have also to inform the Assembly that the following Members have been elected to the Standing Finance Committee for Railways, namely :

1. Mr. R. S. Sarma.
2. Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah.
3. Mr. G. Morgan.
4. Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan.
5. Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.
6. Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar.
7. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur.
8. Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan.
9. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin.
10. Mr. Bhuput Sing.
11. Rao Bahadur S. R. Pandit.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

REPRESENTATION OF MUSLIMS IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT, BENGAL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 612 asked by Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Aziz on the 4th March, 1932.

(a) Total selections have been made for the appointment of 3 Examiners and 17 Assessors. The latter appointments had to be made in the chain of vacancies caused by the appointment of 17 Assessors as Income-tax Officers.

Of the candidates selected 2 are G. D. As., 1 M.A., 1 B.Com., 11 B.As. and 1 B.Sc. 4 men have been promoted from the department.

Appointments made up-to-date—3 Examiners and 11 Assessors.

(b) This is not a fact. All those candidates who are G. D. As. were offered appointments, but only 3 G. D. As. accepted. Certificates of Divisional Accountant are not regarded as entitling the holders to preferential treatment in filling appointments. It does not appear that any holder of such a certificate applied for one of these temporary posts.

Of the 3 G. D. As., 2 have been appointed to these temporary posts and 1 has been held in reserve to fill a permanent appointment as Examiner which has fallen vacant.

(c) No B.A. or M.A. in Persian has been selected for appointment, so the latter part of the question does not arise.

(d) The figures are shown as below :

	No. of clerks.	No. of Mahomedan clerks.
Office of Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal	15	Nil.
Office of Assistant Commissioner, Calcutta	7	Nil.
Office of Assistant Commissioner, Head Quarters	11	3

(e) The Honourable Member is apparently referring to the circular issued by the Government of Bengal regarding representation in Services under their control. The orders of the Government of India, as the Honourable Member is aware, are that one-third of the permanent vacancies should be reserved for redressing communal inequalities. They have laid down no fixed percentages for any particular minority community, but have under consideration the question how far it is practicable to follow the practice of local Governments in respect of Services under the Central Government recruitment to which is made locally.

(f) 38 per cent. of the total strength of clerks in Income-tax Offices and Assistant Commissioners' offices.

APPLICATIONS FOR REVISION OF INCOME-TAX IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 658 asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 7th March, 1932.

(a) The number of applications was :

1929-30	1,512

I regret that it is not possible to inform the Honourable Member in how many cases the applicant requested a hearing and in how many cases a hearing was given. To obtain this information would involve the examination of 3,835 files, and I do not feel justified in imposing that task on the staff. I may remind the Honourable Member that the Commissioner acting under section 33 is theoretically acting of his own motion. The section does not provide for any application by an assessee, nor does it require that the assessee should be given a hearing except when the Commissioner proposes to pass an order prejudicial to him. The Commissioner estimates that he granted a hearing in about 40 per cent. of the cases.

(b) As already stated, the law does not contemplate the presentation of applications under section 33. Nor does it require the Commissioner to record reasons for deciding not to exercise his powers under that section. When the Commissioner so decides, he informs the applicant accordingly, and does not generally record the reasons for that decision. Where he does record his reasons, a copy of his order is given to the assessee if he applies for it.

NUMBER OF SIKHS AND MEMBERS OF OTHER COMMUNITIES ON COMMITTEES OF REJECTION OF AN APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF A BUNGALOW IN LAHORE CANTONMENT.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 354 asked by Sirdar Sohan Singh on the 15th February, 1932.

(a) Yes.

(b) Yes, the application was returned without reference to the Board, because the specifications of the proposed bungalow were not in accordance with those prescribed in a scheme which had been sanctioned under section 181 (4) of the Cantonments Act, by the Officer Commanding-in-Chief, the Command, in the area within which the bungalow was to be constructed.

(c) Government are of opinion that the object in view, namely, the construction of bungalows of a particular type, should have been achieved by by-laws under section 186 (b) of the Cantonments Act rather than by the imposition of a scheme under sub-section (4) of section 181, and are communicating orders accordingly to the authorities concerned.

(d) Yes.

(e) and (f). The practice existed until lately but has now been discontinued.

PROSECUTIONS INSTITUTED BY THE EXECUTIVE OFFICER, SIALKOT CANTONMENT.

Mr. G. M. Young: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 661 asked by Sirdar Sohan Singh on the 7th March, 1932.

(a) Government understand that since the introduction of the Cantonments Act, 1924, the practice in the Sialkot Cantonment has been for the Executive Officer to issue notices under that Act as soon as the necessity for doing so arose, his action being subsequently confirmed by a resolution of the Board.

(b) and (c). After the Board had confirmed the issue of the notices the Executive officer lodged prosecutions for non-compliance with those notices as the Board had delegated its powers under sections 266 and 267 to him.

(d), (e) and (f). Yes.

(g) The expenses of the Cantonment Board in the revision proceedings amounted to Rs. 165.

(h) Government have no information.

(i) No further action is called for, as both the Cantonment Board and the Executive Officer acted in good faith and in the belief that the procedure which had been followed for some years was correct.

(j) Government have no reason to believe that the incorrect procedure is followed in other cantonments; and, in view of the decision of the High Court, they do not consider that any action is required.

MUSLIM CLERKS DISCHARGED FROM THE OFFICE OF THE CHIEF MEDICAL OFFICER, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. P. R. Rau (Financial Commissioner, Railways): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 675 asked by Mr. Muhammad Muazzam Sahib Bahadur on the 7th March, 1932.

Only one clerk has been discharged from the office of the Chief Medical Officer, North Western Railway during the last three years and that clerk belonged to the Muslim community. The clerk discharged was inefficient and before his services were dispensed with he had had sufficient warning given to him that his work was not of the standard required.

APPOINTMENT OF TRAFFIC INSPECTORS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 446 asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 22nd February, 1932.

(a) and (b). The last 4 employees confirmed as Traffic Inspectors together with their substantive pay and the pay on which they have been confirmed are given below :—

Names.	Former substantive pay.	Substantive pay.
		Rs.
1. Mr. W. W. Foster . . .	A. S. M., Grade V Rs. 300 . .	380
2. Mr. Raghwanish Singh . . .	Claims Inspector pay Rs. 190 . .	365
3. Mr. Kirpa Ram . . .	S. M., Grade III pay Rs. 190 . .	365
4. Mr. Dewan Chand . . .	S. M., Grade III pay Rs. 190 . .	365

(c) Promotions to the post of Traffic Inspector are made by selection from employees who have adequate experience and who are considered to have the qualifications necessary for this post. Such employees appear before a Selection Board of Principal Officers in Headquarters by which the final selection is made, and by whom due consideration is given to the claims of all.

(d) I understand there is no likelihood of their confirmation being cancelled. Their case is different from that of the Controllers referred to by the Honourable Member.

NON-INCLUSION OF CERTAIN RESOLUTIONS IN THE AGENDA OF A MEETING OF THE LAHORE CANTONMENT BOARD.

Mr. G. M. Young: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 351 asked by Sirdar Sohan Singh on the 15th February, 1932.

(a) Yes.

(b) No. The resolutions were returned under instructions of the President. I am informed that, among other reasons which led to their not being placed on the agenda, they were not received 10 days before the meeting, as required by the regulations.

(c) Yes, provided that it complies with the regulations on the subject.

(d) Does not arise.

OFFICERS DEALING WITH ESTABLISHMENT MATTERS ON THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 87 asked by Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad on the 22nd February, 1932.

CONTRACTS FOR UNLOADING AND STOCKING COAL ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 770 asked by Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney on the 14th March, 1932.

(a) The reply to all the parts of this question is in the negative.

(b) Does not arise.

DRAFT CONVENTION AND RECOMMENDATIONS RE PROTECTION AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF WORKERS EMPLOYED IN LOADING AND UNLOADING SHIPS.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): With your permission, I wish to make a statement regarding the Draft Convention and Recommendations concerning the protection against accidents of workers employed in loading or unloading ships adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 12th Session held in 1929.

On the 14th July, 1930, this House adopted the following Resolution moved on behalf of Government:

"This Assembly having considered :

- (1) the Draft Convention concerning the protection against accidents of workers employed in loading or unloading ships;
- (2) the Recommendation concerning reciprocity as regards the protection against accidents of workers employed in loading or unloading ships; and
- (3) the Recommendation concerning the consultation of workers' and employers' Organisations in the drawing up of regulations dealing with the safety of workers employed in loading or unloading ships; adopted by the International Labour Conference at its Twelfth Session recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should examine the possibility of giving effect to the above Convention and the Recommendations and that the results of this examination should be placed before the Assembly within eighteen months from this date."

The Government of India consulted the Local Governments and through them the Port Trusts and commercial bodies as to the desirability of ratifying the Draft Convention and accepting the Recommendations referred to in the above Resolution. The replies received showed that the weight of opinion was in favour of the Draft Convention being ratified and the Recommendations being accepted. After considering the replies the Government of India came to the conclusion that the Draft Convention should be ratified and the Recommendations accepted on behalf of India and that necessary legislation should be undertaken to give effect to them. Subsequently, however they received intimation from the International Labour Office that certain Governments had met with difficulties of a practical nature when considering the question of ratifying the Convention, and had approached the Office with the suggestion that, in order to remove these difficulties, the Draft Convention should be modified. An examination of the points of difficulty raised by the Governments referred to above showed that similar difficulties would arise in India and that the amendments to the Draft Convention suggested by the Governments in question would remove them. In the circumstances the Government of India decided to postpone the question of introducing legislation to give effect to the Draft Convention till the decision of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office on the proposal for the revision of the Draft Convention had been received.

The Government of India have now received intimation that the Governing Body of the International Labour Office have placed the question of the partial revision of the Draft Convention on the Agenda of the Sixteenth Session of the International Labour Conference which is to open at Geneva on the 12th April 1932. In the circumstances the Government of India propose to await further developments before taking any further action regarding the ratification of the Draft Convention and the acceptance of the Recommendations.

THE BENGAL CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT (SUPPLEMENTARY) BILL—contd.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, as reported by the Select Committee.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The issue involved in this amendment* is whether we should give sanction to taking away the powers of the High Court under section 491 in respect of the detenus under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. On Thursday last, while discussing this point, I attempted to make out my contentions. I asked the House to consider this question as one of great and vital importance. If this were in any sense a communal question it would be only a few Members of the House that would pay sympathetic attention to it, but this is a question of national importance, and I request the House to give its utmost consideration to it and look at it from all points of view.

Now, Sir, the points that I made the other day were these. One, that the liberty of a man established by habeas corpus does exist independently of the provisions of section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The second that this Legislature, either this House or even the other House,—the Council of State—has got no power to abolish rights of a habeas corpus nature. The third point, with which I concluded that day, was that the proviso to section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, as it now stands which really curtails the powers of the High Court so far as certain regulations mentioned therein are concerned is ultra vires. I do contend even now that those provisions under clause 3 of section 491 are ultra vires; in other words, even though made by the Legislature, they are null and void. Now these are questions purely of law, and it is well-known, that a legal discussion is generally dry. The other day I was sorry when my Honourable friend, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, found himself somewhat uncomfortable in his seat and doubted whether the points that we are discussing here were appropriate. He put a question whether this House was constituting itself a High Court. Sir, I know full well that some Members of this House are more accustomed to politics than to law, and my Honourable friend will excuse me if I crave his indulgence for saying that he has of course held a portfolio previously of a political nature and not of law, and therefore perhaps he is a little impatient about the consideration of these law questions. I must however submit that this question is of such an important character that all the Members of this House must give their whole attention to it, and decide for themselves this plain question, namely, whether they are going to curb the elementary rights of a man by curtailing the undoubted rights of the High Court with regard to these detenus.

*"That clause 4 be omitted and clause 5 be renumbered as clause 4."

who are already involved in much hardship and harsh treatment? I would therefore ask my Honourable friend, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, to bear with me while I continue my line of argument in order to try to satisfy this House that this clause 4 of the Bill, which is sought to be incorporated into an Act, should not be so made a Bill of the Bill. Sir, on Thursday last, I concluded by saying that proviso 3 to section 491 is really not legal; no matter if it has been made by the Legislature; the Legislature is after all a human body and all human bodies are liable to err. There no doubt have been several Acts some provisions of which the highest courts, including the Privy Council, have held to be ultra vires. Sir, I contend that that is the exact position here also. I lay stress on the point of illegality of such a provision as clause 3 of section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, because in the Statement of Objects and Reasons only one reason is given for enacting this clause and that is that a precedent exists under clause 3 of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code wherein certain regulations have been excepted from the operation of section 491, Criminal Procedure Code. Sir, it is thus sought to be established that so far as the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is concerned, the High Court should have no power to look into the merits of the case and to decide upon the justice or otherwise of the case of a detenu. Sir, I referred that day to the Indian Law Reports, 39 Bom. and said that in that decision, though it has not been directly ruled that proviso 3 is inoperative, yet there are some remarks therein to support my view. To make that case understandable, I may say that it was a case in which a man was taken up and confined under a writ on the requisition of the Government of Germany for having committed an offence of cheating. An order had been made that that man was to be extradited to Germany to be tried there. An application was made to the High Court, probably under section 491 or under the habeas corpus Act, that the High Court should interfere and send for the record and look into that case to find out for themselves the propriety and legality of the action under the Extradition Act. Sir, objection was taken then that the High Court had no jurisdiction and the High Court went into that question and decided that they had jurisdiction. This was because the Extradition Act had made no exception to the exercise of their powers under section 491. Incidentally, however, the question was raised whether the proviso 3 to section 491 is valid or invalid. I shall read out what they said at page 182 of I. L. R. 39 Cal.:

"It must, however, be shown clearly that supreme power such as that under Habeas Corpus or under directions in the nature of that writ has been expressly left, if that be possible, to the Legislature."

Now these are the words that I lay emphasis upon, in order to show that it is doubted whether the Legislature have got the power to interfere with the writ of habeas corpus. Further on, it is said:

"On the contrary clause 3 of section 491, whether validly or invalidly, excepts certain regulations and Acts from the operation of that section."

I lay emphasis on the words "validly or invalidly". So there is a doubt about its validity and the question is open. Then further on it lays down:

"But the English Act did not give the right to Habeas Corpus. It merely declared a right which existed independently of the Statute."

It is therefore my contention here also that the habeas corpus right remains independently of section 491, Criminal Procedure Code. Then, Sir, I will read out that portion of the ruling where it is said:

"In re. Salet ex-parte Baset indicated, in sections 11, 33 and 34 Vic. c. 52, 1870, the time when as a matter of procedure that right should be invoked. By the order of the Council of 7th March 1904, Gazette of India, page 463, 14th May 1904, it was under section 18 of the English Statute declared that chapter II of the Indian Act should take effect as if it were part of the English Statute. That order has not the effect of incorporating the procedure of section 11 of the Statute into this country which has a procedure of its own."

Sir, the portion which is important is this:

"The order may, however, be affected to show, so far as it goes, that there was no intention to do away with the right to Habeas Corpus which was declared in Statute in support of which the Indian Act was ordered to take effect as if it were a part of it."

Then, I submit, that I have now made out two points, namely, with regard to the existence of the right of habeas corpus independently of the Statute in the High Court, and my humble submission is that the provision which has been made in clause 3 to section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, is not a valid and legal one. After these two points have been made, I would urge that the question with regard to the reasonableness or feasibility of giving sanction must have some cogent reasons. It is questionable whether such cogent reasons do exist. Sir, I must submit that no reason has been given on which we may place our reliance and it would be absolutely wrong on our part to give such a sanction and take away the power of the High Court especially with regard to the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. My reasons for saying so are these. The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is an Act which is very harsh and severe in its application. That being the case, the question arises whether the only power that has been reserved to the High Court, namely, to send for the case and find out whether the man is really being detained properly or illegally, should also be taken away from it? With regard to this, I would refer to section 2 of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, which says:

"When in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has acted or is about to act in contravention of the provisions of the Indian Arms Act and other Explosive Substance Act. . . ."

or is found to be a suspect of the crimes therein mentioned, the Executive can pass an order calling on him to notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be specified in the order. Also that he shall report himself to the police in such a manner and at such periods as may be so specified; shall conduct himself in such a manner or abstain from such acts as may be specified; shall reside or remain in any area so specified; shall not enter, reside in or remain in any area so specified and shall be committed to custody in jail. Now, Sir, these are the provisions which are very harsh indeed, and when they are intended to apply not to a man who has been judicially found out to be a suspect, they become harsher still. Then, Sir, let us see what is the procedure that is applied. It is stated in section 9:

"Within one month from the date of the order by the Local Government under sub-section (1) of section 2, the Local Government shall place before two persons, who shall be either Sessions Judges or Additional Sessions Judges the material facts and circumstances in their possession, on which the order has been based or which are relevant to the inquiry."

[Mr. Lalchand Navalrai.]

These Judges are asked to be only reporters. The section goes on to say:

"The said Judges will then consider the said material facts and circumstances and the allegations and answers and shall report to the Local Government whether or not in their opinion there is a lawful and sufficient cause for the order."

Now, Sir, this is not a judicial decision at all. So we must say that the man had no trial of any kind; still the two Judges have to be appointed and it is always assumed that the procedure was observed though it amounts to nothing. In fact, I will say, if I may, that it is no procedure but a mere farce.

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil (Bombay Southern Division: Non-Muhamadani Rural): Is it open or in camera?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: It is not open but beyond the screen. Then, Sir, these two Judges sit together and go into the facts supplied to them by the Government and what do they do? They have to make only a report and after the report let us see who decides. Sir, the next paragraph gives that answer.

"On receipt of the said report the Local Government shall consider the same and shall pass the order thereon as it appears to the Local Government to be just or proper."

The question has been settled by the Local Government. They get the report and they themselves become the Judge. This is the kind of procedure that is prescribed by the Act. Further on, it is said:

"Nothing in this section shall entitle any person against whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2 to attend in person or to appear by a pleader in any matter connected with the reference to the said Judges, and the proceedings and the report of the said Judges shall be confidential."

Sir, is this justice? This procedure is not only harsh but even the report, according to this procedure, is confidential. Now, I ask what are you going to decide in the case under consideration? Here is a detenu whose case has been considered on a report submitted who is only a suspect detenu and his case has been considered in the manner that I have now indicated to the House. Thus even the report of the two Judges received by the Local Government about him remains a sealed book for the detenu.

I ask, is this justice? Before we enact this provision in the Bill, we must observe that there is at least a glimpse of hope, there is a loophole left for that detenu even though on the materials which are not sufficient and the materials which are supplied by the executive. The detenu has got the hope of getting his case reviewed by the High Court; but now the Government of India are asking the House to take away that power also and leave the detenu in the lurch, in the hands of the executive. They can suspect him, they can detain him, they can collect materials against him in any manner they like. They can appoint two Judges of the High Court to sit and report on the materials placed before them confidentially and then a final order is passed and the Government will say that the detenu is really guilty. Now, the Government further want that even the High Court should not interfere. Is this British justice? I therefore think that it would help the Government morally if they do not take away the last vestige of hope and the last resort the detenu has under the Criminal Procedure Code. I can well understand it when they want to transfer a detenu. There is some reason in it because the Government believe that by that detenu remaining in Bengal, he will contaminate other prisoners and he will create a disturbance in the prison. That is quite understandable. But if the detenus are transferred, certain conveniences could be given to them. What is the alternative going to be provided for in case the power of the High Court is taken away. The result is that even the little redress that the High Court could give to the detenus is sought to be taken away. Unless and until there are cogent reasons, which have not been given up to this time, the power of the High Court to give redress to the detenus should not be taken away. We are not now asking that the Criminal Law Amendment Act should be repealed. We do not say that the procedure which is a farce should be changed or improved. We are merely asking that the executive should not be given the power to take away the right of the High Court to examine the materials concerning a detenu. I do not know what reasons the Government have got to take away the powers of the High Court. They have not given the reasons up to now. In saying that the Government have not given any reasons, I am supported by what the Honourable the Law Member said in his speech on this debate. I have read the speech of the Honourable the Law Member—I also heard it in this House—and I find that he has given reasons justifying why a detenu should not be given a regular trial. They may be right or wrong, acceptable or unacceptable, but with regard to the provision of taking away the powers of the High Court, he has given no reasons, nor I submit could he give any sound reason. The Honourable the Law Member said:

"I may mention only two factors, one is that a trial is undesirable in order to protect witnesses from being assassinated and the second is that if these persons are brought to trial in that case the methods employed by the Government in fighting the terrorist movement will have to be disclosed in court in cross examination which in the existing circumstances is not desirable."

I can well understand the reasoning there. If you are going to have an open trial according to the ordinary procedure of the Criminal Law, then witnesses will have to be examined and cross-examined, and then there may be some fear—though I submit that reason also does not appeal to me for it will apply to every other case too. This is a political case in which witnesses come and give evidence, and they are, according to Government, in fear of being assassinated, but may I not ask that even in other Criminal trials pertaining to crimes other than political, is it not a fact that the witnesses are cross-examined that is likely to create bad blood? Is there no fear of the witnesses being assassinated? My opinion is that the argument will apply to all crimes under the criminal law. If the High Court calls for the material papers relating to a detenu, examines the papers and then gives its judgment, how is it that witnesses are going to be affected by that procedure? There will be no witnesses brought out for examination in the court. How then do you say that the witnesses would be in fear of being murdered? The High Court will simply examine the case and judge on the materials, and how will this disturb the happy or the unhappy methods that Government employ in crushing this terrorist movement? The reasons that are given for curbing the powers of the High Court do not appeal to me and I do not think they will appeal to the House either. I therefore submit that as no reasons are given for taking away the powers of the High Court, this amendment should be accepted.

[Mr. Lalchand Navalrai.]

I have only to say a few more words in conclusion. Section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code allows the right to the High Court to call for a detenu and to consider his case. There is another clause which allows the High Court to call for certain witnesses in certain cases. If that power is also taken away from the High Court, then why not adopt rather a procedure in which when the police suspects a man, they can take him to the jail and let him remain in it till it pleases the police to report to the Local Government that the man has behaved better and could be released. Why not adopt such a procedure instead of the present one which does not help the detenu to any extent even his going up to the High Court. With regard to curbing of such powers of the High Court, the Honourable the Law Member said the other day that the Government always helped the High Court if they ordered the production of any witnesses. But now the Government want to deprive the High Court of the Statutory power of calling for witnesses. I submit that if witnesses can be called for by the High Court only on a request to the executive, it is absolutely a wrong procedure and it will leave the High Court at the mercy of the executive. If we pass this provision in this Bill, it will leave the High Court absolutely helpless and will leave the High Court completely at the mercy of the Executive Government. I therefore object strongly to this provision being put on the Statute-book. Sir, I will not take any more time and 1 P.M. I think I have been true to my promise of taking about 20 minutes.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has taken 35 minutes.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: When speaking on a point of law, no one knows how much time he will take, and I have exceeded my promise by some time. However, I will again appeal to the House that this is a point to which they should give their utmost consideration. They should be alert in safeguarding their powers and in not surrendering the liberties of the people to the executive.

Mr. R. S. Sarma (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, whatever may be the defects of the present constitution of the Government of India or the shortcomings of the constitution of the present House, nobody can say that this House lacks lawyer Members who can frequently illumine and enlighten the Members of this House on intricate points of law. We have here lawyers of eminence like our friend who has just finished, lawyers of experience like my friend Mr. Yamin Khan, and lawyers of both eminence and experience like my friend Mr. K. Ahmed. But I really fail to see whether the House is to-day any the richer in its information on this Bill or all the wealth of wasted eloquence of my Honourable friend Mr. Lalchand Navalrai. Sir, he put two or three very passionate questions this morning. Is the right of the subject being taken away and is the High Court deprived of its rights over these detenus? I want to point out that it is very clear and there is no necessity for labouring this point. There was nothing in the speech of the Honourable the Home Member or in the brilliant exposition of the Honourable the Law Member the other day, which would give any other impression to this House. The whole point of the Opposition is that the powers of the High Court are being taken away,—and there is no doubt that they are being taken away. But the question is why they are being taken away, and the facts that were adduced on behalf of this have not yet been controverted by any Member on that side. Sir, if the High Court's power is not taken away and if the High Court is asked to go into the merits of the case of the detenus who are kept without trial, then there is an obligation on the part of Government to adduce evidence and to produce witnesses to substantiate their case. It means that they have to name their witnesses and to reveal the secret sources of their information, and it is exactly that particular thing which this clause 4 wants to avoid. Sir, does any Honourable Member seriously suggest that in the present circumstances of the country it is safe for Government to have recourse to the procedure of naming witnesses and exposing them to the danger of their lives? I put this question very seriously, and I want Honourable Members in this connection to recall a very recent case, the case of the compositor Ashutosh Neogy who was assassinated like a dog because he gave evidence. When all those people who give information and who help Government as witnesses are tracked down and assassinated is it safe for Government to produce these people so long as these witnesses are not safe, inside the court as well as outside, by the pressure of public opinion? Sir, so long as terrorism is not put down, I do not think it is safe for Government to take that course unless public opinion rises to its full height. It is not that public opinion in India is in favour of terrorism, but public opinion is still afraid of these terrorists. There is no question about it. That is the reason, Sir, why witnesses cannot be exposed to the danger of their lives. That is the reason for the insertion of clause 4, and in my opinion clause 4 is only a corollary of the position taken up of detention without trial. And if this House cannot question that act of arresting people without warning and detaining them without trial, I do not understand how it is consistent for them to deny this right for which they are asking. Certainly, as the Advocate-General of Madras pointed out, what this Bill does is to bring these detenus on a par with Regulation III prisoners. If Regulation III prisoners do not enjoy the benefits of section 491, why should the detenus enjoy a similar privilege? But it can be then asked, "Why do you pass this Act? Why cannot you have all these people arrested under Regulation III and treat them as Regulation prisoners?" There is absolutely no fundamental difference between this Act and Regulation III. The difference is only administrative and financial. Regulation III prisoners are all under the control of the Government of India, whereas the detenus under this Act are under the control of the Local Government concerned; and why should the Central revenues be applied for the maintenance of persons who are detained under a local Act? Sir, for these two reasons I think we should not accept this amendment.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I rise to intervene in this debate and I shall not be very long. But there are certain difficulties in my mind as to the legal position that will be created if clause 4 of this Bill is enacted into law, and I should like these difficulties to be solved before I am asked to vote upon this measure. The question whether for any of the purposes mentioned in what is now section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is open to the applicant still to say that he will make an application independently of that section altogether for the prerogative writ of habeas corpus on the civil side of the High Court, is a question which has been the subject of a severe conflict of opinion between the Calcutta High Court on the one hand and the High Courts of Madras and Bombay on the other. I regret I shall have to inflict upon the House a dry and technical discussion, but unless I do so it will be impossible for me or for the House to understand the serious legal anomaly that will be created in my opinion if clause 4 is enacted into law. The question was first mooted in 39 Cal. 64 whether by section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the right to habeas corpus has been altogether abolished, and if so whether it is competent to the Indian Legislature to do so. That question, as I say, was first mooted in that case, but it was left unanswered as it was found that the provisions of section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applied in that case. The question finally came up for decision before the High Court of Calcutta in 54 Cal. 727, where the Court held, and I may add was induced to hold by the brilliant advocacy of my Honourable friend who is now the Law Member of the Government of India, that to a person detained under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, relief is not now available by a writ of habeas corpus, but would have been available only under section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure except for the provision in the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1925. So far, therefore, as the Calcutta High Court is concerned, the position is quite clear, that that Court holds that section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code has abrogated the prerogative writ of habeas corpus. But that is not the position taken up either by the Madras High Court or the Bombay High Court. In a series of decisions, the Madras High Court (in 36 Mad. 72, 45 Mad. 14, 45 Mad. 922), and the Bombay High Court in a recent decision in 50 Bom. 616, have held that the jurisdiction which was inherited by the High Court from the Supreme Court was not curtailed by the provisions of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. These High Courts will therefore hold that if clause 4 is enacted into law, it will be either ultra vires of this Assembly, or if it is not ultra vires, it will be superfluous. In the case I have mentioned, 54 Cal. the learned Chief Justice remarked that the Madras High Court and the Bombay High Court had lost sight of the provisions of Act X of 1872 and of Act X of 1875, and that these provisions had not been brought to the notice of those Courts when they decided the cases in the manner they have done. Be this as it may, there is a direct conflict between the several High Courts on this important point.

That being the position, what is the result? If a Bengali detenu is confined within the limits of the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court of Calcutta, and applies for a writ of habeas corpus, he will be told plainly that the question is concluded by authority and the High Court of Calcutta will not interfere. But suppose, as it is now proposed to do, the detenus are transferred to a place of detention within the local limits of the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras or of the High Court of Bombay, and those Courts are moved for writ of habeas corpus on behalf of those detenus, what will be the position? The Courts will say "We are not debarred by the provision of the Legislature which bars the application of section 491. We have an inherent right to issue a high prerogative writ of habeas corpus". And they will send for the record and proceedings of the cases of those detenus and they will proceed to examine them. It therefore comes to this: if a detenu is confined within the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court of Calcutta, he cannot have his case examined at all; while a detenu confined, within the appellate jurisdiction of the High Courts of Bombay and Madras, will have every right to have his case examined. The result will be anomalous. Before the Honourable the Mover asks this Assembly to pass a measure of this kind, I venture to submit it is the duty of Government to get uniformity of decision between the various High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta. By what machinery this is to be done, it is not for me to say. They may get a decision of the Privy Council or they may await the introduction of the Supreme Court in this country. But until uniformity is obtained, it seems to me to be futile to enact a clause of this nature in the present Bill.

So much about the technical aspect of the measure. On the merits, is it really necessary in the interests of public safety that clause 4 should be enacted into law? To any one brought up in the traditions of English jurisprudence, any measure which contemplates the prolonged detention without trial of any person is repugnant. It is, to use the words of the Honourable the Law Member, a very hard pill to swallow. If over and above that detention is added a sentence of exile, as this measure contemplates, it becomes even still more difficult to swallow it. But the Honourable the Home Member has assured us that there is a terrorist movement of a most dangerous character which threatens to undermine the very foundations of the State; and if that is so, and there is no reason to doubt what he says, it is the duty of every Member of this House to vote for a measure of this kind, because after all the safety of the State is the ultimate law. . . .

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): You give him a bad name and then hang him: that is all.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: But is it necessary in the interests of public safety to enact a measure depriving a detenu of the right to move for a writ of habeas corpus in the High Court? I venture to submit with the utmost humility that it is not so. On the contrary I submit that to pass a measure of this kind would be to endanger public safety. It will merely deprive the public of a safety valve. For after all, what is the danger to which the Government will expose themselves by allowing recourse to the writ of habeas corpus in a High Court? What power will the High Court exercise? It is not true, as my Honourable friend, Mr. Sarma, just said, that the High Court will be empowered to examine witnesses. It is not true that the names of witnesses will be divulged or the machinery of detention published which is employed by the Government to get information about terrorist crime. All that the High Court will be entitled to do, if I understand the section, is to send for the papers and find out whether the forms of procedure have been correctly followed or, whether the tribunal had jurisdiction; that is all. Beyond that, the High Court will be precluded from interfering to see whether there are sufficient reasons for the detention of the detenus, because that is not the matter which is justiciable under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act.

Now, is there any danger in conferring a power of this kind on the High Court? Certainly not; on the contrary it seems to me that to deprive a prisoner of the right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus would be a source of danger. According to the English law it is only an outlaw or an alien enemy who is not entitled to obtain a writ of habeas corpus: that is the English law as laid down in ex parte Weber, 31 Times Law Reporter, 602. If that is so, is it necessary to pass what virtually amounts to a sentence of outlawry on a prisoner detained under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act? I venture to submit that it is not so. If a safeguard is provided in the nature of a writ of this kind, it will not in any way weaken or endanger the position of the Government; it will add moral force to the policy of repression which the Government in their own defence and in defence of the State is obliged to pursue. It will prevent the alarm which will be unnecessarily created throughout the Empire when it is announced that it has been decided to suspend the habeas corpus in this country.

Sir, if the right to move for a writ of habeas corpus is taken away from the Bengal detenus in the manner proposed, the procedure will be very much on the lines of what used to be followed in France before the revolution by the issue of Lettres de Cachet. Honourable Members are aware what the effect of these Lettres de Cachet was. Readers of Dickin's "Tale of Two Cities" will remember how two French aristocrats of the highest honour did not scruple to resort to compass the ruin of a man against whom they had a grudge by obtaining Lettres de Cachet against him. They will also remember how the issue of Lettres de Cachet was the main cause of the débâcle in France of the 14th July 1789. Sir, history has a knack of repeating itself. Let us hope that similar causes will not produce similar results in this country.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock.
Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): I have spoken so often on this Bill that I feel that I owe an explanation to the House if I rise to speak again. I find, Sir, that there is a lot of loose talk and loose thinking on the subject, and I consider it important that we should get our ideas quite clear. I quite realise that this is a question in which the legal aspects cannot be wholly dissociated from the political aspects, and that probably explains why there has been some misapprehension in the House. What I should like the House to keep in view is the precise scope of clause 4. Clause 4, it will be seen, purports merely to take away the rights under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, whatever those rights are. It is obvious that if apart from section 491 there are other rights, those rights are not at all touched by this Bill. A good deal has been said, Sir, by some of my friends here that the right of habeas corpus is one of the "common law rights" which have come down to us from the Supreme Courts, and that it is not open to the Indian Legislature to derogate from those rights. For our present purposes I submit we need not go into that question at all, however interesting that might be. If de hors section 491 certain rights of habeas corpus are left to the subject in India, those rights will still be there notwithstanding the enactment of clause 4. It may be pointed out, however, in passing, that those rights of habeas corpus, assuming they exist, are not as wide or extensive as those under section 491, because what has been referred to as common law rights of habeas corpus apply only within the limits of the original civil jurisdiction of the Presidency High Courts. The rights which section 491 give, on the other hand, are not limited to Presidency High Courts alone, nor are they operative only within their original jurisdiction. After the amendment of 1923, section 491 has been made applicable to all High Courts, and to the mofussil as well as to the Presidency towns proper.

Coming back, therefore, the position seems to me to be obvious that if apart from section 491, any other rights are there, we need not be under any apprehensions that those rights will be taken away by the present Bill. I am not unmindful that a different line of argument may be adopted, and it may be said that section 491, at any rate as it stood before the amendment of 1923, did not create any new rights, but merely affirmed certain rights which were there already: in other words that what was unwritten law was merely reduced to written law, so that if you repealed the written law, the unwritten law would still hold the field. Sir, if it is correct to say that written law came to take the place of unwritten law, I think it means that the unwritten law was thereby superseded, and a repeal of section 491 would therefore mean also a taking away of the rights which were declared by that section. I am not quite sure that it can be urged that merely because section 491 affirmed certain pre-existing rights, the enactment of that section meant nothing, and that if that section were repealed afterwards, it would make no difference and would in fact take away nothing. I do not think so. Sir, in any view it seems to me rather futile to argue that the Legislature which enacted section 491 has not the power to take away section 491. The Legislature is purporting to do no more than restrict certain rights which the Legislature had itself enacted. Sir, you know there is sub-section (3) of section 491, which expressly lays down that nothing in that section shall apply to persons detained under the State Prisoners Regulations. Now I do not think—I speak subject to correction—that any contention has yet been raised in any High Court that sub-section (3) of section 491 is ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. The argument, so far as I have been able to appreciate it from the reported cases, is simply this, that by enacting sub-section (3) you cannot detract from the common law rights of habeas corpus. That is all. But nowhere was it urged or held that, so far as the rights under section 491 are concerned, the Legislature cannot suspend those rights or restrict their scope or extent. If then it is competent to the Legislature to enact a provision like that, which you have in sub-section (3) of section 491, I do not see why it should not be equally open to the Legislature to enact another provision whereby the restriction is further extended by including within its scope another category of persons. Sir, from this point of view it seems to me to be idle to trouble ourselves on the question as to the competency of this House to pass legislation of the kind proposed. Nor would it serve any useful purpose to labour the other point of which so much has been made, that the rights of habeas corpus are fundamental rights of citizens which can on no account be interfered with. The practical question with which we are concerned, or at any rate ought to concern ourselves, is, not whether the Legislature is competent to enact clause 4, but what would be the effect of enacting it; and, in view of such effect, what should be the attitude of this House towards this amendment? The first point which I wish Honourable Members to notice is that clause

[Mr. C. C. Biswas.]

4, if it is passed, would apply as much to persons who are detained within the province of Bengal as to those who may be removed outside Bengal.

The second point, Sir, which is of some importance is this. In practical application, this clause 4 would operate mainly in cases of arrest and detention under section 4 of the local Act and not under section 2. The other day I took the opportunity of inviting the attention of the House to the distinction between section 2 and section 4 of the Bengal Act. The position under that Act is somewhat like this. A person against whom there is some suspicion is arrested. Then he is detained in custody by the police officer concerned, while the police officer makes a report to the Local Government and he awaits the instructions of the Local Government as to how the person should be ultimately dealt with. This temporary custody would ordinarily extend to about a fortnight, but under special orders of the Local Government it could be extended to one month. By the recent amendment of this Act, which was passed by the Bengal Legislative Council last month, this period of one month was extended to two months. Then, within this period, there may come an order under section 2, or there may not. If there is no order made under section 2, the man is set at liberty. If however an order is made, then he is dealt with in accordance with the directions which may be contained in such order. The directions which may be made under section 2 are many. The person concerned may be directed to report himself to the police, or to reside within certain circumscribed limits, or he may be detained in custody in jail.

Now, Sir, when an order is passed under section 2, remitting a person to custody, there is not much point in insisting on the right of habeas corpus in such a case, because, assuming for the moment that that right exists, whether under section 491 or otherwise, what does it mean? It means this. The person may apply to the High Court, and the High Court, if satisfied that the custody or detention was improper or illegal, may set him at liberty. In other words, it is only when an improper or illegal custody is established, that the High Court may make an order of release under section 491. Where, however, a person is detained in custody under an order passed under section 2 of the Bengal Act, the custody will no longer be illegal custody. The terms of that section make that perfectly clear. You may take it, Sir, that when an order is made under that section, that order will be expressed in terms of that section.—and what are the terms of that section? They are these: “where, in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has acted”, and so on.

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member going again to deal with the point elaborately now? He dealt with the point exhaustively on the previous occasion.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: I shall not, Sir, go into details as on the last occasion. What I was simply trying to point out is this, that the opinion of the Local Government being conclusive, the question of the applicability of section 491 becomes practically of no material importance. If, however, you come to section 4, here the position is entirely different, because that section authorises a police officer to arrest on mere suspicion. It is mainly in such cases that the question of habeas corpus will arise. The question before this House is whether or not the House should be prepared to trust the Executive to the extent that it will allow them to exercise these powers of arbitrary arrest on mere suspicion, without claiming at the same time the right to go up to the High Court for the purpose of challenging the supposed reasonable grounds for suspicion. That is the question to which I should like my Honourable friends to address themselves. Now, Sir, what is the "reasonable suspicion" which section 4 contemplates? It is a reasonable suspicion that the person concerned is a person in respect of whom an order might lawfully be made under sub-section (1) of section 2. Now, Sir, if you repeal section 491, as is proposed in this Bill, the effect of this will be to leave a person who may be arrested on suspicion absolutely without any remedy whatsoever except at the hands of the Executive, for a period of two months. Even if at the end of two months, the Local Government should come to the conclusion that there is no case against him and he is discharged, he would still have been in custody for two months without any remedy left to him in the meantime to establish his innocence. All that is asked for on this side of the House is that the person who may be arrested in such circumstances should have the right to apply to the High Court, and the High Court should have the opportunity of judging whether there are reasonable grounds for suspicion.

Sir, supposing section 491 is allowed, I do not think there is any danger that upon such an application the High Court will go into the merits of the question elaborately, as some of my friends on the other side seem to think. What the High Court would like to know is this: whether there were any facts and circumstances from which the officer concerned could reasonably come to the conclusion that there was sufficient excuse for proceeding against the person in the way he did. The High Court will not upon such an application, as I conceive the matter, try to substitute its own judgment as to what constitutes reasonable suspicion for that of the officer. But the High Court will certainly require to be satisfied that the officer had acted in good faith.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. No newspapers are allowed to be read.

Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, it was in connection with the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act that I was reading the newspaper.

Mr. President: That may be.

Mr. C. O. Biswas: I was saying, the High Court will require to be satisfied that the officer was justified from the facts and circumstances at his disposal in holding that there was a reasonable ground of suspicion against him. The High Court will not scrutinise those facts for itself, but merely see that there were facts from which the officer could come to that conclusion. Sir, if that be a correct interpretation of the functions of the High Court upon an application of that kind, I really do not see what danger may lie in allowing section 491 to operate.

Sir, since I last spoke on this subject, I have been looking into this question a little more closely, and I do not mind confessing that I was at one stage impressed with the argument that if an application under section 491 is allowed, it would really involve serious risks, in that it would mean that the Government would have to lay before the Court information which they could not do without grave danger, grave danger not only to themselves but also to the witnesses concerned. But, Sir, the scope of an application under section 491 is so limited in a case arising under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, that I do not think too much should be made of that supposed danger. Just as in a case arising under section 2 all that the Government need produce before the High Court on an application under section 491 is the order itself, so in a case under section 4 all that they need do is to apprise the High Court of the existence of certain facts and circumstances from which the officer concerned came to the conclusion that there was reasonable ground for suspicion against that man. From this point of view I would urge my friends opposite not to press for the inclusion of this section in this Bill. I realise that that would mean a discrimination, so to say, between persons who are dealt with under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act and persons who are detained under the State Prisoners Regulations, but that is hardly a very convincing argument. If you have taken away certain rights which you should not have taken away from some, that is no reason why you should seek to impose a similar disability upon other persons merely for the sake of symmetry. The situation no doubt is serious, and it is up to the non-official Members to do all that they can to strengthen the hands of the Government in dealing with the terrorist menace in Bengal. All the same, there is another aspect of the matter to be considered. Supposing the Government were to accede to the popular demand in this matter, that itself would produce an accession of feeling in their favour, the moral effect of which ought not to be ignored altogether.

On the other hand, if Government persist in the attitude which I am sorry to say they have been pursuing so long, the attitude of not giving in even on small points raised by the Opposition, the result is bound to be very unfortunate. The impression on the public mind would be that Government are out to crush all opposition, be it ever so reasonable. From that point of view, I think Government would be well advised in accepting this amendment. If after all, as the Honourable the Law Member said, where arrest is not made in accordance with law, it would still be open to the party concerned to apply to the High Court notwithstanding clause 4, the objection to delete clause 4 then loses much more of its force. With these words, I support the amendment.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): I am afraid the legal arguments have somewhat befogged the issue which is before the House. What is the issue before the House? On account of the terrorist movement in Bengal, the Bengal Legislature has been compelled to pass a very drastic measure, the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. It is a drastic measure which involves detention without trial. It was an unfortunate necessity which compelled the Bengal Legislature to pass that Act. The House will remember that that Act was passed not by certification but by an overwhelming majority of the Bengal Legislative Council. Therefore we start with this proposition, that an urgent and impelling necessity exists in Bengal for a measure of this character, which, as my Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza pointed out, is repugnant to people brought up in ideas of British jurisprudence. I expressed a similar sentiment on previous occasions, but in different language. There is no quarrel about that. We start with this, that there is an impelling necessity to resort to detention without trial. Now, the Bengal Government comes to us and says, "Will you help us in carrying out this measure?". If courts are allowed to examine the merits of these cases, then the effectiveness of the measure is gone. The Bengal Legislature cannot pass any measure affecting the jurisdiction of the High Court. Therefore it is up to us to come to the assistance of the Government of Bengal in order to make their measure an effective one. That is the issue before the House. The question is, shall we help Bengal or shall we not help Bengal. When the Bill was referred to the Select Committee, I take it that the implication was that the House was willing to help Bengal but also to take care that the condition of the detenus was not made too burdensome during detention. I understood the action of the House in referring the Bill to the Select Committee meant this, that the House was willing to help Bengal in the difficulty in which she finds herself to-day. If the House is to help Bengal, how can that be done? If, as I say, you allow courts to examine the merits of the cases of detention, then the efficacy of the Bengal measure is gone. What is necessary may be said in a few words, namely, substitution of executive judgment for judicial judgment. That is the purport of the Bengal Act and that is the purport of this Bill. Unfortunate exigency compels us to substitute for a temporary period executive judgment for judicial judgment. If that be so, it is necessary that the powers of the courts to examine the merits of a case should be suspended for the period of this measure. It is not a permanent measure, it is only for a temporary period.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Already the Bill has been in existence for a period of five years and now it is extended for another five years. It is temporary in that sense.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If the terrorist movement continues longer it may be necessary to continue the measure longer. But that is another matter. I think Honourable Members opposite share our hope that the terrorist movement will soon disappear. If it does, then there will be no occasion for discussions of this character. Unfortunately we cannot run away from the fact that the terrorist movement does exist and it has got to be stamped out.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Not by these measures, but in different ways.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: We think that this measure may help to fight the terrorist movement. It may be that my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra is right that other methods are called for. But what those other methods are, we are not discussing at the moment. We are now discussing one of the methods.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: But this method does not appeal to the House.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Well, it has not been thrown out on the motion for reference to Select Committee.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): That has not been done unfortunately.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Not having thrown out the motion for reference to Select Committee, it does not lie in the mouth of Honourable Members to say now that this is not a proper measure. Whether it is a proper measure or not, the House has accepted the principle of the Bill. Having done so, the point before the House is whether the objections raised to clause 4 of the Bill are so great that Government should give up the clause. What are the legal arguments? I will dispose of a misconception of my Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza before I come to the points raised by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai. Dr. DeSouza seems to think that "all that the High Court can do is to send for the records to see whether detention is legal". Now, it is well known that when an application is made for habeas corpus, the High Court does not send for the records. What the High Court does is to issue a rule upon the person who has custody of the prisoner to show cause why that prisoner should not be set at liberty or why that prisoner should not be brought to trial. All that the person who has the custody of the prisoner, in showing cause, has to do is to show that the prisoner is in legal custody. It is not that the High Court sends for the records of the case to look into the merits in the first instance. If the person in custody cannot satisfy the High Court that the prisoner is in legal custody, it is only in that case the High Court goes further into the matter. But once it is shown that the prisoner is in legal custody, then the High Court has no further jurisdiction. The jurisdiction which section 491 gives to the High Court is only in cases where the custody is illegal and not in cases of legal custody. Therefore, it is not a question of the High Court sending for the records

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Then, why include it in the Bill?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I shall not overlook any point. I shall deal with it presently. My first point is this that in the first instance, the High Court does not look into the reasonableness or otherwise of the detention. Nothing of the kind. The first thing is whether the detention is under any law or whether it is an illegal detention.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Then, if you are accepting it, why include this clause 4 in the Bill?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If that be so, what are the powers of the High Court? I am thankful to my Honourable friend Mr. Biswas for anticipating much of my argument. If an order is once passed under section 2 of the Bengal Act, then the jurisdiction of the High Court is gone, section 491, or the prerogative writ of habeas corpus or what not notwithstanding.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: What about improper detention?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I shall deal with all the points. The first argument of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai is that, apart from the powers given by section 491, the High Court has inherited the English common law powers of the Judges of the King's Bench Division, which powers were exercised by the Supreme Courts. This very question was raised in a recent case in Calcutta, and the Calcutta High Court held that, apart from section 491, the High Court has got no such power. And even assuming that the High Courts had some such power it can only be the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras and not the other High Courts, that is to say, only those High Courts which are the successors of the Supreme Courts. Now, so far as Calcutta is concerned, we know the Calcutta High Court has held that, apart from section 491, there is no other power. This prerogative right of habeas corpus does not exist in the province of Bengal at any rate. We are dealing with Bengal detenus. So long as the detenus are in Bengal, they cannot invoke any power except under section 491; they cannot invoke the prerogative right. Then supposing the Bengal detenus are transferred to another province, not in the town of Bombay or in the town of Madras. Then in any such place of transfer there is no prerogative right. All the power is contained in section 491. There is no prerogative right in Ajmer, no prerogative right anywhere else, except in the town of Bombay and the town of Madras according to the present decisions. There is no suggestion now of transferring these Bengal detenus to the town of Bombay or the town of Madras. Therefore it is more or less an academic question. But if any Honourable Member says that, assuming the Government take it into their head to transfer some of the detenus to the town of Bombay or the town of Madras, what then? To that my short answer is this, that if the prerogative right does run it will run. We are not taking away any power which any High Court may have got from any other source except section 491. Those powers are not at all affected. Therefore why quarrel about it? We are now concerned only with the powers given by section 491. Therefore all the talk about powers outside section 491, which are not affected by this Bill, need not detain us any longer. So, Sir, with regard to that prerogative right argument, I will not take any more time.

Now let us see section 491. As Mr. Biswas pointed out,—and in my submission quite correctly pointed out—if an order be made under section 2 of the Bengal Act, then section 491 has no application because, there the opinion of the executive Government is conclusive. If the detention is justified by the opinion of the executive Government, the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere. Then that goes. What is left is the period of arrest before an order of the executive Government is passed. It is only for that short period,—be it 10 days or 15 days, the maximum is two months, if the powers under section 491 be not suspended the detenus may, after arrest and before an order of the executive Government is passed, go to the High Court. Now, look at the practical side of it. If the policy of the measure be to substitute executive judgment for judicial judgment, then allowing judicial authority to override executive judgment would be defeating the policy of this Bill, the policy of the Bengal Act. Therefore, from the view of policy, Government cannot agree to substitute judicial judgment for executive judgment. In the limited case of arrest before the order of the executive Government is passed, once the order of the executive Government is passed section 491 automatically goes. Therefore it is only when a man is in police custody but the order of the Government has not been made during that short period, he may go to the High Court for relief under section 491. For what purpose? For the purpose of determining whether his arrest has been on reasonable suspicion or arbitrary. For that purpose only section 491 would be effective.

Now look at the risk. Mr. Biswas says there is no risk in that. He says all you need do is to place the facts and circumstances before the High Court which may support the arrest on the ground that it is an arrest on reasonable suspicion. But, Sir, Mr. Biswas ought to know that placing facts and circumstances requires that you must also disclose the sources of your information. An affidavit giving information is worthless unless you give the source of your information; and I will recall to Mr. Biswas the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins on that point. Therefore, when Mr. Biswas light-heartedly said that all that the executive need do was to place facts and circumstances before the court, he forgot that it meant disclosure of your whole case, disclosure of the sources of your information, disclosure of the names of your witnesses. The very mischief which we are trying to avoid is done. Sir, to put it shortly, in the case of detention, the High Court cannot interfere; in the case of arrest before an order is made the High Court may interfere. But in such case of interference all the mischief which we are trying to avoid will inevitably happen. Therefore, from the point of view of policy, it is impossible for the Government to accede to the amendment, unless we are prepared not to assist the Government of Bengal in adopting measures which they consider necessary in fighting the terrorist movement. If this House genuinely wishes to help Bengal in stamping out terrorism, then I submit that we ought to make their measure an effective measure and not nullify it.

[Sir Brojendra Mitter.]

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffargarh cum Champaran; Non-Muhammadan): Have any of these detenus been proved to be connected with terrorist activities?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: They have been proved to the satisfaction of the executive Government; they have not been proved to the satisfaction of a court of law because their detention is without trial.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Have not the Government said repeatedly that this is not a penal measure but a preventive measure and that there is no sufficient proof against the detenus?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: That is quite true. It is intended to be a preventive measure and is not intended to be punitive. All that is intended is this that when the executive Government, upon information in their possession, think that certain people are connected with the terrorist movement they should not be allowed to remain at liberty, in the best interests of the State. Honourable Members may agree or may not agree as to any particular case. But the executive Government, who are charged with the responsibility of seeing that the State is not exposed to terrorist outrages, have to satisfy themselves that the particular person is connected with the terrorist movement; and it is only in such a case that an order of detention is made. As to whether in any particular instance power has been abused or not, there may be difference of opinion. But what I say is this. The policy of these extraordinary measures is that the executive Government, upon information which they cannot disclose, must satisfy themselves that persons whose liberty is sought to be restrained, in the larger interests of the State, are connected with the terrorist movement and, once detained, they should not be brought to trial, for reasons which on the last occasion I submitted to the House.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was taken by Sir Cowasji Jehangir.)

My Honourable and learned friend, Mr. Navalrai's next argument was that section 491(3) was ultra vires. I may remind my Honourable friend that in 1925, the Bengal Criminal Law Supplementary Act was passed to supplement the Bengal Act of 1925. In that Act there was a clause identical with clause 4 of the present Bill. That law was in existence from 1925 for five years. During these five years hundreds of people were arrested and detained without trial. Did any one of them raise a question that 491(3) which was reproduced in the supplementary Act of 1925 was ultra vires?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is that a bar to raising it now?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: No. In 54 Calcutta, the effect of section 491 was gone into in great detail; and it was never suggested by any lawyer—and there are astute lawyers in Calcutta as there are in Sind—no one ever thought of raising the contention that 491(3) was ultra vires.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Especially as the Honourable Member was appearing on the other side!

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: There are many good lawyers there; Mr. Biswas would have been the first to raise it if there was anything in it. Apart from that whether section 491(3) is ultra vires or intra vires, is it for this House to declare Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar: Am I to understand that there was a section similar to clause 4 in the Criminal Law Amendment Act which the Central Legislature passed in 1925?

An Honourable Member: This House rejected it and the Council of State passed it.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: It was certified.

Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar: This House refused it.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: All I meant to say was that such an Act was in force; and although it was in force for five years, this point was never raised by any lawyer to my knowledge. . . .

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): How many of these detenus are rich enough to go to a court of law?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: In the case of these detenus, wealth is no consideration because there are many enterprising lawyers who take up these cases without any fee. I need not detain the House much longer on this ultra vires argument. What I say is this: whether it is ultra vires or intra vires is for the court to pronounce; it is not for the Legislature to pronounce. All that the Legislature needs to consider is this, that section 491(3) was enacted in 1923 by the Central Legislature—I do not think it was certified; it was repeated in 1925 in the supplementary Act of 1925, and that is all that is sought to be done now. It is nothing new; if it was ultra vires, it had the sanction of the Central Legislature and has been on the Statute-book since 1923. It was passed by the Central Legislature. . . .

An Honourable Member: By the Council of State, I think?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: As a Member of the Council of State I should say that the Council of State is as much a part of the Central Legislature as this House is. . . .

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): That is just it.

An Honourable Member: Why have you got a nominated President there?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Change the constitution; but at the present moment that argument has no validity.

There is only one other point with which I shall deal. If section 491 is not suspended, what would be the effect? I have submitted already that to a certain extent we shall be making the special instrument which the Bengal Act provides ineffective by compelling the executive to disclose the names of witnesses and the methods by which terrorism is being fought. It is that risk which we seek to avoid. Under section 491, what can the High Court do? Under (1)(a) of that section, the High Court can order that the prisoner be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law; that is to say that the prisoner be brought up for trial. Now, since the whole idea is detention without trial, that power would certainly be inconsistent with the policy of the Bill. The next is that the person in custody be set at liberty. That again would be absolutely inconsistent with the whole policy of the Bill. The Bill is a measure to restrict liberty and not to set a person at liberty. The third is that the person be brought before the Court to be examined as a witness. On that I gave an assurance on the last occasion that if such a contingency arises, if the High Court wants a particular detenu to be examined before it, the Government will not stand in the way. . . .

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Does it mean or not that the High Court kneels before the executive there?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The rest of section 491 deals with trial in one court or another. Therefore it comes to this: to admit the operation of section 491, would be to nullify pro tanto the effectiveness of the measure which the Bengal Government have passed and which the Bengal Government want us to supplement. The policy of this particular legislation, which is an unfortunate necessity, demands that the operation of section 491 should be suspended for the temporary period for which this measure has been passed. In this view of the case, I am afraid the Government cannot agree to letting in section 491 for the limited purpose of examining the cases of persons under arrest before the order of the executive Government has been passed. To admit the operation of section 491 in such cases would be really to destroy the effectiveness of the whole of this exceptional measure.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, the amendment before the House is that clause 4 be omitted from the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Supplementary) Bill of 1930. It runs, as the proposer has said, like this, that clause 4 be omitted and clause 5 be re-numbered as clause 4. But, Sir, anticipating a defeat, he wants to move his next amendment, which says that clause 4 be omitted and that this clause shall remain in force for one year only. Mr. Chairman, when the Bill was on the Legislative anvil after the first stage, I interjected and pointed out to you that though this House referred the Bill to a Select Committee, it came back from the Committee even without the alteration of a comma or a fullstop, and the Bill was not altered in any way. Now, the measure has come back from the Select Committee which was composed of eminent jurists like my friend Sir Hari Singh Gour and Mr. Raju, even without a scratch, the Bill as it was originally drafted has been kept on, and it has come before us at the second stage. After that preliminary stage, it was passed by the unanimous voice of this House that it should be referred to the Committee and this Bill is now being taken into consideration and we find certain amendments. The question is whether at this stage these amendments are worthy of being considered by this House. I am afraid, Sir, unless the other side wants to give the impression of being less intelligent, unless the other side have forgotten their sense of duty as Members of this Assembly, this House cannot possibly put up with that sort of non-sense any further. ("Hear, hear" from the Nationalist Benches.) I hope, Sir, Honourable Members will allow me to place my viewpoint before the House. If Members are interfering with my common right of speech, they will be losing their own prestige. Allow me, therefore, to say that when the question of propriety, when the question of validity or invalidity of certain amendment crops up, it is for this House to listen very carefully to what each Member says and consider the whole question seriously and decide the matter once for all. I shall not say anything more on this.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, at the preliminary stage my friend, Mr. Raju, who is a great lawyer from Madras, said that this clause affecting the liberty of the people should be omitted and, that the liberty of the people should not be curtailed as it is against the spirit of law. Now, Sir, the law should be accurate. I challenge anybody here to say if Government are not right in suggesting a clause like this, which has the same effect or the same sum and substance as section 491 of the Indian Penal Code, which was amended in 1923 when, in spite of this writ of habeas corpus, it was extended to the Presidencies of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, in fact it was extended to all parts of India, even to a place like Ajmer; that was the amendment in the year 1925 passed on the floor of the House. Now, the question how that clause 4, which is the sum and substance of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, remains in this piece of legislation. The Government think, as the Honourable the Law Member has said, that on account of the terrorist movement in the country, they should take legal action to crush the movement and restore normal conditions. That is the essence, that is the object for which this piece of legislation has been brought forward. Mr. Chairman, when you were speaking at the preliminary stage, our party people, some of them very intelligent men, were quite right in asking how the sum and substance of section 491 can be brought by means of section 4 into this Bill, and that it ought to be omitted, and you yourself said that it was against the objects and reasons. You told me you had read the same of the original Bill.

[Mr. K. Ahmed.]

Sir, the objects and reasons of this Bill are clearly set out. I shall read to the House, as I interjected on the first day of the introduction, the Statement of Objects and Reasons as it then stood :

"Clause 4 of the Bill on the analogy of section 491 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, bars jurisdiction under the powers conferred by that section."

Therefore, the Government have clearly set out the objects and reasons for this measure; that is to say, they want to remove from the Presidency jails of Calcutta, detenus to any other adjoining provinces, and they want to take power for this purpose in spite of section 491. That is to say, Government want to bring under the clutches of the law the terrorist and the terrorist movement. Now, I am not responsible for this piece of legislation. It has been brought here by the executive who had information from the Government of Bengal that they wanted to crush this movement. I know nothing about these terrorists. It is not in my sphere. They are shooting people and killing people and if that happens how can you blame the Government. Do you want that there should be no law and order? That is the reason why the Bill contains clause 4. Unless you give powers to the police or the executive, how you are going to handle these terrorists who will not allow a witness to go to the witness box. (An Honourable Member: "What do you say?") I want to know what the Honourable Members on the other side think about it. Let them discharge their duty and my duty will come next. The Bill in its essence is quite right, and I am here to see that this piece of legislation is passed in this Assembly. The question is how are you going to assist the police and the executive who will arrest and detain these people. Now, in England, the law is the same for everybody whether he is a street beggar or a merchant prince or a Member of Parliament. He has got the right enunciated by my friend from Karachi. There is a recent case decided about three or four days ago. It appeared in the Statesman or the Englishman or the Hindustan Times. There was a young lady who was taken into custody. She applied to the High Court for an inquiry under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code questioning the conduct of the police in detaining her and she wanted her liberty because no human being can be kept within the jail precincts without trial.

Now, Sir, this motion will probably be defeated and the Mover has another amendment restricting the operation of the clause for one year only. As the Law Member said if the revolutionary spirit is crushed, then this clause will not be necessary. As the High Court of Calcutta recently held, section 491 will have no application against the executive or the police in cases where persons are detained without trial. Now, Sir, you know that section 4 of the Criminal Amendment Act of 1925 says :

"The power of the Local Government under sub-section (1) of section 11 of the local Act to direct by order in writing shall be deemed to include a power to order in writing made with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council and such person shall be committed to custody in any jail in British India and for all or any of the purposes of the local Act, the orders so made shall be deemed to be an order made under section 11 of that Act and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly."

Exactly, Sir, the Bengal Government is authorised by that Act to detain any persons and section 491 will have no application; exactly, Sir, the Judges of the High Court only a couple or three days ago passed that order that section 491, that is, the writ of Habeas Corpus, will not lie against the executive in detaining these persons. My friend, Dr. De Souza, forgot for a moment the Statement of Objects and Reasons of this Bill, but came forward as a benefactor and put forward the plea that, well, under the common law in Bombay and Madras—he cited 50 Bombay at page 616—well, there was a time when 50 Bom. applied; probably my Honourable friend was then one of the Judges, or probably a practitioner or probably one of the Sessions Judges and as such he might have been reading the ruling of the High Court, but may I ask him what was the state of things then when I. L. R. 50 Bombay 616 was published and a copy thereof was sent to my Honourable friend for his edification and experience in the matter? What was the state of things? Was it the same as it is to-day in Bombay or in Calcutta? Was there any application? Could not the Judges of the Calcutta High Court read that ruling? Did not the advocate acting on behalf of an applicant, who wanted a writ of Habeas Corpus under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, against the jailor of Alipore jail, Calcutta, present an application that the person on behalf of the applicant should be produced before the Judges within such and such a time in order that evidence might be recorded or, that in the alternative, she might be tried according to law? Certainly, Sir, the case quoted by my friend. Dr. DeSouza, has no application to or bearing on the subject, under discussion. That being so, I cannot help thinking that my Honourable friend, Dr. DeSouza, made a hopeless mistake in applying I. L. R. 50 Bom. at page 616.

I am waiting to hear what my friends of the Independent Party are thinking about the question, namely, whether the Government is or is not in a position to bring into the present Bill clause 4. Sir, my friend, Mr. Sitaramaraju has submitted a note of dissent and has therein stated that section 491 is a section which could not be included in the Bill.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

Sir, my friend is not a lawyer, and he wants to know how that section 491 in clause 4 of the Bill will be included in the main Bill. To-day we find, Sir, that the Bill was perfectly right and to-day the amendment is a moot question. I do not know whether it will be passed or not passed. I do not mind which way they decide it, but as far as the validity of the question is concerned, the Government are perfectly right in bringing in that clause 4, because they want to protect their police officers and the executive in order that 491 may not apply against the executive deterring the persons in question from certain crimes in the province. Sir, if that is correct, I suppose I do not like to go any further than that, because if it is the decision of the Assembly then, they will decide the matter; and as far as I am concerned, I have gone so far and I do not like to go any further, except that if the Government would be right in crushing the terrorist movement by bringing this piece of legislation, so that section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure will have no application in order that sufficient help should be given to the executive to detain these persons, so that they may not terrorise the people at large, I suppose the Government are on the unpopular side on account of that, because my friends on the opposite side may be thinking that the foundation stone of freedom in the country as enunciated by the British Law in England is being taken away, but why? It should not be forgotten what are the circumstances to-day. There are people terrorizing the people at large, killing brave and meritorious and devoted and faithful servants the members of the I. C. S., killing the police, killing the peaceful and law-abiding people in order that something in their mind may come true, in order that they may have the moon at once. Sir, if that is the object, if that is the objective, then it is a good sign for these poor lads to realize that they after all are not so tall as to raise their little fingers and become independent in the twinkling of an eye. If then the Hindu Mahasabha thinks that they will thus have the monopoly over all India, they are mistaken. As far as I am concerned, of course to err is human, I do not think it right to go far as is proposed here, but I am asking this, that if that is not possible

Bhai Parma Nand (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Why do you not mention the Muslim League also?

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, that is not a League which wants suzerainty over all India like the Hindu Mahasabha

Mr. President: Please restrict yourself to the subject before the House.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I know this is quite relevant, as is also the reference of my Honourable friend. I am simply referring to the objects with which the terrorist movement has come into being, and those are the very reasons why the Government have brought forward this piece of legislation in order to crush out the terrorist movement. It is for the Assembly to consider whether it will pass the motion or not, but, Sir, as regards the propriety of the course of action of the Government, I think they are justified in bringing forward this Bill, and I should be delighted to hear the Leader of the Opposition or the Deputy Leader at least in reply to the points I have raised in my speech.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, I had no mind to take part in the discussion of this amendment because I thought, as the Honourable the Law Member said, it dealt merely with legal matters, and from the legal side my friend, Mr. C. C. Biswas, has dealt with the question very elaborately; but yet, when the Honourable the Law Member himself went out of his way and placed it on a political issue, I must say something. In a constitutional Government there are three well-defined functions, viz., the executive, the judiciary and the Legislature and all the three should be well balanced, and that the appropriate functions of any one should not be predominated by another. I think even in our college days we read of this. Now, the executive in this Government has succeeded in crushing the Legislature entirely. They are ruling this country by means of Ordinances and certification. They are now making an attempt even to crush the judiciary. The High courts have the power to supervise the actions of the subordinate judiciary and to see that the liberty of the people is not endangered without proper trial. I think in the American constitution there is provision that the head of the judiciary presides over the Senate when there is a trial for impeachment of the President. Sir, in all the civilised countries the constitution provides to keep the three component parts of the Government within their limits, but unfortunately in India the executive is all in all. Fortunately, the Honourable the Law Member has made that point quite clear; he wants to take away all the powers of the judiciary. Let them say that there is war in the country and therefore they are ruling the country under martial law. Why should the Honourable the Law Member go out of his way and apologise that it is a temporary measure? They have tried these temporary measures now for the last 7 years and they are now going to try one for another 5 years, and yet they call it a temporary measure. I wish however to make it quite clear again that I am not against your taking any steps to root out terrorism from this country. But my contention is that by these means you cannot root out terrorism. It is not right that you should call innocent people "inveterate terrorists". It was the Leader of the House who was referring the other day to my Honourable friend Mr. Ghuznavi as taking advantage of the privilege of the House. Sir, the Honourable the Home Member himself is taking this undue advantage, because I challenge him to call any of these detenus inveterate terrorists out of this House, and I shall see how soon he can go to his Scottish home without being placed before a court of law for libelling innocent persons. Sir, it is very easy to call a man an inveterate terrorist and mislead this House in order to get passed certain laws to eradicate the national spirit from the land. Sir, even the Law Member said that there is some risk in putting the detenus before courts of law. What is the risk? You can have the trials in camera. There were big cases of conspiracy for waging war, etc., in Chittagong and other similar cases which were all regularly tried and ended in punishment. Yet we often hear the old argument that if there is an open trial there is a danger to the witnesses and other people. My main contention is that the Government can devise any means it likes to eradicate the evil of terrorism but the method they have adopted is a wrong method. These measures will not really help Government to root out terrorism from this land.

Sir, Indian people have the greatest confidence in British justice. Even that is being shaken now and thereby the very foundation of the British Empire is being shaken. His Excellency the Viceroy is a mere constitutional Governor General and he is simply dittoing what is pressed by the Honourable Sir James Crear and Mr. Emerson. It is this unthinking Executive that is actually undermining the foundations of the British Empire. Sir, up to this time, people had great confidence in British justice; even the detenus, excluding the very poor people, could run to the High Court with some hope and confidence. But I cannot understand the mentality of the Executive. They wish to have all the powers to themselves destroying the Judiciary and the Legislature as if they are the only intelligent people in the whole of India. They want to crush the Legislature which is now a helpless body. They are also attempting to crush Judiciary.

My friend, the Deputy Leader of my Party, was referring me to certain passages in the Hindu about this very question of habeas corpus in the Calcutta High Court. But I do not wish to go into the legal side of the question. From the constitutional standpoint, I say that you should not interfere with the Legislature or the Judiciary. As regards the amendment under discussion, I made it quite clear even when Mr. Syke moved his amendment that Government are now trying to take the detenus out of the jurisdiction of the chartered High Courts. The Judiciary in these places has not the plenary and inherent powers of the chartered High Courts to restore the detenus to liberty even when they are imprisoned illegally. So the powers of the High Courts under Section 49 should not be interfered with.

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): Sir, after listening to the debate on clause 4 of the Bill, one is tempted to say something, especially after the speech which has been made by my Honourable friend Mr. K. Ahmed. He is a lawyer of the Calcutta High Court. (Mr. K. Ahmed questioned the pronunciation of the word "lawyer".) All right, I will call him a Barrister. He tried to support the Honourable the Law Member in a way which should call forth from the latter the remark "God save me from my friends". As a matter of fact, he has spoken as if he was a part of the police force. He was speaking with the authority of a constable who is dealing with a person whom he suspects to have committed an offence. My friend Mr. K. Ahmed in fact has pleaded that because the executive wants the power, the power should be given to them. If we are here to give the power to the executive simply because they ask for it, then the sooner we disperse the better for all concerned. Sir, we are here to see that the executive do not get more powers than ought to be given them in any civilised administration. That is the main object of our coming here. We are here to keep a vigilant eye over the executive. If they try to trespass upon the jurisdiction of the civil tribunals, it becomes our business, nay, our duty, to tell them: "Thus far and no further". We are of course here to strengthen their hands in eradicating any evil that props up its head in the country, but such a power must necessarily be of a temporary and emergent nature. Now, Sir, the terrorist movement came into existence some time in the early days of the partition agitation in Bengal. Since then, the Executive have been grasping at power after power ostensibly for the purpose of crushing this movement but so far it has not succeeded in doing so. Take, for instance, this Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, the supplementary of which we are discussing today. We know that this Act was first passed, rather certified, by the executive of the Bengal Government in 1925. It is seven years now, and the Government have not succeeded in crushing this movement. Rather what at present they say is, "In Bengal we have not been able to crush this movement for seven years, we now want to send them outside Bengal". If in seven years, they have not been able to crush this movement, is it not high time to revise their policy? Is it not reasonable to ask them, Sir, to think twice before we enlarge the further powers of Government in this respect? They are acting in the manner that the despots of old acted. People suffered from a grievance, which found expression in several ways. Instead of taking steps to remove the cause of grievance, persons giving expression to the grievance were persecuted and prosecuted, which resulted in further intensifying the discontent. The result was that in course of time both the despot and the Empire were swallowed up by that grievance. Similar is the phenomenon that is being seen today in India. For over a quarter of a century, from 1906 onwards, we have been trying to crush the revolutionary movement by methods which have been taken objection to by all serious minded people and by those people who whole-heartedly co-operated with the Executive in crushing that movement. The Government have failed to listen to them. The Executive went on in their mad career of getting more power and more power and still more power. If that power did not succeed, why not give a chance to the other side, why not listen to their advice and try to remove the cause which has given rise to this terrorist movement? The Government are not doing that. Even now we find in the settlement of the constitutional issue, the agents of the Government are raising side issues, some safeguards, some provisions, some 'ifs' and some 'buts' always with a view to postponing the settlement. The real grievance of the people is that they are not granted liberty in their own country, that they are not allowed to develop in their own manner. That is the real grievance. Instead of meeting the real grievance, instead of removing the real grievance, the Executive come forward and say "Look here, Sardar Sant Singh does not remain quiet, let us now send him to jail without trial". They may succeed in sending Sardar Sant Singh to jail without trial, but they are raising a resentment and bitterness in the minds of the relations of Sant Singh that is bound to recoil on their own heads later on. This is not the way of dealing with the situation. What is the latest method? The latest method is embodied in clause 4, and that is that the writ of habeas corpus should no longer be available to the persons detained under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. There seems to be some confusion as to the importance of the writ of habeas corpus in maintaining the rule of law in the country. What is the writ of habeas corpus? It is a redress, a relief against the illegality committed by the executive. The law is there; the law gives certain powers and defines these powers within the words of a section. The law arms you with certain power; if you use that power according to the law, the writ of habeas corpus cannot harm you. If, on the contrary, you abuse the letter of the law, or pretend to use the law against the liberty of any individual, at once the aggrieved party goes to the High Court, makes an application for a writ of habeas corpus to issue, and the High Court examines whether the actions of the Executive are within the law or without the law. It is a matter of history how many persons have been detained in jails and in lunatic asylums on the alleged ground that they were criminals and lunatics, how many of them were released later on by the High Courts on finding that this lunacy was not real, but it was only a pretence for detaining a man on account of jealousy or enmity of his enemies. How many times has not the High Court set aside the orders of the executive on the ground that they were illegal. If history abounds in such instances, where the High Court has found their attitude to be illegal, is it, Sir, unfair to suppose that the executive commits illegal acts? What is the check on the high-handedness of the executive? What legal sanction do you give to the people for the protection of their liberties? The only thing that is available for the redress of their grievances is the writ of habeas corpus. Its suspension can only be justified by the gravest emergency. Either we, on this side of the House, do not understand the meaning of the word "emergency" or the meaning of this word "emergency" has been widened to such an extent by the executive in India that it has lost its real significance. The term "emergency" has been utilised as a pretence for grasping more power by the executive. Similarly here you appeal in the name of emergency. But may I ask how long is this emergency going to last? From 1925 up till now this emergency has lasted, and yet you are not satisfied

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should address the Chair. He is now addressing the Members on the opposite Benches.

Sardar Sant Singh: I beg your pardon, Sir. How long is this emergency going to last, Sir, I ask the Honourable Members sitting on the Government Benches. This state of affairs has lasted for seven years now and during these seven years, the Government have not been able to get rid of this terrorist movement. Now, the Government are not in a position to give us any indication as to when they are going to end this emergency. If it has come to stay, as the Honourable the Law Member was constrained to admit, this will go on till the terrorist movement is crushed. In that case, my submission is that it becomes all the more our duty to oppose this measure. We oppose the executive for they are not adopting a course which is in the best interests of the country, or even in their own interests. The Honourable the Home Member may leave the shores of India one of these days, but he will be leaving behind a heritage of bitterness and resentment. He would have created a sense of vindictiveness and a sense of revenge in the people which will not be useful and which will not be in the best interests of the country or of the administrators. Therefore, my submission is that before they should proceed with clause 4, and before they persist in keeping this clause in the Bill, they should think twice whether they are furthering their own interests. Herein comes again the question whether the point that the Select Committee did not make any change in the Bill should furnish them with an argument that this House stands committed to the principle of the Bill. This is an argument, Sir, which has no force at all. It is unfortunate that the Select Committee should not have gauged the volume of opposition in the House. The very fact that this Bill has been debated for over four or five days goes to show that this side of the House is very much opposed to the principle underlying the Bill. The only thing which this House now insists upon is that protection should be given to the detenus by way of moving the High Court in cases where wrong persons or innocent persons have been detained without even following the procedure laid down in the Bill itself. It is a very ordinary and simple method by which the executive on the other side can please the Opposition by conceding this much to the Opposition. Therefore I will appeal once more both to the Honourable the Home Member and to the Honourable the Law Member to reconsider their position and see if they cannot bring themselves to accede to the amendment for the omission of clause 4.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar (Home Member): Mr. President, I have already addressed the House so many times, not only with regard to the general provisions of this Bill but with regard to the specific issues which arise on this particular clause, that I think it is quite unnecessary for me to indulge in reiteration. It is less necessary since the issues that have been raised on the debate upon this clause have been predominantly of a technical legal character. Apart from the fact that it is not my particular province to deal with technical points of jurisprudence, they have been so completely dealt with by my Honourable colleague the Law Member so fully elucidated by other Honourable and learned gentlemen present, that I do not propose to deal with them. I propose to touch only very briefly on two points of what I may call the executive aspect of the question. It has been pointed out by my Honourable colleague the Law Member that the most important respect in which this amendment would impinge upon the Bill and the Act which it seeks to supplement is in respect of section 4 of the local Act, that is to say, the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, which gives the police powers to detain up to a limit of 15 days, and which gives the Local Government power to order further detention pending the issue of an order under section 2. Now, the point I wish to make is this, that the provision in the local Act is in practice a provision of the most vital importance. The main purpose of the Act being indeed preventive and not punitive,—as was pointed out by the Law Member,—one of the most important directions in which prevention ought to be obtained is the prevention of an immediately impending terrorist outrage. And what has happened over and over again is this, that the police have obtained intimation from sources of a secret character of such an intention. The prompt arrest of two or three of the persons on that reasonable suspicion, which is referred to in the Act, has made it possible on more occasions than one to prevent the occurrence of such an outrage. It is also of very great importance indeed in dealing in a preventive manner—apart from the actual commission of an impending or known to be impending outrage—with the newly growing terrorist organisations or branches of existing terrorist organisations. What I wish to make clear to the House is that what I am now urging upon them is not a theoretical point but a practical one. It is a point which by experience has been found to be one of the greatest importance in practice if this local Act is to be given effect to properly; and it is for that reason,—regarding it purely from the practical point of view—that we are unable to accept the amendment to exclude this clause. I desire finally to point out that since the local Legislature and the Local Government have asked us to assist them in giving effect to this Act, this is one of the most important points involved and it is with regard to this particular point that I am particularly desirous that the House should discharge what I regard to be its duty and its responsibility, by enabling the Local Government to exercise effectively the powers under their own local Act.

Sir, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

“That clause 4 be omitted and clause 5 be renumbered as clause 4.”

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: Sir, the next amendment that stands in my name reads thus:

"That to clause 4 the following be added at the end:

"This clause shall be in force for one year only."

My previous amendment having been thrown out, it remains for me to make an appeal to this House at least to restrict the operation of the clause for one year only. I will, however, shortly state my reasons as to why I am moving this amendment after having failed with regard to my first amendment. My first reason is this: that we are on the eve of constitutional reforms, and it would be unfair and unwise on our part to legislate for a period for which the operation of this clause will be extended. We are all hoping that tremendous changes are going to happen. In these circumstances I think that it would be wise on our part to limit the operation of the clause only for one year.

My second reason for pressing this amendment for the acceptance of this House is this: of course it is said in high authoritative quarters that when the State is in danger, the high prerogative writ of habeas corpus may be suspended; but it should be suspended only for a short time and for a limited period, and that should be done only by the Legislature. I do not know exactly where that has been said, but I remember that is the proposition laid down by Lord Shaw in one of his judgments, and he has quoted from Blackstone. That is my second reason why the operation of this clause should be restricted to one year only; and I make an appeal to this House. . . .

An Honourable Member: Make your appeal to the other side. This side is always with you.

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: I make my appeal both to this side as well as the other, because I fear that many Honourable Members will not be in their seats at the time of voting. For these two reasons I move this amendment.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Mr. President, the Honourable gentleman who has moved this amendment had two main grounds: in fact two sole grounds as I understood him; first that India is on the eve of big constitutional reforms, and second, any suspension of the habeas corpus powers of the High Court should only be for a very limited period. I have a great deal of sympathy with both of those points of view. But what I would ask the House to regard is the practical aspect of the business. In the first instance, a proposal of this kind will not be reasonable unless we had some reasonable prospect that the exceptional conditions which require exceptional legislation are reasonably likely to be terminated within one year. Secondly, it is obviously a matter of the greatest importance that the supplementary legislation should be co-extensive and co-terminous in time with the local Bill which it proposes to supplement. If within the period which the local Act has still to run conditions did improve so much, if the terrorist movement in Bengal became extinct, then obviously the conditions necessitating the legislation would have ceased, and I have no manner of doubt that the local Legislature would repeal its own enactment and our own supplementary Act could cease to operate. But till those conditions are realised, I do not think it is reasonable for the Honourable Member opposite to expect us to accept an amendment limiting the operation of this important operative clause, which the House has already repeatedly accepted, to one year.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That to clause 4 the following be added at the end:

"This clause shall be in force for one year only'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The next amendment is from Mr. Sitaramaraju.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Sir, I move:

“That to clause 4 the following proviso be added—‘Provided, however, that the procedure laid down in the Act has been complied with.’”

In moving this amendment it is not necessary for me to speak at any great length, nor it is necessary for me to refer to the inherent powers of the High Courts after the very elaborate discussion we have had on the subject. My amendment, as I have just now read, does not seek to modify any of the provisions of the Bill itself notwithstanding the fact that it is a proviso, because the proviso says, you can have the Act as you will, and if you must have this drastic legislation, have it by all means, but if you want to have this legislation, then give a guarantee to the people that in case even this lawless law is not complied with, and if there has been a detention illegally made under the colour of this Act, there is a provision in the law itself to safeguard the citizens from such illegal detention. That is my proviso, and therefore I do maintain that the proviso does not modify any of the provisions of the Bill itself notwithstanding the fact that it is a proviso. It only seeks to show that by barring legal proceedings which you want under clause 4, we should be assured that, in case the procedure laid down in the Bengal Act has not been complied with, there will be available to the citizen the remedy provided under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. One would have thought that there could be no possible objection on the part of Government to a proviso like this, because the Government have the legislation they want; and I do not think that any reasonable man on the Government Benches can contend that there should also be a power reserved to the executive to exceed the bounds of law. Notwithstanding the very pointed questions asked by our Deputy Leader, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, and by our Leader, Sir Abdur Rahim, earlier on this debate, the Honourable the Home Member would not allow himself to be drawn out on that day. We wanted very much to know what possible objection there could be for Government to accept a provision like this. The question was specifically asked and the Honourable the Home Member, if I remember aright, said that he would disclose his views on the matter only when this amendment was moved. But the Law Member was not silent likewise. Sir, I must at this stage congratulate the Honourable the Law Member for the very refreshing candour with which he dealt with the subject, and I must also congratulate another gentleman on the Government Benches,—my Honourable friend, Dr. DeSouza, for the very correct view he has taken in the matter.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: And the great Barrister Mr. Kabiruddin Ahmed? (Laughter.)

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: What does that show? I am using almost the exact words of the Law Member. He said that the whole clause is revolting to him as it would be to any lawyer. All the implications involved in it are revolting to everybody who is fed on English jurisprudence, equity and common justice. Therefore, I am really thankful to the Honourable the Law Member for the candour with which he has stated the position, namely, that he is guided more by a policy to enact this.

legislation than by reason. He said that the purpose of this Bill is to substitute the executive will for judicial judgment. I may be permitted to say, Sir, with equal candour that if there is any grain of self-respect on this side of the House, then we should not be a party to a thing which seeks to substitute executive will for judicial judgment. But I do sympathise with the Honourable the Law Member because he is quite helpless and because he is guided by a policy over which he candidly said he has no control. However, Sir, in sympathising with him, I cannot but express my regret that, great lawyer as he is, the Honourable the Law Member has advanced an argument which, I am sure, he would on reflection find that it is not at all an argument that he of all people could have or should have advanced. He said that if the detention is legal, the High Court will not interfere; if the detention is illegal, then there is nothing that can prevent the High Court from interfering. And before I deal with the specific points raised by him I must now refer to another remark which he made earlier in the debate. It is with reference to the opinion expressed by Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyer—another great lawyer from Madras—on this provision in the Bill. Honourable Members of this House are perfectly aware that the Honourable the Law Member has himself quoted with approval the remarks of Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyer, the Advocate General of Madras, on the point

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Will you please raise your voice; I find it very difficult to hear you.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: He read the references to the regulations under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, which were made in that opinion. I would like to quote the following few lines from Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyer's opinion:

"If the conditions of the statute are satisfied, the detention is lawful and the High Court will not exercise the jurisdiction under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If, on the other hand, the detention is unlawful because the conditions of the Statute have not been fulfilled or the order has not been passed save by the proper authority, there is no reason why the subject should be deprived of his remedy under section 491 and the opportunity of obtaining relief in any part of the British Empire."

In view of the approval with which the Law Member has quoted Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyer, I hope the same approval would be accorded to this which I consider to be the important relevant operative portion of his opinion on the question before us, although he stated in that paragraph that the only redeeming feature of this objectionable law is that it was once allowed to be incorporated in a similar way. I do not think that can be cited as an argument which was advanced by Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyer in favour of the clause. This is all that was said, and that was the portion quoted by the Law Member. Here it is:

"I realise that there is this thing to be said in favour of the retention of clause 4, that section 491 already contains a provision to the effect that the remedy under the section is not available to persons detained under certain regulations, and so forth."

This was quoted as Sir Alladi's approval in answer to the point which was then raised by Sir Cowasji Jehangir. Reading the whole passage, even the Law Member with all the brilliancy of the advocacy which he can bring to bear upon it cannot make it other than a mere commonplace of advocacy on his part. Further, the Honourable the Law Member made mention about the sanction of this Legislature. This House never sanctioned it, and if the Council of State sanctioned it we know what the Council of State is composed of.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I protest against it.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Coming to that point that if the detention is lawful, then the High Court will not interfere and if the detention is unlawful, then the High Court cannot be prevented

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: Will the Honourable speaker speak a little louder? We find it difficult to follow him.

Mr. President: The Chair also finds it difficult to follow the Honourable Member.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: I am sorry I have been inconveniencing Honourable Members. If the detention is legal, then the High Court cannot interfere. This is a correct proposition with which we have no quarrel. As regards the other that if on the other hand the detention is illegal, then the High Court cannot be prevented from interfering. I would like to say that this requires some more elaborate explanation than what the Honourable the Law Member has given. If I remember aright, he was advancing the argument in answer to my friend Mr. Navalrai that the powers of a High Court are no more than the powers mentioned under section 491, and therefore if we are to be deprived of the powers vested in us under section 491 we are deprived of all. But if the general rights and privileges of the High Court are untouched and real, clause 4 itself would be without any effect. The Honourable the Law Member said, referring to the Calcutta case he mentioned the other day, that those powers are rendered ineffective by these provisions. I submit that the Honourable the Law Member cannot have it both ways. To put it in another way, it must be admitted, and I think that is sufficiently admitted by the Honourable the Law Member himself, that in cases where there has been illegal detention, even under the colour of this Act, then it is right that the victims of that illegal detention should be provided with some remedy. I think therefore that it can be assumed that illegal detention requires to be provided against. Section 491 is a remedy. If they are deprived of that there must be a remedy available. Now admitting that there is a remedy available to a person illegally detained somewhere in law, then I would like to ask where is this remedy to be found if we are deprived of section 491, for under sub-section (b) of section 491 there is a specific provision made that the High Court would interfere where there has been a case made out of illegal detention. That being so, it is incumbent upon the Law Member to tell us, for if these powers under section 491 are to be barred under clause 4, there must be a remedy available to a citizen to safeguard against that illegal detention. To my mind there is none. If there is one elsewhere, section 491 would not specifically provide a remedy for illegal detention. If there is illegal detention, then sub-section (b) is the only provision applicable. Now, if the whole of section 491 is taken away and debarred from being used.

then there must be another power vested somewhere. The Honourable the Law Member has not told us where that power exists. If I remember aright, in the course of the discussion on the last clause, he said that the general powers of the High Court could be made available for that purpose. If that is correct, then it would be open to the same objection which the Honourable the Law Member himself raised for rejecting clause 4. Therefore the position comes to this, this proviso is either necessary or not necessary. If it is necessary, then we must certainly have it. Assuming for the moment that it is not necessary and that there is a power reserved for the people elsewhere by which they can take action for illegal detention under this Act, assuming that such a power exists, which I deny, then this proviso could be considered at the worst only superfluous. May I respectfully ask the Law Member whether, by adding a proviso which is not objectionable on the ground that people illegally detained under the Act should be provided with a proper remedy, if it is only superfluous, it would offend the aesthetic sense of the draftsman of the Government who has drafted this Bill to add a proviso like this, and that a serious doubt has arisen and the point has been argued on the floor of the House by Honourable Members who are acquainted with the practice and procedure of law in this country.

Then there is another point. Taking the question also on its merits, what is this after all which we want? We say, let the Government have this law, drastic as it is, but let us have the proviso also, which says that even this lawless law should be complied with and where it is not a remedy should be made available to the people. Is it the contention of the Government that even if action is illegally taken under this Act by officials, they should have their own way? If that were the contention, then I would respectfully ask the Home Member as well as the Law Member. "Why have this Act at all?". I would tell them, "Suspend all laws altogether for the matter of that", because if it is the wish of the executive that no law should be respected by their officials, with what decency can anybody say that there should be any laws at all? Let them rule without laws and suspend all laws. Sir, in my humble opinion I think

5 P.M. that this proviso is the acid test of the bona fides of the Government (Hear, hear), as to whether, under the subterfuge and colour of this Act, they want their subordinate officials to take the law into their hands and do whatever they please, without there being any remedy available to the party aggrieved, without there being any right available to the ordinary citizen to question the vagaries of the Government's subordinate officials.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: You can see the Honourable the Home Member.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Sir, in all fairness to the Honourable the Law Member it must be said—to use his own words—that the whole thing is revolting from the point of view of a lawyer to him as well as to all of us. To us it is even more so, and I would respectfully request the Honourable the Law Member not to let the Government stultify themselves by taking shelter under the proposed legislation without offering a remedy even when their subordinate and higher officials have exceeded and abused the powers given to them by this House.

Before I conclude, I would like to say one thing more, and that is this. In the course of the Budget speech the Honourable the Finance Member the other day accused my Honourable friends from Bombay of sustaining a passion for self-inflicted injuries. Since then I have discovered that the malady is not confined at all to Bombay but it has been creating ravages in the ranks of the Government themselves.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: That is also from Bombay; Sir James Crerar is a Bombay Civilian.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Sir, these Ordinances, these drastic laws, whatever may be the hardships that they entail on the people, however much the people suffer, ultimately recoil on the Government which promulgates them. I say, Sir, every lathi blow given, every drastic legislation under the colour of law, even with the sanction of the Legislature like ours, that has been made here, is injurious to the prestige, good name and authority of the Government themselves. If not now, at least in the days to come it must recoil, and therefore I would say that that passion for self-inflicting injuries ascribed to the Bombay people is more in evidence here with the Government than it is anywhere else. Sir, I move.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 30th March, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 30th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CLAIMS OF BRITISH AND INDIAN SEAMEN IN BOMBAY.

1063. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether there was any correspondence between the Government of India and the Government of Bombay in regard to the equitable distribution of the sale proceeds of the Royal Alfred Sailors' Home, Bombay, between the claims of British and Indian seamen?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state how the claims of the British and Indian seamen out of the above sale proceeds were ultimately adjusted?

(c) If the answer to part (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to see to an equitable distribution of the sum of Rs. 4,44,375 between the claims of European seamen and Indian seamen?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) A letter received from the Indian National Steamship Owners' Association in regard to the disposal of the sale proceeds of the building of the Royal Alfred Sailors' Home was the subject of correspondence between the Government of India and the Government of Bombay.

(b) From the information available, it appeared that the Bombay Seamen's Society with which the Bombay Sailors' Home Society (which administered the Royal Alfred Sailors' Home) was amalgamated, was under no legal obligation to contribute any part of the sale proceeds towards any object connected with the welfare of Indian seamen. The Society however, made a voluntary donation of Rs. 1 lakh towards the construction of the building of the Indian Sailors' Home recently opened at Bombay.

(c) Does not arise.

NOMINATION OF INDIAN CHRISTIANS AS MEMBERS OF THE AJMER MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE.

1064. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the Indian Christians form a very small minority of the population of Ajmer?

(b) Is it also a fact that three Indian Christians have been nominated as members of the Ajmer Municipal Committee this year?

(c) If so, will Government state why no representatives of the Sikhs or Parsis—other minority communities—are not nominated?

Sir Evelyn Howell: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 1064, 1065 and 1066 together. The information is being collected and will be given to the House in due course.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask, Sir, whether Government will also call for information as to how many labour members there are on the Ajmer Municipality, and whether in view of the fact that Ajmer is a very important labour centre, they will also see that one labour member is appointed on the Ajmer Municipality?

Sir Evelyn Howell: Does that question arise, Sir?

NOMINATION OF A MUSSALMAN AS A MEMBER OF THE AJMER MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE.

†1065. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Will Government inform the House on what principle was a Mussalman nominated as a member of the Ajmer Municipality? Is it a fact that a number of seats are reserved for Mussalmans by election to the Municipal Committee?

(b) Is it a fact that the nomination of Hindus as members has been stopped? If so, on what grounds is this done in the case of Mussalmans?

NON-NOMINATION OF A MEMBER OF THE DEPRESSED CLASSES TO THE AJMER MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE.

†1066. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the depressed classes of Ajmer made a representation to the Commissioner of Ajmer for nomination of one of their community on the Committee?

(b) If so, what were the reasons for the rejection of their application?

RECRUITMENT OF SIKH PACKERS AND POSTMEN IN THE DELHI HEAD POST OFFICE.

1067. Sardar Sant Singh: Is it a fact that there is no Sikh postman and packer in Delhi Head Office and its town sub-offices? Are Government prepared to call for the explanation of the official concerned who had ignored Government orders repeatedly issued in connection with the recruitment of the minority communities? Do Government propose to issue instructions to the officers in charge of recruitment to appoint Sikhs in future till the number of the Sikh community is fully completed?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: With your permission, Sir, I propose to take questions Nos. 1067, 1068 and 1069 together. Each of these questions contains the suggestion that in making appointments in certain offices a certain reservation should be made in favour of members of the Sikh community. The steps taken by Government in securing representation of minority communities (including Sikhs) in all services in the Posts and Telegraphs Department are as already stated in the reply given to the Honourable Member's own starred question No. 728 in this House on the 9th March, 1932. Government regret that they cannot take any further steps specially in favour of the Sikh community.

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1064.

RECRUITMENT OF SIKH CLERKS IN THE DELHI HEAD POST OFFICE.

†1068. Sardar Sant Singh: Is it a fact that the number of the Sikh clerks in the Delhi Head and town sub-offices and in the R. M. S. D. Division is very poor? If so, are Government prepared to issue necessary instructions to the Postmaster, Delhi, and the Superintendent R. M. S. D. Division to recruit members of the Sikh community in future to give them their proper share?

APPOINTMENT OF SIKHS AS SUB-POSTMASTERS IN DELHI.

†1069. Sardar Sant Singh: Is it a fact that there are 21 sub-offices under Delhi Head Post Office and members of the following communities are working as Sub-Postmasters (12 Hindus, eight Muhammadans, and one Sikh)? Are Government prepared to issue necessary instructions to the official concerned to post at least 33 per cent. members from the Sikh community to work as Sub-Postmasters to give a proper share to the minority communities?

REGISTRATION OF PARTNERSHIP FIRMS UNDER THE INCOME-TAX-ACT.

1070. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that Income-tax Officers refuse to register partnership firms under section 2 (14) of the Income-tax Act?

(b) Have any rules been framed for the guidance of the Income-tax Officers? If so, will Government kindly lay such rules on the table?

(c) If not, do Government propose to make rules for the guidance of such officers?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The implication of the question as put is certainly not correct. Recently one case has been brought to the notice of the Central Board of Revenue in which it was alleged that an Income-tax Officer had incorrectly refused to register an instrument of partnership, under section 26-A. of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The Board has called for a report in regard to it, in order to see whether the order was as a matter of fact incorrect.

(b) Yes. Statutory rules 2 to 6 framed under the Indian Income-tax Act (pages 65-67, Income-tax Manual, 4th edition). There are also some executive instructions in paragraph 10 of the Instructions appended to the Income-tax Manual, a copy of which will be found in the Library.

(c) Does not arise.

SUBSTITUTION OF AIR FORCE UNITS FOR ARMY UNITS IN THE DEFENCE OF THE FRONTIER.

1071. Mr. Arthur Moore: Will Government please say:

(a) why the report of the Howell Committee on the possibility of substitution of Air Force units for Army units in the defence of the Frontier has not been published;

(b) whether the findings of the Committee were unanimous; and

(c) whether it is proposed to give effect to them?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The Committee was appointed to consider the whole question of frontier tribal control and defence in all its aspects, one of which was the possibility of the extended use of the air arm. As regards the publication of its report, the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given in the Assembly to starred question No. 284 asked by Mr. S. C. Mitra on the 15th September last.

(b) The Committee's findings were unanimous on all the questions referred to it.

(c) The only definite recommendation for air substitution put forward by the Committee was the reduction of certain army unit on the assumption that a Heavy Transport Squadron would be added to the strength of the Royal Air Force by 1933-34. Owing to financial circumstances it is not possible to proceed with the formation of a Heavy Transport Squadron at present. Some of the reductions recommended by the Committee have, however, been carried out, and others are still under consideration.

Mr. Arthur Moore: If one of the arguments for the provision of the Heavy Transport Squadron was that it would lead to economy, may I ask why financial stringency should prevent the ordering of the Heavy Transport Squadron?

Mr. G. M. Young: The formation of a Transport Squadron would involve initial expenditure of certainly not less than half a crore, and its maintenance may be taken roughly as equivalent to the maintenance of three Battalions of Indian Infantry. It is not until economies can be effected which would make good that expenditure that it would pay to proceed with the formation of a Heavy Transport Squadron.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it not a fact that the Howell Committee suggested a saving in expenditure on ground troops and an expansion of the Air Force on the Frontier as a measure of defence?

Mr. G. M. Young: I have already given the only definite recommendation for air substitution in my answer.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Would not the recommendation of the Howell Committee, if given effect to, have resulted in a saving of expenditure on the Frontier defence?

Mr. G. M. Young: It is a matter of opinion whether air substitution will result in an appreciable net saving.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: My question was if the recommendation of the Howell Committee is given effect to, will it not result in a marked saving in the expenditure on the defence of the Frontier?

Mr. G. M. Young: I must ask for notice of that question.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it not given in the first part of the question?

(No answer.)

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Do the Government of India agree to the recommendation that the ground forces should be replaced gradually by air forces?

Mr. G. M. Young: I do not know to what recommendation my Honourable friend is referring, but as was stated by the Foreign Secretary in reply to the question on the 15th September last, the report contains a good deal of information the publication of which is not in the public interest and so it has not been published.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Do Government propose to publish it?

Mr. G. M. Young: No, Sir.

ABOLITION OF THE LOWEST SELECTION GRADE EXAMINATION FOR THE POST OFFICE.

1072. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that a departmental examination, called the Lowest Selection Grade Examination, was held in the Post Office in the years 1929 and 1930 according to the rules contained in Director General's Special General Circulars No. 22, dated the 16th October, 1929, and No. 16, dated the 18th August, 1930, and in the Post and Telegraph Manual, Vol. IV?

(b) Is it a fact that it was definitely stipulated in these rules that the examination would be held annually and that all promotions from the ordinary time-scale of pay to the Lowest Selection Grade would be made only from the passed officials?

(c) Is it a fact that the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, has since abolished this examination by his Special General Circular No. 46, dated the 3rd March, 1932?

(d) If the reply to part (a) above be in the affirmative, will Government please state the reasons which actuated them to introduce the examination?

(e) If the reply to part (c) above be in the affirmative, will Government please give the reasons which have now led to the abolition of the examination?

(f) Is it a fact that Sir B. N. Mitra the then Honourable Member in charge of the Industries and Labour Department, announced that the examination was necessary as a basis for selection of officials for promotion to the lowest selection grade posts, and as a remedy for inefficiency and favouritism?

(g) If the reply to part (f) be in the affirmative, will Government please state the reasons which have led them to depart from their own principle and whether the abolition of the examination is accompanied by some safeguards which will not again make room for the evils which it was designed to combat?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a), (b) and (c). Yes.

(d) and (e). The Honourable Member is referred to my replies to the supplementary questions asked by Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad in connection with Mr. S. C. Mitra's starred question No. 792 in this House on the 14th March, 1932.

(f) Government have not been able to trace any announcement of the kind to which the Honourable Member refers.

(g) Does not arise, but the point which the Honourable Member has in mind will not be overlooked.

PROMOTIONS TO THE LOWEST SELECTION GRADE IN THE POST OFFICE.

1073. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Are Government aware that while some of the officials who passed the Lowest Selection Grade examination in the years 1929 and 1930 have already been confirmed in the selection grade, others are officiating in the grade by virtue of the rules framed by Government and many more are still in the waiting list in the Calcutta General Post Office?

(b) Is it a fact that the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, has laid down in his Circular No. 46, dated the 3rd March, 1932, that with effect from the 15th March, 1932, all promotions to the lowest selection grade will be made from amongst senior officials who have known capabilities and past good records irrespective of whether they have passed the selection grade examination or not?

(c) Is it the intention of Government to revert the passed officials who have long been officiating in the grade and bring in the officials who failed to pass or did not appear at the examination?

(d) Is it the desire of Government that the passed officials who have not yet been confirmed in the lowest selection grade are to receive differential treatment from those who have already been confirmed?

(e) If the reply to part (c) be in the negative, will Government please state how they propose to safeguard the interests of the passed officials so long borne on the waiting list?

(f) Are Government aware that the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam, allowed a large number of posts in the selection grade to remain vacant, to the detriment of passed officials?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes, except in the case of promotions to the posts of Inspectors and Postal Divisional Head Clerks and of Accountants and Assistant Accountants in the Lowest Selection Grade.

(c) The revised procedure will not affect the officiating arrangements made prior to its introduction.

(d) As the passing of the examination was not the only condition for promotion and as seniority of passed officials for purposes of promotion was based on their seniority in the general gradation list, irrespective of the date of passing the examination, no question of differential treatment appears to arise.

(e) It is considered that the interests of all concerned will be protected by the measures referred to in parts (b) and (c).

(f) Yes, in view of possible retrenchment of such posts.

EXPENDITURE INCURRED IN CONDUCTING THE LOWEST SELECTION GRADE EXAMINATION IN THE POST OFFICE.

1074. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: Will Government please lay on the table a statement showing the detailed expenditure they incurred in conducting the Lowest Selection Grade Examination in the years 1929-30?

Mr. T. Ryan: The information has not been compiled and the preparation of a detailed statement would involve an expenditure, time and labour, out of proportion to the advantage to be gained.

OVERTIME ALLOWANCE PAID FOR SORTING ENGLISH MAIL.

1075. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the sorting of the Inward English mail was hitherto done by staff on overtime allowance in Calcutta, Bombay, Rangoon and other important stations?

(b) Are Government aware that the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam, has withdrawn overtime allowance from some of the officials working in connection with the sorting of English mail and also reduced the rate?

(c) Have Government authorised the Postmaster General to do so?

(d) If not, will Government please state the reasons why this was done?

Mr. T. Ryan: With your permission, Sir, I shall to deal with questions Nos. 1075, 1076 and 1077 together.

Information in respect of the various points is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House.

OVERTIME ALLOWANCE PAID FOR SORTING ENGLISH MAIL.

†1076. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Are Government aware that the Postmasters General, Bengal and Assam, has directed the Presidency Postmaster, Bengal, to select auxiliaries from some departments of the Calcutta General Post Office and all non-delivery Town Sub-Offices and to direct them to work on Sunday, in connection with the English mail without overtime allowance?

(b) Is it a fact that the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs issued a Circular directing the officers of the Department to allow the staff as much relaxation as possible on Sunday, and Post Office Holidays?

(c) If the reply to part (b) be in the affirmative, will Government please state reasons why the Post Master General has curtailed the concession hitherto enjoyed by them?

OVERTIME ALLOWANCE PAID FOR SORTING ENGLISH MAIL.

†1077. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please say whether the Postmasters General of other Provinces have issued orders to draft auxiliaries from the Department and non-delivery Town Sub-offices and to compel them to work in the foreign mail section on Sunday, without any overtime allowance?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government please state in detail the procedure adopted in those Provinces?

INTRODUCTION OF LOWER DIVISION CLERKSHIPS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

1078. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that Government have accepted many recommendations of the Posts and Telegraphs Retrenchment Committee and decided to introduce lower division clerkships in the Postal Department?

(b) If so, will Government please state whether orders have been issued to give effect to the scheme?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1075.

(c) If the reply to part (b) be in the affirmative, will Government please say whether the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam, has given effect to the orders? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes, as circumstances permit.

(c) Government have no reason to suppose that their orders are not being carried out, but steps are being taken to prevent any oversight.

RETIREMENT OF POSTAL OFFICIALS OF 55 YEARS OF AGE OR 30 YEARS' SERVICE.

1079. Mr. Uppi Sahab Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Finance Department of the Government of India has issued a notification that in order to give effect to the retrenchment proposals, officials who have completed 55 years of age or 30 years' service will have to retire?

(b) If so, will Government please say whether Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, will abide by these orders?

(c) Are Government aware that the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam, and the Presidency Postmaster, Calcutta have recently granted extensions of service to some officials?

(d) Do Government propose to direct the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, to issue orders for retirement of officials, who are on extension of service or have completed 55 years of age or 30 years' service and to fill up the resultant vacancies by lower division clerks?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The orders referred to by the Honourable Member do not contemplate the entire suspension of the ordinary rules regarding the retention of officials in service.

(b) The Director General appreciates the expediency of abiding by orders issued to him.

(c) No.

(d) The matter is receiving attention and suitable orders will be issued.

PROMOTION OF POSTMEN AS LOWER DIVISION CLERKS.

1080. Mr. Uppi Sahab Bahadur: (a) Have Government decided to promote some qualified postmen as lower division clerks?

(b) Is it a fact that the Postmasters General of some Provinces have already issued orders for recruitment of lower division clerks from postmen?

(c) If so, will Government please state the reason why the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam, has not yet done so?

(d) Do Government propose to issue orders to the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam to do so now?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d). Government presume that their orders are being carried out, but as I have just stated, in reply to question No. 1078, steps are being taken to guard against oversight.

RENT PAID FOR THE BOW BAZAR POST OFFICE.

1081. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Bow Bazar Post Office (Calcutta) is located in a three-storied building?

(b) Is it a fact that the Post Office has occupied only half the space of the building?

(c) Is it a fact that Government are paying rent for the whole building?

(d) If the reply to parts (a), (b) and (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what amount has since been paid by them, by way of rent for the portion of the building lying vacant?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) No. The ground and first floors are leased by the post office.

(c) No.

(d) Does not arise.

RE-EMPLOYMENT OF RETRENCHED OFFICERS.

1082. Pandit Satyendranath Sen: (a) Will Government please state whether in filling up the future vacancies in the respective grades of the different departments they intend to consider the claims of the officers who have been either discharged or made to retire with a nominal pension in pursuance of the present retrenchment policy?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, will the claims of such officers have priority over those of outsiders? If not, why not?

(c) If the answer to part (a) is in the negative, will Government please state reasons?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) So far as the establishments of the Government of India and its attached offices, who recruit through the Public Service Commission, are concerned, the claims of permanent men who have been retrenched and are considered suitable for re-employment will be considered.

(b) Yes.

(c) Does not arise.

ARREARS OF PAY OF A DRIVER IN A MULE CORPS.

1083. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that no technical difficulties are put in the way of ex-sepoys and followers of the Indian Army while they claim their arrears of pay, allowances, gratuity, and undischarged credit balances, etc., lying in their units?

(b) If so, is it a fact that a sum of Rs. 564-11-6 belonging to a driver No. 431 of the 37th Mule Corps was kept lying with the unit as an undischarged credit balance for many years till 16th February, 1932, when it was sent through a special attorney, vide letter No. 1155/1277-E., dated 16th February, 1932?

(c) Was no petition regarding this sum received from the aforesaid driver since his discharge?

(d) Was not any attempt made by the officer in charge to send this sum to the aforesaid driver?

(e) Was it difficult for the officer in charge to ascertain whether the driver had left the old residence shown in his attestation papers?

(f) If not, how do Government make sure that the aforesaid driver was given all possible facilities or at least as much facility as they afford to the attorney to claim credit balances due to ex-sepoys and drivers?

(g) Will Government please state the reasons for detaining such heavy sums of the poorly paid drivers and other ranks for many years, and to resort to indirect methods for disposing of the undisbursed credit balances?

(h) What amount of undisbursed credit balances has thus been paid by the officer in charge, I. A. S. C. Records, Dagshai, since the publication of A. I. (I.) A-16 of 1927?

Mr. G. M. Young: I have called for the records of the case and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

TIME-BARRING OF DISABILITY PENSION CLAIMS.

299. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) With reference to the answer given on 12th February, 1932, to starred question No. 289, parts (a) and (b), will Government please state if their action in declaring disability pension claims as time-barred [vide A. I. (I.) 418 of 5th May, 1925 and B.-342 of 28th December, 1926], was not in contravention of their early declaration contained in "Field Service Regulations" as were in force in the years 1916 to 1924?

(b) Is it not against the practice recognised by the Ministry of Pensions for British casualties as contained in "The official History of the War" (Casualties and medical statistics) issued by the Ministry of Pensions in 1931, and in which under the heading "Comparative Analysis of War disablement" on page 319 it is stated: "First, the conditions which did not appear in evidence as war disablement until after demobilization are analyzed—in other words, the post-war emergence of war disablement. By this means a broad indication is given of the extent to which there was a continuous unknown factor in the summation of the states responsibilities, due to delayed but acceptable claims for compensation for war disablement"?

(c) Are not the disability pensions of Indian ranks chargeable to His Majesty's Exchequer? If so, why should a fundamentally different treatment be announced by the Government of India for Indian disabled sepoys?

(d) Does not the responsibility of Government to initiate investigation in first claims to disability pensions recorded in their registers as "disabled and invalided" extend to the Great War ex-soldiers as it does to serving soldiers (vide Government reply to the question quoted above)?

Mr. G. M. Young: The matter is being examined and a reply will be given later.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

300. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the fact that the Ministry of Pensions have issued a "History of the Great War", a "General History of Medical Services", and "Diseases of the War", wherein the fact with regard to the faulty equipment of personnel and stores, inexperience of the majority of diseases prevailing in different climates, and of the new diseases born of war conditions have been officially recognised?

(b) If so, will Government please state whether they have issued instructions to their medical boards to keep in mind the experience of the extraordinary conditions prevailing in the theatres of the Great War, as reflected in these official histories?

(c) If not, are Government prepared to allow any licensed medical practitioner to appear before their medical boards, on behalf of disabled sepoys, to represent the sepoys' interest? Are Government aware that this practice is in vogue in England in War Pension Appeal Tribunals?

Mr. G. M. Young: The matter is being examined and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

INVESTIGATION OF MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

301. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the initiative to investigate claims to family pension of the Indian ranks dying in service overseas, in military hospitals, or on the way to their homes rests with Government, in view of the facts of the casualty not being known to the heirs of the deceased?

(b) If so, will Government kindly refer to letter No. G./4/4116, dated 29th January, 1932, of the Deputy Controller of Military Pensions rejecting a claim to family pension on the ground that the Government of India do not regard the death of the individual in question to be attributable to military service for the purpose of granting a family pension?

(c) What is the purpose mentioned in that letter and what is the difference that Government recognise between 'death attributable to military service' and 'death attributable to military service for the purposes of pensions'?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes, but the reason is not that the facts of the casualty are not known to the heirs of the deceased but that this procedure saves time and assists the heir, who may be illiterate, a minor, or a female unacquainted with regulations. The heir (or next-of-kin) is informed of the casualty as soon as the regimental depot receives the information.

(b) and (c) (first part). The phraseology used by the Government of India in the Army Department when intimating that a claim to a family pension has been rejected is as follows:

"The Government of India have decided that the cause of the death of.....cannot be viewed as attributable to military service for the purpose of the grant of a family pension to his heir."

This phraseology refers to paragraph 249 of the Pension Regulations, which runs:

“Family pensions and children’s allowances are admissible in cases where the cause of death is attributable to military service.”

(c) (second part). No difference is intended.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

302. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to letter No. Pen./15/1315, dated 15th June, 1927, of the Controller of Military Pension Accounts, Southern and Western Commands, giving a ruling that no communication in respect of a military pensioner will be addressed to an attorney engaged by a pensioner?

(b) Are Government aware that the Officer-in-charge Records, 2/113 Infantry (vide his letter No. 2/113/2/1231, dated 19th September, 1927) and Adjutant, 3/9th Jat Regiment, Hongkong, (vide his letter No. A./24/1/486, dated 21st March, 1931), gave a ruling to the effect that petitions drafted or addressed by an agent of the pensioner will not be accepted though submitted under the signature of the pensioner?

(c) Will Government please state under what statutory authority the ruling was given in the aforesaid letters?

(d) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, what facilities are provided for the pensioners and their heirs when they happen to be illiterate and ignorant of the designation and location of the war unit in which they served? What consideration, if any, is given to the claimants in such cases against applying the time-limit?

Mr. G. M. Young: Inquiries are being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

303. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Will Government please state if they do maintain Casualty Registers in their units for the casualties incurred in the Great War? If so, was it not incumbent upon the Commandants to submit their claims for compensations, in time? Are Government aware that the practice of taking the initiative by the Commandants, in respect of pensionary awards, in majority of cases, deluded the remaining personnel in whose cases initiative was alike expected to be taken by Government, but the same was not taken?

(b) Do Government contemplate redressing the wrong so done by allowing full arrears of pensions?

Mr. G. M. Young: The matter is being examined and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

304. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that after putting in 15 years service, a sepoy is entitled to pension and also entitled to be released from the military service? If so, why should full pensions be forfeited and disallowed on the ground that the cause of discharge cannot be traced? Is it not the practice to show the cause of discharge on one's discharge certificate?

(b) If not, is not the individual given the benefits of a regular discharge in such cases if the cause of discharge is not shown on account of the negligence of the officials?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) First portion—Yes, if a state of war does not exist or is not impending.

Second portion—The Government of India are not aware of any such case.

Third portion—Yes.

(b) Does not arise.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

305. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that an Indian officer after 20 years service is entitled to an ordinary pension and also to be released from the military service?

(b) Is it also a fact that a certain number of these officers were not so released and pensioned, and their term extended in the interest of the State?

(c) Is it true that later on they were dismissed, irrespective of the facts that they were mentioned in despatches by the General Officers Commanding, and irrespective of the fact that but for their retention in the interest of the State, they would have earned an ordinary pension, as soon as they had put in 20 years' service?

(d) Do Government propose to look into such cases, and to arrange that their ordinary pension earned by them be not affected by their retention ordered in the interest of the State?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) He is eligible for pension and for release from military service, but not necessarily entitled.

(b) Yes.

(c) I am afraid I cannot reply to this question unless the Honourable Member gives me details of specific cases.

(d) No. It is open to an officer who feels that he is unjustly treated to submit a petition through the proper channel. This, when received, is carefully considered by Government.

MILITARY PENSION CLAIMS.

306. Sardar Sant Singh: Are Government aware that in cases where the title to a disability pension, family pension or demobilisation pension is established after long correspondence of several years, the practice to grant pensions is from the date of the sanction, which debars the claimant from any arrears at all? Is it not against the practice hitherto followed by the Army Department? What are the reasons for this deviation from the established principles and practice?

Mr. G. M. Young: The general practice is not as described by the Honourable Member. The remainder of the question does not arise.

DEATH OF MR. F. W. ALLISON.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Mr. President, the hand of death is again heavy upon us. This morning, on arrival at the Assembly, I learnt with very deep sorrow of the death of one who was amongst us a few days ago, I mean Mr. Allison. The only news we have on this subject is to be found in the Times of India, from which it appears that soon after setting sail from Bombay, I think on the 22nd of this month, Mr. Allison was seized with pneumonia and passed away on the 28th or 29th. Mr. Allison had completed 30 years of service, and I believe was on his way to England with the intention of not returning to India, but of finally retiring. The tragedy of it of course is he never reached the shores of his home but was removed by the hand of death during the voyage. What that must mean to his wife and daughter who were with him on the ship is easy to imagine. Mr. Allison was nominated five times as a Member of the Assembly and twice acted as Chief Government Whip. His contribution to our debates were infrequent, but he always spoke weightily and was always heard by the House with attention and respect. On the official Benches many of us feel we have lost a very close friend whom we shall miss deeply. But his duties as Chief Whip and his kindly personality brought him into touch with Members in every part of the House, and I do not for a moment doubt that the regret is as deep and the sympathy as sincere on the non-official Benches as on the official Benches. I feel it difficult, Mr. President, to say all that I should like to say, and perhaps on these occasions few words are the best. But I am sure that you will be interpreting rightly the wishes of the whole House if you will communicate to the bereaved widow and daughter the expression of our deep sympathy and sorrow.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to associate myself and my party with every word that the Honourable the Leader of the House has uttered. When I came to this House a few minutes ago, I learnt with a shock that Mr. Allison had passed away. Who could have imagined when he left us so hale to look at, that he would soon be removed from the scene of his earthly activities? We, on this side of the House, always looked upon Mr. Allison as a good friend of India, and as the Chief Whip of Government he always impressed us with his genial good manners. We always felt in his company that we were in the company of one who loved India truly and sincerely. His armour was his honest thought and simple truth his utmost skill, and whether in this Legislature or out in the country he was animated by a true spirit of service. When I was in England in 1927, Mr. Allison and I went round the House of Commons, and he was touchingly reminding me of the fact that India would, ere long, have a great Parliament of her own, and if in his retirement India should need his services, he would be very cheerful and glad to work in a self-governing India of the future. His love of India was deep and genuine. He was one of those men who always thought that his place was in this country, to which he gave his very best and the best of us could not have given better. Sir, he was like the Happy Warrior who comprehended his trust and to the same kept faithful with a singleness of aim. Deep and genuine is our grief, for he was one of those great men who has honestly, every minute of his life in this country, served her in a spirit of service which can never die. Of men like Mr. Allison, it may be truly said:

"Alike are life and death
When life in death survives
And the uninterrupted breath
Inspires good many lives "

Sir, deep is our sorrow, and every one sitting behind me associates himself with every word that the Honourable the Leader of the House has uttered. We deeply sympathise with the bereaved family whose only consolation in their great calamity is that a larger family,—his friends, share their loss.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I rise to associate myself and the Independent Party with the vote of condolence that has just been moved. It is very rare indeed in any Legislature that on two days running, we should have to move votes of condolence on the death of our Members. I was personally associated with Mr. Allison for a very long time. He was, as you know, a Bombay Civilian. He acted as Legal Remembrancer of Government with great distinction, for a number of years. He also acted as a High Court Judge, and I can personally testify to the very valuable services he rendered to his Government. He was for many years a Member of this Honourable House, and I understand he acted as the Chief Whip of Government on more than one occasion. We from Bombay feel the loss all the more,—if I may say so—having been associated with him for many years and having learnt to appreciate his value and his worth during our long connection. He died under tragic circumstances; he died going home on the eve of retirement. And I am sure the whole House will condole with his wife and daughter who were with him and whom we all knew so well in Delhi. I associate myself personally and my party with this vote of condolence to his family.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it was a great shock to me when I learnt on entering this House today that Mr. Allison, who was dining and lunching with us only on the 20th of this month, has passed away so tragically. I knew Mr. Allison in the last Assembly when he acted as Chief Whip, and I can fully testify to the fact that his word carried great weight. Everybody who came in contact with Mr. Allison had a great regard for him and had implicit faith in whatever he said. We all believed that he always meant what he said, and in this way he carried great weight with everybody. He was respected not only by the Government supporters and Government Members, but also by the Opposition, and on many occasions in the last Assembly I found that Mr. Allison's personality was the chief cause of getting many people to the side of Government when he talked with them on important questions. Mr. Allison was, I believe, much respected by the Bar Associations of Bombay, and the parties and addresses that were presented to him shortly after his term as a High Court Judge show the respect that the Bombay people and the Bombay Bar had for him. It is a tragedy to lose a friend and one who was always a useful friend in the past. Sir, I associate myself and my party with the vote of condolence which has been moved and I fully sympathise with Mrs. Allison and Miss Allison, who are probably having a very bad time on the boat without any friends.

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): Mr. President, we should like to be identified with this motion, and our deepest sympathy goes out to Mr. Allison's wife and daughter.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I take part in this sorrow that the Assembly has to bear today on the sad death of Mr. Allison. He was a Member of the first reformed Assembly, and since that time we have been great friends. Sir, Mr. Allison was a true model of a member of the Indian Civil Service. He had a genial disposition and temperament, and his death has left a great void. It is difficult to find a gentleman of such a high order. He was in the Bombay Civil Service, where from a Magistrate he rose to the Secretariat and by dint of his learning and knowledge of law, he was raised to the position of Legal Remembrancer to the Government of Bombay. I had very often legal discussions with him on several points that cropped up in this House and I found him a great authority on these matters. He was finally elevated to the High Court Bench in Bombay. Sir, we also mixed with him socially, and with his little daughter whom we miss today but who was a familiar figure in this Assembly building and who used to paint pictures here. Sir, only yesterday we were mourning the death of one of our old Members and it is very sad that within 24 hours we have to mourn the loss of another Member. Mr. President it is a great loss. In private talks I found that he was a pro-Indian reformer. He had good intentions and sympathised with India's aspirations. If he had lived for a few more years, he would have been a great acquisition for the future constitution of this country. I join with the Leader of the House and the Leaders of other parties and associate myself with them in the feelings that they have expressed. It is only fitting that a Resolution like the one moved by the Leader of the House should go over your signature, Sir, to the members of the bereaved family—his wife and daughter, and probably his son, who might be in college. With these few words, I support the Resolution moved by the Leader of the House.

Mr. President: The Chair wishes to associate itself with all that has fallen from Honourable Members in lamenting the sad loss which has been sustained by the passing away of Mr. Allison. It is tragic to contemplate that Mr. Allison was here only a few days ago, participating in public service for which this Assembly is called into being. Mr. Allison was a Bombay Civilian and as such we have all come in direct contact with him. We admired his charm of manner and his judicial temperament which resulted in his making many close friends from amongst all those with whom he came into contact. It is indeed a sad loss which has been sustained, and the Chair wishes only to add that it will communicate the unanimous feeling, in the House, of sorrow and sympathy for the members of the bereaved family.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 725, and unstarred question No. 78.

APPOINTMENT OF SIKHS IN THE CURRENCY OFFICE, LAHORE.

Starred Question No. 735.

- (a) Yes, except that the number of Hindus is now 56.
- (b) This is a matter of opinion. No specific proportions have been laid down by Government for the various communities.
- (c) Instructions for securing the appointment of members of minority communities have been issued and no further orders are considered to be necessary.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT OF BIHAR AND ORISSA.

Unstarred Question No. 73.

- (a) The numbers are Inspector Accountants 11—Ministerial officers 25.
- (b) The ordinary rule is that Assistant Commissioners are authorised to make clerical appointments in Income-tax Offices, subject to the general control of the Commissioner of Income-tax. The appointments were advertised in the Indian Nation, the Utkal Dipika and the Local Government Gazette.

(c) The number of applicants was as follows:—

	Hindus.	Moslems.	Christians.	Total.
Inspector-Accountants .	233	57	8	298
Clerks	330	74	6	410

(d) 9 of the appointments of Inspector-Accountants were estimated to last for a period of 15 months, and of these two were given to Moslems, the other two (which were expected to last for three months) were given to Hindus.

Of 10 clerical appointments resulting from the lowering of the taxable limit, filled by the Assistant Commissioner, Ranchi Range, one was given to a Moslem, and of 15 similar appointments in the Patna Range, 4 were given to Moslems.

(e) These appointments were reported to the Commissioner of Income-tax in due course and approved.

(f) As the Honourable Member is aware, the orders laid down by Government require that one-third of the vacancies should be filled from minority communities, but no percentage has been fixed for any particular minority community. I have examined the figures and am satisfied that the orders have been observed, and that Muslims have obtained an adequate share of the appointments.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE CENTRAL ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR RAILWAYS.

Mr. President: Honourable Members will now proceed to elect six non-official Members to the Central Advisory Council for Railways. There are 9 candidates whose names are printed on the ballot paper which will now be supplied to Honourable Members in the order in which I call them.

(The Ballot was then taken.)

THE BENGAL CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT (SUPPLEMENTARY) BILL.—contd.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, as reported by the Select Committee.

Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar (Madras City: Non-Muham-Madan Urban): Mr. President, if I take part in this debate, it is because I have still a lurking hope that the arguments advanced on any side of the House may have some bearing on decisions which the House may come to. (An Honourable Member. "Then you have a moderate mentality?") I support the amendment moved by my friend Mr. Sitaramaraju, which I believe is a very moderate and a very modest amendment, which is to add the proviso, "Provided however that the procedure laid down in the Act has been complied with". It seems to me that, unless the Government take an absolutely unreasonable attitude, there can be no question that this amendment is a justifiable amendment. There are various powers given under the Criminal Procedure Code to the Local Governments and to officers of Government. What method of check do the Government propose in order to see that the very procedure that has been prescribed by that Act is followed? If they take away, by section 4, the right which the accused has got to invoke section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, what else is left to him in case any officer does not follow the mandatory provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act? It is required that no person shall be detained in custody under this section by an officer of Government for a period exceeding 15 days, save under a special order of the Local Government. Supposing a person is detained for a period exceeding 15 days and the Local Government do not pass a special order under that section, then what is to happen? Then again, in any case an officer cannot detain any person for a period exceeding one month unless an order under section 2 is passed by the Local Government. Supposing the Local Government do not pass an order under section 2 and the detention continues, has the detained person no right at all? The amendment proposes only to deal with those particular methods of procedure which have been prescribed under the Act and which have been made mandatory by the provisions of the Act for the officers and the Local Governments to carry out. Again under section 2, in the first proviso, it is said that the Local Government, at the end of one year from the date of making the order, shall review its order and that it shall not remain in force for more than one year unless, upon review, the Local Government directs its continuance. Suppose some Secretary or some official in the Government forgets to put up the file before the Home Member of the Local Government, and that the review contemplated by this proviso is not made, has the detained person no right at all in this matter? You are choking off all his rights, if by means of this section you deprive him of his fundamental right under section 491. The scope of the amendment of my friend Mr. Raju is very much narrower. Perhaps there was something in what the Honourable the Home Member said yesterday, though, so far as I am concerned, I must confess I was not convinced, but even granting all the arguments that the Honourable the Home Member advanced yesterday, I still venture to think that the restricted scope of the present amendment makes it absolutely clear that to this extent the right of the detained person should be assured to him by the Act.

I should like to address the Honourable the Home Member and the Treasury Benches and all those who sit on that side of the House on a wider issue than that covered by the present amendment. I want them to look at the amendment from the point of view from which some of us look at this question. We have moved a series of amendments with reference to this Criminal Procedure Bill. I admire the pertinacity with which Members on this side of the House, in spite of the most discouraging statements that have been made by the Honourable the Home Member and the discouraging evidence all round of their capacity to carry these amendments, have still persisted. There is a moral behind that persistence, which I want the Honourable the Home Member to realise. I want this Government to realise that they must have some amount of imagination with respect to these matters. Now, we are fighting the terrorist movement. Both sides of the House are agreed that this movement should be done away with as early as possible, and we were therefore willing to allow the Bill to go before Select Committee and to get it back from the Select Committee with such possible amendments as would ensure fair treatment to the detenus to have this Bill passed into law. But then there is one supreme consideration which I want the Treasury Benches to bear in mind. There ought not to be the feeling in any section of the House, much less in the public mind, that any idea of vindictiveness lies behind either the Treasury Benches or the Government or any section of this House in its treatment of these detenus. Amendment after amendment, which sought to give some convenience or other to the detenus, has been opposed by the Government. This is the last amendment, and therefore I take this opportunity of putting forward what I may call not an appeal but a special claim for the consideration of the Honourable Members of this House. In this fight against terrorism, let us remember that the class of people who have to be converted are not the terrorists, but the middle men, the men in the street, without whose co-operation it will be absolutely futile for any Government to expect this movement to die down.

Mr. President, it was my privilege within a few weeks back to be present in the Bengal Legislative Council when a discussion on this identical subject took place. I was indeed present when the new Act was passed there by the Legislative Council,—the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act.—and in connection with the terrorist movement, a Member of the Legislative Council, Mr. Jitendralal Banerjee made a statement of the utmost significance which I should like my Honourable friend the Home Member to realise the implications of. Mr. Banerjee said that it is not sufficient that here and there, at a public meeting at one place, at a public gathering at another, at a Legislature in Bengal, or an Assembly at Delhi, a Resolution should be passed condemning the terrorist movement. What is required is that in the Bengal society the idea must go forward that this terrorist movement should be stamped out. In the houses, in the homes, in the clubs, in the family gatherings, talking to the children,—there it is that the campaign has to be carried on so that this terrorist movement may not survive in Bengal. I ask my Honourable friend the Home Member, who evidently appreciates these sentiments, what he has done to encourage those people who want to stamp out this terrorist movement. Your Acts, your Statutes, are absolutely impotent unless you get public opinion behind you. Seven years of the Bengal

[Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar.]

Criminal Law Amendment Act, followed by an amending Act in the Legislative Assembly, certified or uncertified, has had very little effect on the movement. We now come to another stage, and I want my Honourable friend the Home Member to realise what was behind this certification. Unless you get public opinion behind your laws, unless you are able to convince public men that in the treatment of terrorists, while they do not in any way yield to their desire to stamp out terrorism, they are also not coerced into an attitude of unfairness towards terrorists—unless you do that, all your Acts will be of no avail.

Take your own certified law of the other day. What wonder if that law has failed to achieve its purpose? What is the public opinion behind a law which is certified, and which has not been passed by the willing acceptance of Members of this House, and if, today, this amending Bill comes before the House, and amendment after amendment is defeated by the Honourable the Home Member and the host behind him, what is the opinion of the public with reference to this amending Bill? Through the whispering galleries of the Eastern and Western Bengal, the word will go round that so far as these terrorists are concerned, it is not an attitude of fairness that the Government has taken up, but an attitude of vindictiveness, that the most reasonable amendments have been defeated by means of the Government whip and by the Government strength. What will be the reaction? Where will be that opinion which you want, which must necessarily regiment in your favour? If you want to fight this movement, you must not only get the public opinion by you at public gatherings like these, but in private circles, in family circles, in educational associations, in institutions all over the country. On the other hand, will not the reaction of that public opinion which feels that every single thing that is suggested by however reasonable a Member, by whosoever a Member who is least connected and farthest removed from the terrorist movement is not supported, is not accepted by the Government—what will be the effect of that opinion? I want my Honourable friends over there to have a little imagination with respect to this question. They are very practical men; my Honourable friend Sir James Crerar has a reputation for practicality. But, Sir, there is something higher than practical wisdom; there is that capacity to imagine, there is that capacity of seeing things which are not apparent to one's nose, and that is the capacity which I should like to invoke the Honourable Members of the Government to have, so that they may realise the situation as it presents itself to us on this side of the House. My Honourable friend sits up straight like a dart, gives his reply that Government are not able to accept the amendment. Whatever the amendment may be, whatever the reasoning may be, his attitude is made up, the Government attitude is made up, and he comes forward and says, we are not prepared to accept it. I have been sitting for two days in this Legislative Assembly while this dreary process of passing the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill has been going on. I have been watching the Honourable the Home Member and the other Members on the Government Benches, and there is one oppressive feeling that has come uppermost, one song has been drumming in my ears, the song of that great Scotch poet. Oh, that they had the power to see themselves as others see them. I wish the Honourable Sir James Crerar sometimes could have the imagination to see himself as we see him. We are full of admiration for him. He fights every cause in the same way, often recalling to our minds Don Quixote that tilted at the windmills. (Laughter.) I ask him, when he carries with his speech, and more with his steps, the light brigade behind him, whose is not to reason why, but whose is merely to march and vote in the Noes lobby against every amendment of the Opposition—when he marches to the Noes lobby and takes them with him, I ask him, is he serving the cause which he has dearest at heart, which the Government have most keenly at heart—the cause of trying to see that this terrorist movement is put down? This is an amendment, the rejection of which can create only one feeling in this House, and one feeling in the country. Somehow or other, it will marshal sympathy with the terrorists, far from taking it away from them, and I venture to say as a friend of the Government, as one who does not wish the terrorist movement to continue, as one who abhors this movement, I ask the Government even at this late stage to reconsider their position. My Honourable friend to my right the other day said that I was making vain appeals to the Government. I am not for that mendicant policy. The association of the party, the honourable name which it bears must preclude in any reasonable mind the idea that any one of us could be associated with a policy of mendicancy. But I have taken the oath at that table to do my duty to my King and to my country, and I believe in the discharge of that duty it is for me to tell the Government, even at this stage, that they are bungling, that they are making mistake after mistake, they are alienating the sympathies of the best, the most moderate, and some at least of the wisest in the land by their attitude. They have got their regimented majority. Are they going to use it willy-nilly, in every case, whatever the argument may be, whatever the strength of our case may be, whatever the weakness of their defence may be? That way lies ruin. That way lies shattered kingdoms and shattered governments; and I say even at this late stage that it is up to my Honourable friend to realise that there will be nothing but a feeling of hopelessness if every amendment in connection with this Bill is defeated. Then what will happen? Instead of getting one single Member on this side of the House to bless the Bill on the third reading and say that we have taken our courage and put on the statute some Bill which will have a deterrent effect, you will have Member after Member getting up and saying that Sir James Crerar has given a parting kick, which is a bitter legacy to this country, and I shudder to think of the consequences on that movement which you and I and all of us on this side are anxious to clinch so far as Bengal or any other part of this country is concerned.

I am not making a speech merely for the sake of making it. I feel convinced that the Government are wrong. Even the little amendments which have been moved—to have in this Bill a clause to the effect that a certain amount of rise should be given to the Bengal detenus—my Honourable friend uses all the great strength of the Home Member of the Government to defeat that amendment. We wanted to have a small Assembly Committee to be appointed so that he and his successor may be in a better position to vindicate their activities at Deoli or in any other place. My Honourable friend uses the great majority that he has to veto it. And surprise of surprises, Mr. President, I can attribute it to nothing but want of imagination when the hordes behind cheered my Honourable friend for the Pyrrhic victory that he has won in defeating these amendments.

Let me turn for a moment to the sole representative of the most powerful party in the Legislative Assembly who sits in his place, my Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore. His gallant band is not behind him to-day, but I am certain that when the division bell rings they will come trooping in, not one single soul missing. I want to address a few words to my Honourable friend, Mr. Moore, the statesman that he is; I want to tell him that the path of statesmanship lies in getting through a Bill a little modified here, a little whittled down there, but getting it through, nevertheless with the consent of the non-official Members of the Assembly and not against them. Will he be prepared to advise this Government? I am appealing to him and not to the Government, because I know he and his community carry greater weight in this topsyturvy world with the Government and the Treasury Benches than any of us can, and I want him to realise the fact of carrying through these measures by the dead weight of official and other kinds of majority and not allowing us to feel that our conscientious efforts in trying to improve the Bill, not in favour of the terrorist but in favour of that large mass of people, fair-minded middlemen who hold no brief for the terrorists at all, but who feel that justice and equity must be done, have been accepted. I ask him whether on their behalf he would not join with us on this one single occasion, and I can assure him that he will not repent it. Whoever takes that advice, whether it is the Government or the European Group, we feel that we must do our duty by the Government and not by the terrorist, by the middlemen and not by the terrorists, and try to see that this amendment is accepted by the House, or know the reason why the Government will not accept it.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): I feel that I should not vote on this amendment silently, as I have done on other items. This is a provision which I think is only bare justice to the people concerned. It does not ask anything more than that the procedure laid down in the Act should be complied with otherwise there should be a legal remedy. I hope that the Home Member will see the reasonableness of the amendment and accept it without going to a division. I am not so eloquent as my friend Mr. Mudaliar is but I associate myself with every word that he has uttered in favour of the amendment. With these words I wholeheartedly support the amendment of my friend Mr. Sitaramaraju.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, my Honourable friend Mr. Mudaliar has strongly appealed to the sense of reasonableness and imagination of the Home Member, so that he may accept this amendment. I support this amendment from another point of view, that is from the legal aspect of this question. It is a fundamental principle of legislation that every enactment should be clear, distinct, unambiguous and unequivocal. If that is accepted, I request the Home Member to apply that principle to the enactment of this clause, viz., clause 4 and see if it satisfies that principle. There has been so much ambiguity with regard to the tenor and purport of this particular section. The Honourable the Law Member stated that nothing new was being enacted and that he was only following what had already been laid down in sub-section (3) of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There the power of the High Court has been taken away in connection with certain regulations. He said that "Nothing in this section applies to persons detained under the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation" and various other regulations and he goes on to say that in those cases it is not the High Court which has got the discretion, but it is the Government who have got the discretion. Then he says that the discretion in all these cases must vest with the executive Government and not with the judiciary. As he said yesterday, they want to substitute executive discretion for judicial discretion, and he further went on to ask whether that discretion was any more serious than the discretion to detain a man indefinitely without trial. "If you can swallow detention without trial, you must also swallow this." It is clear from the point of view of the Law Member that there should be no discretion left to the High Court with regard to any detenus under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. The will of the executive must be supreme, and no High Court, either in India or elsewhere, should interfere. In a word they want to substitute executive discretion for judicial discretion. If the Law Member had said that, there would have been no ambiguity at all and the amendment of Mr. Raju would have been unnecessary. But, after saying this as member of the Government, his legal instinct gets the better of him and then he quotes with approval the opinion of another eminent jurist, the Advocate General of Madras, and says that in cases where the detention is illegal, the High Court has power to interfere, and where the detention is legal, the High Court has no power to interfere. He said that the Advocate General deals with a person who is legally in custody, that is, is detained in strict observance of the law. It may be good law, bad law or indifferent law. We are not concerned with it. He is lawfully in custody, and section 491 would not come in. In that case the High Court's power is taken away. Then he says that what the Advocate General says is this, that if the detention is illegal, the High Court has jurisdiction but if it is legal, never mind, whether that legality has been sanctioned by an obnoxious law, even so, the power of the High Court is gone. Then he quotes the opinion of the Advocate General and says that if the detention is illegal, it does not accord with the provisions of this Criminal Law Amendment Act, however obnoxious that law is, and the High Court has power to interfere. Then in reply to an interjection by Sir Abdur Rahim, the Law Member said that if the detention is illegal, the High Court can interfere. This we consider his considered opinion. He has voiced two opinions with regard to the scope of this section. The first time he said it is pure unalloyed executive discretion and that the High Courts have nothing to do with it and then he comes back to another opinion and says that if there is illegal detention, the High Courts can interfere. I am drawing attention to this ambiguity. It is to remove this ambiguity that this amendment has been proposed. This amendment simply says, "Provided however that the procedure laid down in the Act has been complied with". It does not want to take away section 4 altogether. It wants to add only this proviso to make the scope of the section much clearer and unambiguous.

Sir, in this connection I have to state that the Honourable the Law Member has left the House with the impression that the Honourable the Advocate General, Madras, has stated in the opinion given by him that the

[Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi.]

High Court has power to interfere in all illegal cases of detention. I say that is not so. That is not what the learned Advocate General has stated. What he says is this:

"If the conditions of the statute are satisfied, the detention is lawful and the High Court will not exercise the jurisdiction under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If on the other hand the detention is unlawful because the conditions of the statute have not been complied with or the order has not been passed, say, by the proper authority, there is no reason why the subject should be deprived of his remedy under section 491 and the principle obtaining in every part of the British empire, viz., that a person has a right to be protected from illegal imprisonment should be departed from in this country. . . ."

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member think that the House has not already sufficiently heard the Advocate General's opinion which has been frequently quoted?

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi: I am only quoting it, Sir, to show . . .

Mr. President: It has been quoted repeatedly before the House.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi: I just want to show that the Advocate General has on the other hand stated that this power is taken away by the enactment of clause 4. Why should it be taken away in this country while it remains in all other parts of the British Empire? That is the gist of the opinion of the Advocate General.

Mr. President: The House has decided to retain clause 4 and has rejected the amendment to omit it.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi: I quoted the opinion to show, Sir, that it was not exactly what the Honourable the Law Member had stated it to be, and to show that there is so much ambiguity existing with regard to this section. To clear up this ambiguity

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): You are putting the horse behind the cart.

Mr. President (to Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi): Please go on.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi: Sir, if it is the intention of the Government to clear up the ambiguity and retain the power to the High Courts to interfere in cases of illegal detention, then there is absolutely no reason why the Government should not accept this amendment. On these grounds, Sir, I support this amendment.

An Honourable Member: I move that the question be now put.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President. I wish to say very few words on this occasion because in the previous debate I made the position of this part of the House quite clear. Sir, as has been pointed out by my Honourable friend, Diwan Bahadur Mudaliar, the amendment now before the House is really a very modest one; and it is not only modest, but I venture to think it is extremely reasonable, and a great deal depends on the attitude of Government towards this amendment as to whether Honourable Members on this side of the House will support the third reading of the Bill or not. Sir, we nade our position absolutely clear from the very beginning as regards the Supplementary Bill. We expressed, time after time, our detestation of terrorist crimes, and we gave every support to the Honourable the Home Member, as representing the Government of India in this House in order to pass any reasonable measure by which this terrorist movement could be suppressed. I do not know whether the Honourable the Home Member or any of his colleagues in the Government have any sort of doubt as to the bona fides of this part of the House in this matter. Sir, we are not all irresponsible people. We also here have men who have held responsible positions in public life, and we can understand also the drift of any measure—what will be the effect of such a measure on the country. I do not think Government can claim that they are always in the right and that we are always in the wrong, and yet is not that the attitude that they have taken up on this occasion? Can it really be said that whatever the Government do or say is right, and that anything coming from this side is absolutely wrong or to be suspected? As has been pointed out, several amendments of a very very modest character indeed have been moved. We wanted for instance that in the Act provision should be made for making rules in order to ensure fair and reasonable treatment of the detenus. That was rejected. The Home Member would not accept it. Then we also moved that the Government ought to appoint some Members of this Assembly as visitors of this detention camp or prison or whatever it may be called. Even that was not accepted. Now could not the Government appoint any two or three Members from among so many Members of this House who could be trusted to go and visit these detenus in their places of detention and report to Government what they actually found? That also, Sir, was rejected.

Now look at the importance of this present amendment. It is a modest amendment but a very important amendment. Unless Government want that people should be detained and imprisoned for an indefinite period, not only without trial but without Government having conformed to any of the provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, our amendment should be accepted. Otherwise it really comes to this; you authorise officers of the Local Government, carrying out the orders of the Local Government, to do whatever they like with any person they please and arrest him and detain him. Is that really the intention of the Government of India, or of the authors of the Act? Surely that cannot be the intention. Sir, there is a very great difference between the High Court reviewing the merits of a case, and the High Court seeing that the provisions of the Act, the procedure laid down in the Act, have been carried out. There is no need to tell the Honourable the Home Member that there is a vast difference. We do not say,—at any rate that is not the scope of the amendment—that the High Court should be authorised to judge every case on its merits, that is to say whether there is sufficient evidence or not to justify a particular detention. That is not the scope of the amendment. All that the amendment seeks is that the High Courts should be in a position to see that the procedure laid down in the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act was conformed to before any action has been taken. Otherwise, Sir, you are now leaving an absolutely free hand to the executive authorities to do with any person whom they suspect of being concerned in any terrorist movement whatever they like. Surely that is not what is wanted; and we really are not in any way trying to weaken the effect of the enactment.

[Sir Abdur Rahim.]

All that we do is this; we say, in selecting your men for detention or imprisonment, follow the provisions laid down by the Act. That is all that we are asking for. I do not know what the Honourable Member in charge of this Bill will say, whether he is prepared to accept this amendment or not. But I would appeal to him and I would repeat the appeal that has been made by Diwan Bahadur Ramaswami Mudaliar, that the Government by their attitude ought to convince the general public that they are not unreasonable and that they mean only to strike at the terrorists, or rather men whom they suspect to be terrorists, according to their own enactment and according to the provisions of their own law. We want the Government of India to convince the public that they have no ulterior motive behind this Bill. Surely, the Government ought to have no difficulty in giving us an assurance by accepting this amendment that their only object is that certain suspected persons should be detained according to the requirements of the Statute and nothing more. If they are not in a position even to give us that assurance by accepting an amendment of this sort, then we are put in a very false position.

Sir, yesterday the Honourable the Home Member said that this House had allowed the Bill to go to the Select Committee; therefore, the House has accepted the principle of the Bill. But it only means that the executive authority can arrest and detain a person at their discretion as long as they conform to the provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. But, he argues that the House is not at liberty now to question any of the clauses of the Bill. That, I submit, is neither a logical nor a reasonable attitude to take up. This House, by allowing the Bill to go to the Select Committee, made it clear,—at any rate, we, the Members on this side of the House, made it absolutely clear,—that, if certain proposals of ours were not accepted, we should be at liberty to throw out the Bill altogether if we could.

Now, Sir, another point was made by the Honourable the Home Member, namely, that the majority of the Select Committee reported in favour of the Bill. But we have heard from the Chairman of the Select Committee, Sir Hari Singh Gour, that he did not mean by not appending a dissenting note that there were no provisions in the Bill which could be amended. He made it clear to us that he felt, rightly or wrongly, that as a Chairman he was muzzled. He could not speak out nor could he write a dissenting minute. My friend, Mr. Sitaramaraju did append a dissenting minute as regards this clause. Therefore, so far as we are concerned, our position is perfectly consistent in pressing this amendment for the acceptance of the Government and if we fail in that, we shall be at liberty to reconsider the whole position towards the Bill.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I will just add a few words to show why I consider this amendment to be very necessary. As Sir Abdur Rahim has pointed out, it is a very simple amendment and it does not ask for much. It merely requires that the procedure laid down in the Act shall be followed. Sir, by its vote the House yesterday did enthrone "executive judgment", supplanting "judicial judgment", as the Law Member put it. Are we now to understand that executive action is not to conform even to the provisions of law? If this amendment is not accepted by the Home Member, it will mean that the Government with their eyes open will sanction deliberate non-compliance with the provisions of this Act on the part of their officers. Are they prepared to accept that position? No doubt the Honourable the Law Member pointed out that in his opinion recourse to the High Court is always open, if the detention or the arrest is not in accordance with this Act. If that be so, there is no harm in accepting the amendment. If, on the other hand, my friend the Home Member is not prepared to share Sir Brojendra's opinion, then it means that he will knowingly sanction an illegal act. Sir, what is the effect of that? Section 491 is suspended, which means that an aggrieved person cannot apply to the High Court even for the purpose of showing that the arrest was illegal. That would not, however, automatically make an illegal act legal; merely because the right to question the legality of an action is taken away, it does not follow ipso facto that the act becomes a legal act. If the act is illegal in the sense that it is not in conformity with the provisions of the Act, I think there ought to be left some remedy to the aggrieved person, even if he cannot apply under section 491, either to sue the person who makes the arrest or to prosecute him in a criminal court. If it could be said that such remedy was open to the party, I should not mind the Home Member opposing this amendment. Unfortunately, Sir, if you look at section 14 of the Bengal Act, you will find therein provided "that no suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for any act which is in good faith done or intended to be done under the Act". Mark the words "intended to be done". So, that protects an officer not merely from anything which is done, but which is intended to be done. The words are very wide. If these words were not there, and if it was open to any party to proceed against any person who makes the arrest on the ground that the arrest is illegal, I should not, as I have said, insist on this proviso. Then, Sir, if you will look at the terms of clause 4, you will find the following words:

"The powers conferred by section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall not be exercised in respect of any person arrested committed to or detained in custody under the local Act."

It does not use the words, "purporting to be arrested, committed or detained". Clause 4 itself, therefore, contemplates that the arrest or committal or detention must be a legal arrest, a legal committal or a legal detention. If that be so, where then is the objection to accepting the amendment of Mr. Sitaramaraju? But as I said, the more important thing is that, having regard to section 14 of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, which gives a complete indemnity not merely in respect of acts done under the Act, but in respect of acts intended to be done under the Act, a safeguard like this is very necessary.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Mr. President, I must confess to a certain sense of grievance and injustice that before Honourable Members opposite heard what I had to say on this amendment, they are prepared to charge me in advance with an attitude of complete unreasonableness. In that charge it was further alleged against me that I had shown complete unreasonableness because I have unfortunately felt myself called upon to oppose two or three of their amendments which have already been disposed of by the House. But I would ask Honourable Members to recall that I did on each occasion give what I, at any rate, thought to be very good reasons why I could not accept those amendments.

[Sir James Crerar.]

With regard to the general appeal of Sir Abdur Rahim and the weighty and eloquent admonitions which have fallen particularly from Mr. Mudaliar—with regard to these general observations, in respect of a good deal of the contents of which I myself am in considerable agreement, I shall have to say a word or two before I conclude. I wish to deal, in the first instance, with the difficulties, the very serious difficulties of law and of practice, by which I find myself confronted in this, as it has been represented, quite trivial and innocuous amendment. In the first instance, though I do not wish to press this point, I must nevertheless recall that the amendment presents a preliminary difficulty because it does not specify to what particular Act the proviso is intended to refer.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): It is the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: That I understand is the intention of the Honourable Member. By the Act, he means the local Act. Very well, I will pursue my argument a little further. The amendment proceeds on the assumption that it is possible to draw a perfectly clear and definite line between matters of procedure and matters which are matters of substance or of merits. That, Sir, is where my difficulty comes in.

Sir Abdur Rahim: That is done every day in the High Court.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I wish to emphasise this point more particularly with reference to the argument which fell from my Honourable and learned friend, Sir Abdur Rahim. I understood him to say that he regarded the purpose of this amendment not to be to give the High Court the power of intervening on the merits but merely to secure that the procedure enacted by the Act is duly and legally followed. Now, it is precisely on that point that my difficulty arises. In so far as the operation of section 2 of the local Act is concerned, the position appears to be fairly clear, that is to say, that if an order is passed by the Local Government under section 2 and if the contents of and directions in the order are in accordance with the prescriptions of the Act, then I take it that no High Court would think of going behind the order. That, at any rate, is my own view. But the position with regard to section 4 is different. Section 4 provides that any officer of Government authorised in this behalf may arrest without warrant any person against whom a reasonable suspicion exists. That section differs very materially from section 2, because whereas in section 2 when the question of opinion arises, it is expressly provided that that shall be the opinion of Local Government.

Sir Abdur Rahim: There must be an order in writing.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I am on the point of opinion. Section 2 prescribes that where the question of opinion arises, it is the opinion of the Local Government. In section 4 there is not the same analogous provision, that it must be the opinion of the authorised officer that a reasonable suspicion exists. No, the question of reasonable suspicion is not so qualified. Therefore, according to my view of the case, the question of the existence of a reasonable suspicion is inextricably bound up with the question of the further action which the Officer takes in pursuance of his view with regard to reasonable suspicion. That is to say, the reasonableness of the information upon which he holds a suspicion and on which he proposes to take action. Now, Sir, that being so, and if my view of the section is correct, it will be possible for a person, who has been arrested and detained under section 4, to apply for a writ under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, and if the Court took the view which I am told may very well be taken on the grounds which I have mentioned, then the whole question of the merits would definitely come into question. It would be possible—this is the view which I desire to press upon Honourable Members—it would be possible if that view is correct, that when a question of procedure under this particular section 4 is in debate, the Court may require the Officer to satisfy it that there was reasonable suspicion based upon information and evidence. Consequently the whole of the practical difficulties which are involved in the habeas corpus jurisdiction in respect of this Act would arise, and not only that. I have already had occasion to point out to the House that action under section 4 is one of the most important of the powers contained in the local Act. I gave reasons to show that this provision, section 4, had on frequent occasions led to the rapid and prompt arrest of the persons concerned, that the police and the executive Government of Bengal had recourse to the aid of the provisions of this section in order to prevent the commission of terrorist outrages. That is a very serious danger of which I have to warn the House, and I think the House will allow, that in impressing that point of view on the House, I am not acting from an unreasonable motive of mere obstinate resistance to every sensible and modest proposal which is made. I have the very gravest apprehension with regard to this matter. Further I should like to point out this, the clause of the Act as it stands is, of course, precisely parallel to sub-section 3 of section 491, Criminal Procedure Code. It is intended to operate in precisely the same way but in respect of a different category of cases. Now, there is no such proviso as that proposed in this amendment attached to section 491. If, therefore, the corresponding and parallel provision in this present Bill does contain that proviso, I submit that the normal canons of interpretation suggest that it imports something new, something material and something substantial.

I hope, Sir, I have said enough to convince Honourable Members opposite that my attitude in this matter is not unreasonable, but I am confronted with very serious difficulties. If I accept this amendment on behalf of Government, I should create a situation of great danger, with the possibility of the purpose of the Bill being defeated in respect of one of its principal provisions.

Sir Abdur Rahim: May I ask one question? Does not the High Court, as a matter of fact, every day discriminate between questions of procedure and questions on merits? The High Courts do it every day and it is a well known fact.

Mr. S. O. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): The Honourable the Home Member has no experience of High Courts, though he is controlling the destiny of all High Courts.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: It is not for me to say what the day-to-day practice of the High Courts is. The Honourable and learned gentleman is better aware of that than I am. But what I do wish to point out is, here is a question where procedure and merit seem to be so closely connected, that a Court might conceivably take that view. Anyway, I have the greatest apprehensions on that point. Moreover, it is not the case, as has been alleged, that the purpose of this Act is to allow the Local Government or any officer of the Local Government to fail to comply with the procedure laid down in the Act.

The Honourable and learned Member from Bengal asked me to believe,—which I very readily and very willingly do,—in the bona fides of his party and in the attitude which they have taken with regard to this Bill. But I beg him also to grant to me the same recognition of my good faith in the matter. I also ask the House to consider this, that if you are giving extensive powers,—the powers which have already been given to the Local Government by the local Act,—but if you are going to recognise those powers and supplement them, you must inevitably be prepared to recognise good faith on the part of the responsible officers of Government who are authorised to take action. Now, if a person were detained beyond period prescribed in section 4, quite apart from any remedies which on some views of the case he might have before the High Court,—I am not concerned to argue that now,—he would certainly have one immediate remedy by petitioning the Local Government; and I have not the slightest doubt that the Local Government would deal in good faith with a petition of that kind.

Well, Sir, I should now like just to say a few words on the general admonitions which were made to me. I have had a very difficult task indeed with reference to this Bill and with reference to all the matters which were the occasion for this Bill, and I do most strenuously contend that my attitude in the matter has not been one of unreasonableness. The Bill is a very short one; I do not deny that its provisions are drastic and import serious changes into the law. But it is unjust that I should be accused of unreasonableness and that, the principles and operative portions of the Bill being so short and so simple, however deeply they may go, it should be imputed to me as unreasonableness that I am not prepared to accept amendments which in my view seriously shake the validity of those principles. I agree entirely with what fell from two Honourable Members on the front Bench opposite that by far the best remedy for dealing with this grave disease would be to mobilise public opinion against it. I grant that; I fully appreciate that if and when that is done it will be a far more potent weapon against the terrorist movement than any measure of legislation can possibly be. But with this appeal made to us by the Legislature and the Government of Bengal to do what we can and what they regard as important and what we regard as important in the way of legislation, I feel that I must persist in my own appeal to the House to supplement the Act by the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

“That to clause 4 the following proviso be added:

‘Provided, however, that the procedure laid down in the Act has been complied with.’”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 4 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 1 stand part of the Bill.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Sir, I move that to clause 1 the following be added at the end:

"It shall remain in force for a period not exceeding three years."

In moving this amendment, it is my desire that we should have on record the opinion expressed by the Honourable the Law Member the other day as regards the extent of this Act. The original Act was to extend up to 1935. No specific period has been fixed for this extending Bill. In view of the fact that under the General Clauses Act no specific provision occurs in this regard, it is found necessary to have the opinion of the Government whether, if the Bengal Act were to extend indefinitely afterwards without reference to this Legislature, this extending Bill also would have the same extent. The Honourable the Law Member the other day expressed a different opinion. I do believe that the opinion expressed by the Honourable the Law Member was quite accurate; but in view of the fact that the antecedent course taken by the Bengal Legislature was different on this point, I thought I would like to have this point cleared in this debate. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: Mr. President, I do really hope that it will not be imputed to me for unrighteousness if I am constrained to oppose this amendment, for reasons practically the same as those which I laid before the House when an amendment relating to the duration of the clause was raised on clause 4. The object of this Bill is to supplement the local legislation, and I should like to point out that the Act which the Bill is designed to supplement has already been in operation for about a year and a half, and has three years and some months to continue. But, I think it must be obvious that the Supplementary Bill, as I urged before, must be coterminous and synchronous with the local Act, otherwise we should be preparing the possibility of a very serious and inconvenient and even dangerous position, if unfortunately that Act were still in force $3\frac{1}{2}$ years hence. All the provisions we make in this Bill to supplement the local Act, would, after that period, expire

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Bombay City: Non-Muhamunadan Urban): May I ask the Honourable Member a question? If the local Act is extended, will the Government of India have to come back to this Honourable House with a new Bill?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: That is a point of law, Sir, on which I confess I am not in a position to give an authoritative opinion.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: But surely the Honourable Member is in a position to assure this House that if the Local Government extend their own Act, they will come back to this House for another supplementary Bill. That is a question of policy; surely it does not want a lawyer to advise Government on that point.

An Honourable Member: And there are many lawyers on the Government side!

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): I do not know whether I shall be allowed to intervene by my somewhat angry friend on the opposite side. He said it does not require a lawyer; but that is precisely what it does require. I think it is rather a tricky point that is involved. Personally, I incline to the view that, in the manner in which we make amendments, that is, in situ, this act will be co-terminous with the local Act, if that is extended by amendment. But the Honourable Member will see that is a point of law and a very nice point of law, and not the sort of point of law that turns up every day in the courts with which practitioners are familiar. I do not think that the Honourable Member is entitled to say it is a matter of policy.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: What is the position of Government then? Are Government in a position to give an assurance that if the Bengal Council extend their Act, they will come back to this Honourable House, whatever the law may be?

An Honourable Member: There is the Law Member!

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I really must ask the House to accept the fact that not being a technical lawyer myself I cannot put myself forward in that capacity and give what purports to be an authoritative legal opinion, when I know perfectly well that my opinion is not authoritative

Mr. C. C. Biswas: May I ask my Honourable friend, when part I of the Bengal Act of 1925, the part which dealt with special tribunals and appeal to High Courts, was re-enacted or continued by the Bengal Council in 1930, whether or not the Government of India introduced fresh legislation here to re-enact the corresponding provisions of the Supplementary Act? They did not; as soon as the Bengal Act was extended, the Supplementary Act was automatically taken to be continuing. That is pointed out in the Statement of Objects and Reasons.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The answer to the Honourable Member's question is that he is correct. No supplementary Bill on that restricted portion of the local Act was at that time introduced into this Legislature. I maintain and I seriously urge upon the House that it is obviously a necessary thing, quite apart from the technical legal point . . .

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Is the Honourable Member aware that the Law Member the other day, on the floor of this House in answer to Sir Hari Singh Gour, stated that it will not extend?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I heard what my Honourable colleague said. But I must limit myself to the question of practical effect; and I do urge upon the House that this Supplementary Bill which supplements the local Act,—I am concerned now with the local Act as it now stands—it was enacted in 1930,—ought to be co-terminous with that enactment. That is my contention.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Sir, here is a statement made by the Honourable the Law Member. Is Government prepared to stand by that statement or do they wish to repudiate it?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have said nothing whatever that suggests repudiation on my part of an opinion given by my Honourable colleague the Law Member.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Sir, this is what the Honourable the Law Member said the other day:

"Therefore, what we are doing is supplementing the Bengal Act of 1930. If the Bengal Act of 1930 be repealed or exhausts itself by efflux of time and be re-enacted in the same terms, then my submission is that this measure which we are considering now will not attach itself to that re-enacted measure, because, this Bill says in so many words, that it is supplementary to the Act of 1930 and it is not supplementary to any Act which may be re-enacted in 1935. There is no section in the General Clauses Act or in any other law that I know of which automatically attracts a supplementary measure to an extended measure."

[Sir Cowasji Jehangir.]

Sir, this is perfectly clear language. I want to know whether Government are prepared to stand by the statement—say yes or no.

Sir Lancelot Graham: As my friend says, it is perfectly clear that the case is entirely distinct. The Honourable the Law Member was dealing with the case of an Act which had been allowed to lapse. Supposing this Act is allowed to lapse and is re-enacted. That is quite different from altering the duration clause by an amending Bill. The case which was covered by the Honourable the Law Member is a case, as he said, where the Act is allowed to lapse and is re-enacted; in that case this Supplementary Act of course would have no relation to that re-enacted Act; but I think it would have this effect; this Supplementary Act would be co-terminous with the Bengal Act if that Act was not allowed to die, that is to say, not if it was re-enacted, but if the duration clause in the Bengal Act was extended during the life of the Bengal Act. That I understand to be the position. But, as I say, that is not in any way in conflict with what was said by the Honourable the Law Member the other day when he spoke about re-enactment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in clause 1 the following be added at the end:

'It shall remain in force for a period not exceeding three years'."

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

The Honourable Sir James Cresser: Mr. President, I move that the Bill as amended, be passed. In making this motion, I do not propose to detain the House for more than a very few minutes. I have already spoken at great length and I regret to say on many occasions, both on the broad principles of the Bill and on all the subsidiary points that have arisen. In the very few words I have now to say, I merely desire to recall the House to the major issue which I think has been in some danger of being obscured in the course of long and detailed examination of issues which, however important in themselves, are necessarily subsidiary to that main issue. And that issue, as I conceive it is this: whether there exists in Bengal a very grave public situation which is urgently in need of remedy. We have to consider whether the action taken by the Local Government, and endorsed on repeated occasions by an overwhelming majority in the local Legislature, is a course of action which will contribute to a very necessary and vital objective, namely the control and suppression of the terrorist movement. We have to consider whether we ought to accept the hard logic of facts and circumstances and the conclusions of those on whom the most immediate responsibility rests as to the course of action which ought to be taken. We have to consider whether in matters which are outside their competence and which are within our sole competence we ought to endorse those conclusions and come to the assistance of the local authorities and the local Legislature. On those broad issues, however much we may differ on relatively minor points, though I do not desire by calling them minor points to under-estimate their importance, I feel that there is no possibility of an answer in any other sense than a broad affirmative. It has not been seriously contended in this House either that the terrorist movement does not exist in Bengal or that it constitutes a very grave danger not only to that Presidency but to the whole of India. Speaker after speaker on the other side of the House has arisen to say that that position is accepted and admitted. If that really is so, very little remains for me to say. If that is so, surely the only answer that we can give to this demand which is made upon us for assistance is that we should grant it. I deeply regret that in the very last days of my membership of this Assembly, it should have fallen to my lot to bring before the Assembly a measure of this kind and to have had to deal with it during the nine days of debate it has occupied the time of the House. It has been a very difficult and a very unenviable task. Nevertheless, none of us can refuse to open our eyes to plain facts, still less decline to discharge our responsibility. It is because I feel that, in spite of the differences of opinion that have arisen and the controversies that have been threshed out as regards certain relatively subsidiary questions arising out of his measure, there is agreement on the major issues, I have the utmost confidence that the House will be prepared to recognise those facts and will be prepared to discharge its responsibility.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions; Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, The Honourable the Home Member, with a touch of pathos, said that in the very last days of his membership he had to put up the fight that he has put up for what he thinks is necessary to suppress the terrorist movement in Bengal and to prevent the extension of that terrorism to other provinces. That, Sir, so far as the Honourable the Home Member is concerned must be a matter for legitimate pride and self-congratulation for standing up as he has always stood up for the steel frame of the Government, to revolt against which the terrorist movement in Bengal came into existence. I concede that he has fought us on this side of the House with the tenacity of a steadfast Scotsman, but we on this side of the House have likewise a duty to perform, and that duty we have been performing. I am pleased to think I have also been performing it by declining to serve on the Select Committee to which the Home Member was so willing to invite me. I do not agree with the principle of this Bill, and even at this last state we have to clearly, strongly and in unambiguous language proclaim with all the emphasis that we can command that we do not accept the principle underlying this Bill, and I wish the Government had accepted the advice of Provincial Governments and stood out from the danger that they stood in of extending terrorism to other provinces, if they honestly believed the detenus were terrorists. The very fact that the other Provincial Governments were unwilling to accept these detenus in their jails on grounds which are recorded in their reports and opinions circulated to Members of this House, the very fact that they did not want them ought to have convinced the Government of India not to bring these unfortunate people from long distances to a place within their own jurisdiction, these untried people, who have not been proved guilty. I am perfectly willing to concede that there is a terrorist movement in Bengal, but I am unwilling to concede that every detenu is a terrorist. A man who has not been proved to be guilty, as every Englishman who has read the English jurisprudence is aware, is innocent. The law presumes them to be innocent and the opposition would not be worth its salt if it accepted the opinion of the Home Member as regards these untried detenues. I am perfectly willing to grant that the Honourable the Home Member has gone through the documents which are in his possession, in the possession of the Government of Bengal and the police in Bengal, documents which cannot be produced on the floor of this House, which cannot be produced in a court of law and which, as far as we are concerned, are dead documents which have no legal value and are from the legal point of view absolutely worthless.

Sir, such being the case, opposed as we are to the terrorist movement, strongly, emphatically and uncompromisingly, we cannot give a long rope to the Government so far as detenues and untried persons are concerned. It is not for me, standing on this side of the House, repeatedly to proclaim that we do not agree with the terrorists, that we do agree to the suppression of the terrorist movement,—but not in the manner in which it is being suppressed, for we do not agree to suppress people who have not been proved to be guilty. I am not pleading to-day, “Give clemency to the terrorists”. Wipe out the terrorists by all means; but you cannot, because you have got certain information in your possession, deny even to the terrorists what is their legitimate due, namely, trial, to establish whether they are terrorists or not. Sir, it has been said time and again that it is not possible to hold a sort of trial because witnesses might be shot. But surely, Sir, a trial can be held within the jail or some such other places, and surely a big Government must not be afraid, if it has abundance of materials in its possession, to put terrorists on their trial and punish them as the law prescribes that terrorists deserve to be punished.

Sir, I have only to say finally that I do not want to make a long speech. I congratulate Members on this side of the House and especially my Honourable friends, Mr. S. C. Mitra, Mr. K. C. Neogy and other friends from Bengal, who have put up a strong and persistent fight. It is not my purpose, and I believe it is not the purpose of gentlemen seated on this side, to prolong the agony of this debate, but it is necessary for us to place it on record that on the major issue, as the Honourable Member has said, we are fundamentally of a different opinion from the gentlemen seated on the Treasury Benches. Sir, while we concede that a grave situation has been created in Bengal, we say that a graver situation is being created by sending away detenues from Bengal to the neighbourhood of Ajmer-Merwara and by denying their relations the right, the absolute right to travelling allowances. I admit the Honourable the Home Member was willing to grant certain conveniences such as punkhas to the political detenues. Of course, after transferring them from the moist heat of Bengal to the intensely dry heat of Ajmer-Merwara, I think it is a concession for which the Government can take a certain amount of credit, but if they wanted to take real credit, if they wanted really to satisfy the people of Bengal, they should not have taken shelter behind the issue that the taxpayer of Bengal would not be willing to be taxed so far as travelling allowances for a very small number of people who are related to the detenues are concerned. Travelling allowance has been denied, and that only shows that the Government want to inflict a wrong on the detenues but a double wrong by denying their poor relations the right of interviews. It may be that public bodies in the country might raise money to give facilities of travelling to the relations of these detenues. It may be that a political prisoners' or sufferers' fund might be raised in the country. If it is raised, you know what it means, what raising of the funds means, and moreover you know it would also raise a good deal of feeling along with it, and therefore I do wish the Honourable the Home Member had agreed to this very legitimate and very modest demand that the relations of detenus who applied for travelling allowance would be given travelling allowances. Sir, I regret very much that the Honourable the Home Member did not meet us in this matter. With these words, I resume my seat.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in a few more moments this House will have seen the last of this black Bill, this short and simple measure, which has occupied a record number of days during the present session of the Assembly: and if one is to judge by the results of the first few divisions, it can be imagined as to what is going to happen to the particular motion which we are now discussing. Sir, some of my friends think that the last division which we had on a very inconsequential point was really a snare into which the non-official Members were drawn so that there might be some amongst us who might think that, after all, having secured one little amendment, it would not be right on our part to go into the Division Lobby against the Government, on the present motion. There are Members amongst us who would vote for the Government on the slightest provocation, and therefore, Sir, I was not very happy at the result of the last division. It can easily be imagined that the Government will have a certain victory on this third reading. Sir, it pains and humiliates one to think that a measure, which could not possibly have been passed with the assistance of non-official elected Members in the last three Assemblies, could be placed now on the Statute-book so easily with their active help in the present Assembly. This is particularly humiliating to one who has sat in all the four Assemblies.

Sir, the Honourable the Home Member in his speech has just mentioned what the major issue before the House is. When the Bill was brought forward, there was a slight dispute as to exactly what the issues were before the House. At one time we were asked to believe that this short and simple measure involved nothing beyond the question of transference of detenus from Bengal. Sir, the debates during the last few days have demonstrated that there was a certain much more important principle of fundamental character involved in this Bill, namely, the principle of detention without trial. The Honourable the Law Member yesterday was frank enough to concede that, unless clause 4 of the Bill were passed, the enactment passed by the Bengal Legislative Council would be almost nugatory. Therefore, Sir, let not my Honourable friends lay the flattering function to their souls that in passing this measure they will not be called upon to endorse that hateful principle of detention without trial. Even assuming that we had not to deal with clause 4 of the present Bill, and that there was not this issue of the suspension of habeas corpus involved, what are we expected to do?

The Honourable the Law Member stated yesterday that the Government of Bengal were asking us as to whether we were prepared to help them in carrying out the measure that they had placed on the Statute-book in their own Legislature. Now, help in what? Help in making their measure more effective, help in providing a system of banishment for the untried detenus. Now if detention without trial in Bengal has not proved a success, will banishment help? And let my Honourable friends remember that what they are doing is to tell the Government of Bengal, 'Well, you expect us to help you in carrying out this measure, in making it an effective measure of repression. Very well, we are perfectly willing to oblige you by providing for a Siberia for the Bengal detenus'. Those of my Honourable friends who vote with Government on this measure will have to bear that in their minds very carefully.

The Honourable Member referred to the very grave situation in Bengal, about which there can be no dispute on this side of the House, but the main difference in the points of view between that side and this side of the House consists in this. We say that the existence of the terrorist movement is to a very large degree due to the mistaken policy of repression which the Government have been following. Sir, violence, whether resorted to by Government or by the terrorists, begets vengeance; vengeance, again, is followed by violence. Now the Government and the terrorists are between themselves going round and round the vicious circle: vengeance and violence, violence followed by vengeance, and so on. Sir, how long is this to continue? May I ask my Honourable friend his real candid opinion, now that he is leaving the shores of India, as to whether he sincerely and honestly thinks that this policy can succeed? Repression followed by violence; violence followed by vengeance and further repression! Let me tell him that terrorism is no less reprehensible if resorted to by Government as an answer to terrorism by the terrorists.

Now, Sir, the Honourable Member stated that the Local Government and the Local Legislature having asked for such a measure, we were more or less in duty bound to oblige them. My answer to that is that if it is a misguided Local Government and if it is a misguided local Legislature, it is our duty to tell them that we are not prepared to oblige them by providing such a measure. Sir, the language that has been used by the Home Member in connection with this debate for the last few days reminds one very forcibly of similar language with reference to the political prisoners who were dealt with under Regulation III of 1818 towards the end of 1908. The House will recall that there were nine Bengalis, some of them very prominent men in the public life of my province, who were dealt with under that Regulation, and questions were repeatedly asked not so much in the Imperial Legislative Council of India as in the House of Commons in those days. If Honourable Members will only take the trouble of looking up the debates of the House of Commons for 1909, they will see how persistent efforts were made by friends of India from their seats in the House of Commons to get a statement from the Government as regards the charges against these Bengalis, who were then dealt with under Regulation III. The Honourable Members will also see what a wealth of parliamentary prevarication was utilised for the purpose of meeting these interpellations, and the impression in the mind of anyone who would read those proceedings would be that these men were very dangerous characters and that they were behind the terrorist movement that was then prevalent in Bengal. I am particularly reminded of certain statements made by Mr. Buchanan, who was then the Under Secretary of State for India, to an amendment to the Address by Mr. Mackarness. This amendment was regarding the imprisonment and deportation of Indians without trial. He referred to the conspiracy to subvert the British rule in India and he also referred to the instigation to commit outrages. Then he said:

"I cannot here formulate charges against them on the floor of the House of Commons."

[Mr. K. C. Neogy.]

The very same attitude has been taken up by the Honourable the Home Member. He further said:

"Under this order (Regulation III) the authorities can lay their hands upon individuals who are the real instigators behind the scenes of many of the outrages that have taken place."

And these remarks were made applicable to all the nine detenues then held in imprisonment under Regulation III. That was a statement made on 24th February, 1909. Now, Sir, about 16 or 17 years later, a most remarkable statement was made by no less a man than Sir Hugh Stevenson, who is, I understand, about to retire from his present position of the Governor of Bihar and Orissa. He was then the Home Member in the Government of Bengal. Speaking on the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill on the 7th January, 1925, this is what he said:

"As far as I know, no one has ever accused him (meaning Babu Krishna Kumar Mitra) or Babu Aswini Kumar Dutt of promoting crime still less of taking part in it. The Bengal Government asked for the arrest under Bengal Regulation III of 1912 of Babu Krishna Kumar Mitra in 1908 because his violent boycott speeches and his activity in organising volunteers involved the danger of internal commotion. In the same way the Eastern Bengal Government asked for the use of the said Regulation in the case of Babu Aswini Kumar Dutt because of his whirlwind campaign of anti-government speeches and of his control of the Braja Mohan Institution from which a stream of seditious preachers was constantly pouring. In both these cases the activities for which these gentlemen were restrained were open and public."

Now, 17 years after their detention, the truth came out in this very strange fashion. What language had not been used with reference to these very estimable gentlemen in the House of Commons and elsewhere in support of the policy of detention without trial, insinuating the most horrible charges against them! It is the same thing that my Honourable friend opposite is doing to-day. How are we to know that the very same thing is not being re-enacted within the jail walls of Bengal?

Now, Sir, I have no desire to take up any more time of this House, and I would conclude by quoting once again the words which I quoted the other day from a speech of a Member of the Executive Council of Bengal, namely, Sir Provash Chandra Mitter, who, while speaking on a similar measure in the Bengal Legislative Council, said:

"This Bill proposes not a physician's treatment of the malady but a quack's remedy. I think that if the Bill be certified or passed by the Legislative Council, it will not only fail in its object but will perhaps be, although it is farthest from the intentions of the members of the Government, a helpful measure towards the propagation of the revolutionary movement."

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, it is perhaps for the last time that I am raising my voice against the passing of this obnoxious measure. Curiously enough, I find that on fundamental questions I have very little difference even with Sir James Crerar. I admit that there is terrorism in Bengal, and I further admit that we should find out means to root it out from that unhappy province. Yet I would like to make my position clear once again as to why I am opposing this measure. Sir, I think it has been well said that a large Empire and 1400 minds go ill together. It really requires a statesman not of the type of my friend Sir James Crerar—I do not mean anything derogatory to him—but a broad-minded politician to govern a country, the people of which are alien to those who govern it. You were anxious to settle your terms with the Irish rebels only the other day, when all repression failed. You said that their hands were dyed

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should address the Chair.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, the Government said that the hands of these rebels were dyed with the blood of the loyal officers belonging to the Police and the Army, and they could not think of any terms of conciliation. But England did not fail to produce statesmen who could look into these questions from a broader outlook. Unfortunately for this country, at least for the present time, we are having statesmen in India who cannot at all gauge the inner working of the mind of the people of this country.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar referred to the fact that he was leaving the country shortly. We are pained if we have to use harsh words against him at this moment, but I wish in spite of all these repressive measures, that he should have peace and rest in his happy Caledonian home, though he has broken the peace and rest of many a family in Bengal by this measure and created larger unrest throughout India by the innumerable Ordinances that he got promulgated lately. He will be remembered in this country longer than the Honourable Sir George Rainy, because the effect of this unsavoury and obnoxious measure will last much longer than many a little good thing that others tried to do for India; I should like to go through some of the principle points that have been directly or indirectly dealt with by this measure. As regards interviews, I said all along, that if it is the purpose of the Government to interdict or forbid all interviews, let them say so and get the Bill passed in that manner, like honest people. By this subterfuge of transferring these detenus hundreds of miles away from their homes and refusing the little pittance of allowance to their indigent relations Government secure their purpose of interdicting interview with the detenus. I shall presently read some of the letters that I have received from the poor relations of the detenus. I know in several cases they are poor helpless parents. I know personally in one case that, after years of pining, the parents died, after being separated from their near and dear ones. The Law Member may say that it is a temporary measure, but I know in many cases the people have been in jail for 8 and 10 years continuously, with intervals of two or three months. If persons come out of jail after a prolonged trial of two or three years, and if they are found not guilty, as soon as they step out of the court precincts, they are arrested and again sent to jail under the Criminal Law Amendment Act for indefinite periods. There are very few sections in the Indian Penal Code, as I said the other day, where the punishment is for more than three or four years. But it is admitted that even though no case is proved against these detenus, yet they suffer not for three or four years but in many cases for 8 and 10 years in jails. When you consider these cases, you must remember all these facts, and must not be carried away by the apparently innocent and simple words of the Honourable Sir James Crerar, that it is a temporary measure and that it is a short Act. As you all know, this Act had been in force with little interruption already for seven years, and now it is proposed to prolong its life for another five years. I accept the argument of the Honourable the Home Member that this Act is essential, but let him answer why it has not succeeded though it has been in force so drastically for the last seven years, in rooting out the terrorist movement. I contend that it is a quack measure and it has failed in its purpose. I appeal to Government that they should try other means. According to their own statement, terrorism is increasing day by day, and they have not succeeded in putting an end to it. That shows that it is not the right method.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan (Nominated Non-Official): What is the right remedy?

Mr. S. C. Mitra: The right method is to give full Dominion Status to this country. Let the young men of this country feel that they are as much free to develop their resources and to live in happiness and liberty as any other people in any other free country. That is what is wanted. If you take this broad view and act in that line, then the political assassins who have been guilty hitherto will become loyal and will co-operate with Government. I have faith in these young men. I was reading the other day from the letter of Miss Bina Das who was found guilty. She did not try to plead innocence but she said:

"I am glad that the life of Sir Stanley Jackson has been saved by Providence and that Lady Jackson and her children have been spared their terrible misfortune and I have attained my end without any loss of life."

It will not require much imagination to feel what actuates people of this type, and the attempt on the part of any Government should be to remove all the grievances. What do we find after 150 years of British rule? In spite of all protestations that the Europeans are the trustees of the dumb millions, everybody is becoming poorer and poorer every day. You may think it is mere emotionalism, but I say it is not, it is as much economic. The hungry and starving man will not rest satisfied with anything else unless you give him a chance to improve his own condition to save himself from starvation. The high ideal of full Dominion Status as the immediate objective of the Government is a better remedy than all repressive and inhuman measures. If you cannot provide these men scope in that way for their idealism, this terrorist movement is bound to go on. By enacting measures of this kind you are only creating bitterness in their minds, and you only add to that feeling, and thereby you help neither the Government nor the nation. As regards the letters I referred to, they do not come from these political sufferers. They do not complain in any way. They do not write to us. It is their helpless parents and dependants that come to us. For political workers in India, "suffering is the badge of their tribe." Suffering is no longer the badge of the Jewish people; falsifying the scriptural prophecies, they have found a happy home in Trans-Jordan; but patriots in every subject nation know that suffering and sacrifice are their badges.

I come here not to plead the cause of these detenus, but I want to show how you embitter the feelings and how you really dig the graves of these detenus by these measures. I fear the digging of their graves will not end there, but they will dig the foundation of the British Empire as well. Here is a letter from a relation of a detenu under Regulation III, and his name is Roshak Lal Das interned in Peshawar Jail. His only two dependants are his mother and his aunt, nearly seventy years old widows.

helpless and suffering from rheumatism. They have a little plot of land, but there is nobody to cultivate the lands. They applied for an allowance, but got no reply. They have written to me to approach the benign Government to see if something could be done. This is one of the letters. I read the other day in the newspapers that the gentleman who controls the destinies of this nation, Sir Samuel Hoare, said in the House of Commons that the allowance granted to these detenus is something scandalous. I can give particulars to this House, and if Honourable Members make an average of the monthly allowances that are granted to these detenus, they will find that the amount of allowance is scandalous in more ways than one. The author of the scandalous statement said in the House of Commons that by amending the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, they will provide in future instead of money being paid, the detenus should be paid in kind, i.e., grain and clothes, and consideration should be made to reduce the allowances when they had other sources of income. The detenus may have lands. But if you take away the men who support the family, who will earn the money for their dependants and who will cultivate his lands? On the report of the police the Honourable the Home Member and his staff will decide that there is so much of income and so the detenu should not be given any allowance, bestowing no thought for a moment on the fact that there is nobody to look after the detenus estate or to cultivate his lands. Sir, I know for certain that the allowances granted to these poor families do not, in 80 or 90 per cent. of cases, exceed Rs. 25 a month.

There is another letter about another detenu who is also in Peshawar. They are given a meagre diet allowance of one rupee per head which is very insufficient to get themselves properly nourished. They are allowed association with nobody and kept in complete segregation. The Government of India have passed orders allowing them out-door games, but still they cannot have them for want of accommodation. The Peshawar jail is so very overpopulated and congested by ordinary convicts that even an inch of land is not available for these prisoners to have out-door games in. They are suffering a lot for want of a Bengali cook and Bengali food. Their letters, both incoming and outgoing, are delayed by the Bengal L. B. to get them censored for such a long period that they take between 20 to 25 days to reach their destination. Other grievances are also stated here, and they ask that I should bring these matters to the notice of Government. There are excellent rules, and it satisfies my friends to hear that there are facilities for the detenus to have out-door games. But who will examine whether there is any space available for any games, not to speak of out-door games? From my personal experience I can say that political prisoners are confined to one yard and are not allowed to go beyond a particular space in that yard. That tells very heavily upon the nervous system of any individual, and there should be facilities to transfer them now and again, but these things they will all be deprived of. I also made it clear that by allowing them interviews with their relations, you will be able to put them in a proper frame of mind. One day you shall have to let off these detenus because there is no conviction against them. It may be 10, 15 or 20 years, but some day you will have to release them. Should not Government desire that they should be contented citizens even afterwards? By the present system of treatment, only bitterness is increased, and that was the reason why I was all along pressing that measure like this should not be passed. I find in to-day's paper that in

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

Allahabad a tree in Alfred Park under which Chandrasekhar Azad, a revolutionary suspect, was killed last year, has been cut down. I have no objection to their cutting down a tree and having vengeance on a particular man, who is dead by such innocent means, but these measures are not so innocent and harmless, though short and simple they certainly are. We tried our best to get some of these amendments passed, but, as I said in the very beginning, Government would not accept any of them. I think our Leaders and Deputy Leaders have now been disillusioned in finding that, however reasonable it may be, once Government are sure that they can carry certain measures, they will not care for our views. As regards this law being accepted by the Bengal Council, I can say that the first time when it came up in 1925, the Bengal Council, against all convention, refused even to accept the introduction of the Bill. And now you know how, after the boycott by the Congress, some of these Councils and Assemblies have been constituted. I have carefully gone through the division list here. If all the Honourable Members had taken the trouble to attend, there would have been no difficulty in passing all these amendments. The Government and nominated Members and Europeans are solidly present. I do not like to read the names, but I know that with all the patronage and power that the Government control, they can easily carry through any measure they like. It is not an idle thing that other democratic Governments are against the conferment of any titles. I do not say anything particularly against anybody, but this division list shows that even if all the Members on our side cared to attend, we could carry everything. But it is not difficult for Government to carry through what they like, with all the power and patronage which they command. But that is no reason why they should not concede the reasonable amendments from the Opposition. With the sense of duty which actuated us, we tried to put before Government all reasonable amendments for their acceptance, but we have not succeeded in doing anything, nor shall we be able to throw out this Bill on the third reading. But we owe it to our country that we should make our opposition to this measure clear.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Mr. President, from the very beginning there have been some Honourable Members of this House who opposed the principle of the Bill, but it must not be forgotten, and I do not think we can forget, that the Bill was sent to a Select Committee, that the Chairman of that Select Committee was the leader of the largest party in this House, and that there were other Honourable Members on that Select Committee. It is to be presumed that—it may be unwillingly or it may be unwittingly—they did accept the principle of the Bill. And I would be the last to rake up old history as to what that report really contained, and who it was that drew attention to some of the weak points in this Bill. It is past history, and I do not desire at this late stage to open up old wounds. But, Mr. President, I cannot refrain from expressing my humble opinion as to the way Government have managed this Bill. They were fully aware of the position; they were fully aware of the fact that in the past, Legislative Assemblies had thrown out similar measures. They were given considerable encouragement on the present occasion by the appointment of a Select Committee and the personnel of the Select Committee. But I regret to find that, instead of trying to kill the bitterness in the hearts of some of my Honourable friends, such as Mr. Neogy and Mr. Mitra, they at this final stage have been instrumental in encouraging the bitter speeches that we have just heard. It was in their power, it was in their hands, to so act and to so speak as to have given some consolation to some of my Honourable friends who had very strong opinions from the beginning. What was the demand made by this House and by some of my Honourable friends? That two or three relatives should be allowed to visit these detenues when they left the province of Bengal and that they should be supplied with the means to enable them to visit these detenues, provided always they were too poor to do so. Was that an extravagant demand to make? It was refused; and nobody was more surprised to find the refusal coming from my Honourable friend Sir James Crerar than myself. Although I have had some experience of Government, I am unable to see the point of refusing that demand. Mr. President, when Honourable Members address this House, they do not address merely Honourable Members on the Government Benches or a few humble individuals like ourselves; they are addressing the whole of India, and when the whole of India notices and sees that, although the Legislative Assembly was prepared to assist the Government, a modest demand was turned down, do Government expect to get public support? Again today all that this side of the House wanted was that the officials of the Bengal Government should follow the provisions of their own Act, and that if they did not, there should be an appeal to the High Court. If the Government of India or the Government of Bengal do not desire any appeal against an infringement of their own Act, why did they take the trouble of putting in any provisions at all into the local Act? They might have had an Act with two or three lines, giving them power to arrest anybody, adopt any procedure without challenge from anybody. Although I tried to follow my Honourable friend, very closely, as to his argument with regard to section 4 of the local Act, I regret—I may be dense—I was unable to understand it; and my point is this: the point that was emphasised by my Honourable friend, Diwan Bahadur Ramaswami Mudaliar, that it is not Acts of this character that are really going to stamp out terrorism; such Acts will only stamp out terrorism if they have got public opinion behind them. These Acts will only stamp out terrorism, not only from Bengal but prevent it spreading to other provinces, if the people really believe that Government in whatever action they take are reasonable and are prepared to take the public into their confidence and are prepared to concede here and there a point which this side of the House and the public think are of importance. But when Government come forward with an important measure of this sort and find that they have a considerable measure of support, they go on quibbling over small points, allowing the debate to go on for hours, and then go into the division lobbies and defeat this side of the House. I am not surprised that the bitterness on this side increases and will increase all over the country. You want imagination, Sir (Laughter) . . .

Mr. President: Surely the Honourable Member can bear in mind the use of the pronoun "they" when he wishes to refer to Government.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: If I do not address you, Mr. President, I am pulled up; and if I address you, you smile. I say deliberately "you"; when I have to address the Honourable Members opposite I am told I must address the Chair and it is a very ordinary thing to do. Mr. President, you want imagination; and you want a little foresight. Your horizon has to be a little wider than it seems to be; and if Government would have only taken a more humane line in this Bill, there might have been no debate on the third reading, and my Honourable friend Sir James Crerar might have been spared the bitter speeches that have been made, and will again be made, on this side of the House. India is not going to be ruled like this. India is a sentimental country; India is a most grateful country. If you will treat with disrespect all sentiment because you may sometimes have logic on your side, you will not succeed. After all, with many castes and with many creeds, sentiment goes further than logic. By all means stick to your principles. By all means see that you do what you conscientiously believe is right

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member will only say "they" instead of "you", he will be quite in order.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: I am sorry; but it is you who insisted on it: you have been a Member of Government yourself, Sir, and I trust you have got plenty of experience

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member will accustom himself to the use of the word "they" he would be quite all right.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: I am sorry to offend your feelings: I have no intention of doing so; I will now talk of the Government only and leave you out. If Government would only meet this side of the House on, after all, small points, they would, I honestly believe, get the support of this House in an important measure of this sort. Even my friend, Mr. Neogy, has repeatedly said that he is against the terrorist movement, and can anybody imagine otherwise? But what have you done with this friend of mine, Mr. Neogy? I pick him out as an example

An Honourable Member: Example of what?

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: By conceding two small amendments you would have had Mr. Neogy on your side

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has again got into his old habit.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: The Government would have had Mr. Neogy as a silent supporter. The object of my rising to speak is this: that I trust that, although my Honourable friend, Sir James Crerar, whom I have known for many years, will leave this country, I do hope and trust that the debate on this Bill will at least be a lesson to those who remain. Here was a glorious opportunity for Government thrown away, a glorious opportunity to have got the support of this Honourable House for a measure which past Assemblies had rejected. That opportunity I regret to find, has been lost and although he will get his Bill he will not get the real whole-hearted support of this Honourable House; and what is much more important, he will not have the sympathy or the support of moderate men outside this House all over the country, who, if they follow this debate can only come to the conclusion—perhaps a wrong conclusion, but the only possible conclusion—namely, that when Government find that they have a certain amount of support, of whatever character it may be, they are determined to carry even small amendments to a division and defeat the Opposition. Sir, that is a very very harmful impression to give. It only adds, as my friend, Mr. Mitra, said, to the demand that there should be complete Dominion Status. That is the real remedy for this sad state of affairs, and I do hope and trust that, when Government bring forward a measure of this sort again, and expect to get, as they did get in the beginning on this occasion, the support of this House, they will concede, however much they may disagree, small points, points which really do not affect the principle of the Bill, such as paying a few rupees to detenus to have their relatives visit them and things of that kind, and secure at least the whole-hearted support of men who have a desire and always desire to work with Government, to co-operate with Government, for the happiness and contentment of the people of this country.

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): Sir, unlike my friend, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, I was not particularly struck by the bitterness of Mr. Mitra's speech. On the contrary, it was the sincerity of that speech which produced a much greater impression upon me, and which for the first time made me wish to say something in this debate and to attempt to put before my Honourable friend another point of view. When he was speaking, I felt that to some extent I understood what he was feeling and on one occasion when he said that unemployment and the hopeless economic outlook of the young men were responsible for a great deal of the trouble, I was in most profound agreement with him. But, Sir, he did speak as if this Bill represented the whole policy before the country which Great Britain had to offer, and he said that we need something more statesmanlike. Surely my Honourable friend is aware that this Bill does not represent policy at all. It is merely an unpleasant necessity. He must be aware that a very large and statesmanlike effort is being made to settle the whole of this difficulty. He must be aware of the Round Table Conference; he must be aware of all the sincere efforts that are now being made to get some form of agreement firstly between India and Great Britain and secondly between all the different conflicting interests in this country, in order that we shall approach that Dominion Status

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Has the Honourable Member read Mr. Benthall's statement which has been recently published in the Press on this question?

Mr. Arthur Moore: Yes, I have; but I do not see how it arises in this connection at all.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: It does arise; we question the sincerity on the part of your community.

Mr. Arthur Moore: On the contrary, I cannot see that it has the smallest relevance. (Laughter from the Nationalist Benches.) I would put it to my friend, Mr. Mitra, that the terrorists,—and I welcome very strongly his own expression of view with regard to terrorism,—I would put it to him that their programme, far more than this Bill, is designed to prevent the operation of that larger statesmanship. In spite of what Diwan Bahadur Mudaliar said this morning, it is not true that we on these Benches, any more than any one else, welcome legislation of this character, but we are still waiting for any one to show us how terrorism can be dealt with if it is not to be dealt with sternly. And when Mr. Neogy talks about vengeance, and violence, I will ask him and my friend Mr. Mitra to remember, in regard to that larger policy of statesmanship, that when last year Lord Irwin and the Congress as represented by Mahatmaji came to an agreement and it was hoped that the prospects for that constructive policy of statesmanship were going to be rendered immeasurably fairer, the result was the greatest outbreak of violence and terrorism that has been seen in this generation

Mr. K. C. Neogy: What about the other side of the shield? Official terrorism?

Mr. Arthur Moore: Official terrorism on that occasion, as far as I know, was represented by the release of all political prisoners except those who were definitely connected with violence and whom it was considered impossible in the interests of the public security to release.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: What about the Black and Tans in Chittagong organised by your community?

Mr. Arthur Moore: The Honourable Member is making allegations which

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Which I am prepared, to substantiate outside this House.

Mr. Arthur Moore: My friend is taking up a very different attitude from that taken up by my friend Mr. Mitra. Now, Diwan Bahadur Mudaliar said this morning something very true, which I think we all agree with, that what is really required is vocal, energetic, operative public opinion. And if you look for expressions of that opinion, the two most hopeful signs that I have anywhere seen on the horizon are first the fact that the Bengal Council,—on which Mr. Neogy poured derision—did by a very large majority give the necessary powers for dealing with terrorism, and did pass the Bill which this is designed to supplement; and secondly the fact that the Opposition, when this Bill came before them, should have taken up such a responsible attitude and should have sent the Bill to the Select Committee, and in Select Committee should have handled it as they did. Those, I think, were moves in the very direction which Diwan Bahadur Mudaliar desires. But when it comes to a series of amendments which do vitally affect the Bill, I think we have got to ask ourselves what it is we are dealing with and to remember that if the Bill is to achieve its object, it must be able to cope with terrorism.

Mr. Ranga Iyer talked with scorn of dead documents. But dead documents are better than dead men; and when we are considering amendments, the general effect of which is to promote appeals to the courts and reference to courts, however much we always dislike interfering with habeas corpus, we must recognise that in Bengal the most definite terrorist more at present is the move to terrorise the courts. I will give three examples. In Calcutta recently we have had a Judge murdered in open Court. We have had a witness murdered, and only yesterday in Calcutta the prosecutor in the case that arose out of the murder of Ahsanullah Khan was seriously wounded and an attempt was made on his life

Mr. S. C. Mitra: By his own nephew. It was not a political case.

Mr. Arthur Moore: That I think at any rate shows that the Courts are an object of intimidation. I think we have got to keep our eye after all on the principle of this Bill, and however unpleasant it is, and however much we may dislike it, we cannot really deny to ourselves that in the present situation of the country the Government are justified in asking for these powers.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I cannot compliment the Members on the Treasury Benches either on their heads or their hearts for a measure like this. As regards the heart, I think the less I say the better, and probably if I were to tell the truth it might not be palatable. When my Honourable friend Sir James Crerar is leaving us for good, I shall not be hard upon him; in fact, in my heart of hearts I have great respect for that gentleman, but I feel that there is something wrong with his head. (Laughter.) When he introduces a small Bill like this with a Statement of Objects and Reasons, I find that there are certain objects mentioned in the Bill and there may be certain other objects hidden behind, but I do not find any reasons for the Bill. If it be urged that Honourable Members initiating legislative measures in this House are not bound to give reasons, I have nothing to say. The practice has always been to give a Statement of Objects and Reasons, and with respect to clause 2 I do not find any reasons given for the same, only the object has been mentioned. And what is that object? To send the detenus far away from their own province. In paragraph 3 of the Statement of Objects and Reasons, we find this:

"Clause 2 of the Bill empowers the Local Government. . . ."

Are we students of the lower classes that we could not understand the plain meaning of the following words?

—"Clause 2 of the Bill empowers the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, to make an order committing to custody in a jail outside Bengal any person against whom an order under sub-section (1) of section 2 of the local Act might be made."

I do not think that they wanted only to paraphrase clause 2 of the Bill, and even if it be taken as a paraphrase, I beg to submit that the paraphrase is less understandable than the provisions of clause 2. I searched for the statements of reason again and again; I did not find any reasons in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and after the Bill emerged from the Select Committee no reasons were given and I had to run down to the Notice Office to get a copy of the Bill as it was introduced to find what the Statement of Objects and Reasons was, but I could not find any reasons for clause 2. That shows with what intelligence this Statement of Objects and Reasons was prepared, and further with what intelligence the provisions of the Bill have been drafted. I think the Members of this Legislature have some sense of responsibility, and they also know what provisions of law are for the best interests of the country. If any of us deny that, at least the elected Members of the House would be stultifying themselves. It may be in the interests of the Government to deny it, but probably in their heart of hearts they do not believe that we are not watchful of the best interests of our country. If that be so, then this attempt to thrust this unpalatable Bill down our throats, this rather sugar coated Bill

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Where is the sugar? There is no sugar in it.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: My Honourable friend says there is no sugar. It is for the Honourable Sir James Crecar to supply it. Be that as it may, we are unable to swallow this Bill because of the outrageous provisions in it, and the Bill is not so innocent as my Honourable friend wants to make us believe. Instances are not rare—in fact, it is a matter of every day occurrence—turn over the pages of the newspapers—I mean the censored news that is only allowed by the Government to come out—turn over the pages of the newspapers, and you will find that people acquitted by courts of law, where they had been hauled up under false charges—otherwise they would not have been acquitted—by the myrmidons of my Honourable friends opposite—where they have been acquitted, as soon as they come out of the court room, within the court precincts, they are immediately arrested and detained. (Mr. S. C. Mitra: "For years.") This is a worse punishment than what the courts could have inflicted. I may be permitted through you to address my Honourable friend, Mr. Arthur Moore, the representative of the Anglo-Indian community (Laughter)

An Honourable Member: Colonel Gidney is the representative of the Anglo-Indian community, not Mr. Moore.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: From my early years I have known by Anglo-Indians those Englishmen who come to India to earn their living. Only recently the Eurasians, as we used to call them, adopted the description of Anglo-Indians and I beg to be excused, if inadvertently I have used a description which is no longer used by Mr. Moore's community. I beg to remind him when he pleaded for respect for the judgments of courts of justice, that the Government have little or no respect for the courts of justice. Judges who are paid by your Government, as soon as they acquit the accused of the very charges—trumped up charges, false charges in many instances—as soon as the men leave the court room and before they have left the court-precincts, you at once catch hold of them and inflict upon them far worse punishment than what the courts could have inflicted, namely, you transport them

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has to be repeatedly reminded to address the Chair.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Government at once banishes them, transports them to places like Deoli. (Mr. S. C. Mitra: "For an indefinite period"), and for an indefinite period. I can well understand a conviction for six months, two years or five years. I can count my days, months and years and look forward to the date of my release, but in this case by the indefiniteness of the term of punishment, the Government add another agony to the punishment itself. That being so, I think the Honourable Member has not been able to give sufficient reasons for the enactment of clause 2.

Sir, the Government think that we are children who cannot see through the game. During the long years that we have been here, I have often felt uncertain whether it was at all useful for us to remain here or not. I know that my friend Sir Lancelot Graham will not allow me to go away. Probably they want that we shall voice forth some sort of weak opposition so that they can enact any measure they like. In the Bengal Council they had in the Opposition, men like Mr. N. K. Bose, Dr. Naresh Chandra Sen-Gupta and Mr. B. C. Chatterjee. Their voices were the voices of those crying in the wilderness, and the Bill there was passed with the aid of flunkies and jo-hukums of the Bengal Council. They know in their heart of hearts that the Bengal Legislative Council is not really representative of the best intellect or patriotism of our countrymen. Sir James Crerar said that the major issue in Bengal was the existence of a grave situation; grave situation for whom—for the ill-clad and half-fed people of the villages? If by grave situation, Sir James Crerar means grave situation for the handful of foreigners who happen to be at present to rule the destinies of the province, I deny that. They are safely lodged in the Government House and Fort William and there is no necessity for legislation like this.

Sir, I shall try to be as brief as possible. The Honourable the Home Member referred to the immediate responsibility of the authorities. Responsibility for what? My friend Mr. Arthur Moore side-tracked the subject and diverted our attention to unemployment and economic troubles. These things were there even before this trouble. Sir, you possess a vast degree of imagination, and even if a portion of it had filtered down to my honourable friends over there, they would not adopt the methods which they are pursuing at the present moment. The real question before the country is the autocracy of the Government, and it has been well put by a young graduate girl whom if I call her a martyr you will probably come down on me, but if I read her statement that was solemnly made before a court of justice, when she was being tried for her very life, I think that Government if they have any imagination left will formulate other methods to grapple with the so-called revolutionary menace. This is what Miss Bina Das stated before the High Court, and it contains in a nutshell the political faith of young India:

"I confess I fired at His Excellency the Governor on the last Convocation Day at the Senate House. I hold myself entirely responsible for it. My object was to die, and if to die, to die nobly fighting against the despotic system of Government, which has kept my country in perpetual subjection to its infinite shame and endless suffering—and fighting in a way which cannot but tell.

I fired at the Governor impelled by my love for my country which is being repressed and which I attempted to do for the sake of my country, was a great violence on my own nature too. But I am glad that the life of Sir Stanley Jackson has been saved by Providence and that Lady Jackson and her children have been spared their terrible misfortune and I am glad I have attained my end without loss of life. . . . I can only place here the state of my mind which led me to do this act, which, I do realise, was an outrage on my nature and a severe injustice to the family to which I belong and the institution where I was having my education, an institution which loved me dearly and exercised the highest influence on my life and character and which I looked upon with all regard due to a mother, but the love of my country was always supreme in my mind and I felt very deeply in my heart the condition of my country.

I had been thinking—Is life worth living in an India so subjected to wrong, and continually groaning under the tyranny of a foreign Government or is it not better to make one's supreme protest against it by suffering one's life away. Would not the immolation of a daughter of India and a son of England awaken India to the sin of its acquiescence of its continued state of subjection and England to the iniquities of its proceedings. This is the one question that kept thundering at the gates of my brain like an incessant hammer-blow that could neither be muffled nor stilled.

My sense of religion and morality is not inconsistent with my sense of political freedom. I believe that a person who is politically slave cannot realise God, who is the spirit of Freedom and I have held, therefore, that political freedom is originally connected with religion and morality, and there ought to be no conflict between them. In fact, I feel in the heart of my heart that the best and the divine in humanity cries in revolt against all forms of tyranny in this world.

Political freedom, religion and moral ideals should therefore be blended together into one harmonious whole, and the subject races inhabiting this globe should be politically free. It was for the purpose of bringing this fact home to the thinkers in India and other countries that I selected, as my field of action, the Convocation Hall of my sacred Alma Mater."

Sir, read her statement, go through it, think over it. This is not the statement of a demagogue, but that of a girl brought up in the best traditions of a Hindu household, educated in one of the finest institutions in Calcutta. With all the fervour and goodness and love of humanity in her, she fires a fatal shot and then, when her fatal shot does not succeed, she is not only content but glad. I do not know whether, with your mentality, you will be able to appreciate the spiritual meaning of her statement. If you can, then I think India's salvation is near at hand, and you and I shall be able to walk hand in hand in this sacred land for many a long year to come. It is not our desire to expel you from

Mr. President: I must again remind the Honourable Member to address the Chair:

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: I am sorry, Sir. Sir, it is not the desire of the Indians to expel the Britisher from India. It cannot be their desire, having regard to their religious teachings.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: What has religion to do with that?

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: I hope, Sir, it is not their desire also to blot us out of existence. If that be so, we should adopt measures which appeal to the reason of both the communities. Sir, the other day we were told that this very Assembly passed a Bill like this. Sir, a statement like that, coming from the official Benches, pains me very much. In fact a Bill like this was refused by the Assembly, while it was passed by the elders in the Council of State. Sir, I do not wish to show, section by section, how this iniquitous Bill can be made to oppress and tyrannise over the youth of Bengal. I wish for its total rejection; and, Sir, in doing so I think I can do no better than appeal to the Honourable Member—because I believe he has a warm heart inside, however rough his exterior may be. (Laughter.) I feel today, Sir, the supreme necessity of the lessons of those silent masters of humanity who realise the highest destinies of human life, and yet remain for ever the beacon-lights far, far away from the maddening crowds' ignoble strife to show the struggling way farers which way lies the path.

Sir, in this Assembly we have carried on for years nothing but ignoble strifes; we deluded ourselves that we were securing liberties and protecting rights for our own people. Sir, my name has been associated with several attempts to repeal that antiquated, rusty weapon for suppressing human liberty, I mean Regulation III of 1818. Compared with that Regulation, what is today being attempted to be passed as law is but the bare skeleton of a cowardly autocracy, shorn of all flesh and blood of decency and form, to make that skeleton presentable as a human institution! Regulation III of 1818, Sir, recognizes the status of an individual, as apart from the State, and the duty of the State to maintain life and relationship of the family and dependants of the unfortunate individual detained. Now, the Government are going to pass a law to proclaim before the world that in India, Indians have no status, no separate right to live, and no relations either, by birth or marriage, as against the will of a few Englishmen who like to enjoy the game of football with human life and liberty! Sir, if this be called a law, I do not know what negation of law is. I know that a parallel to this terrorising autocracy may be found in the history of the Czars of Russia, but I have yet to learn that there is a theory of jurisprudence anywhere on earth which legalises and sanctions official terrorism in the way in which this Bill attempts to make play things of human liberties in the name of maintenance of law and order. Sir, Sir Samuel Hoare complacently chuckles, at a safe distance, over the drastic and severe nature of the Ordinances, and as the bandmaster calls the tune, namely, to do away with the scandal of detenus allowances, his pipers here are playing the same song. "Vengeance is mine", says the Lord in Olympia, and his angels of the heaven-born service say, "Amen"! And they bring in a piece of legislation,—they say to supplement, or to complement, or to implement, what is nothing but an instrument of vengeance in the hands of the powers that be. Sir, what was standing in the way of the use of that instrument? The public opinion of Bengal, the vigilant alertness of Bengali society, the healthy, responsive nerves of the collective Bengali mind! In the presence of that feature in Bengal, the bullies moved the heaven of the India Council and the earth of Delhi,—and here, lo, is this Bill. I am not, Sir, addressing these words to those Members of this House whose vision is blinded by the passions of the hour. What I am concerned with is the attitude of some of my countrymen here who would falter and fail to play the man at this critical juncture of this country's history. I would implore them, Sir, to realize, even now, the significance of associating this Assembly with this measure of pure tyranny. Sir, the Joint Parliamentary Committee appointed to consider the Montagu-Chelmsford scheme proclaimed that it was no reproach to it that the Government of India was autocratic. It is autocratic even, I say, Sir, after the Montagu reforms. There is nothing in the constitution to prevent the Government from keeping either their prisoners or their under-trials, or any class of people, under their absolute autocratic sway, anywhere they like, under whatever conditions they like, either in Deoli or in Timbuctoo. They come before you, Sir, to enable them to do so; why? Because—because—as some well-known modern thinkers have said—“Pretence is the key to modern civilization”—Pretence is the price which vice pays to virtue. Pretence, Sir, is the mask, which reason seeks to put on, to cover the hideousness of cowardice.

Therefore, Sir, the only issue before this House is—whether we would help this sham pretence to succeed, or whether we would, as true sons of our motherland, stand up for the great immutable eternal principles of humanity, sympathy and bare justice? These detenus have done, Sir, nothing wrong within the purview and scope of any written or unwritten code or penal code, except this, that they are sensitive nerve-centres of the collective mind of Bengal. I admit, a blow on these centres agonises the whole of my province. I can also admit that, far away in the lonely desert of Deoli, 99 per cent. of the detenus, or perhaps 999 out of one thousand of them, may submit to cowardice. But what about the remaining one? I ask my friends here to pause for a moment and give a reply themselves. The memories of our ignoble strife here in this Assembly will be forgotten, the revolt of cowering power, seeking pretence, will recoil on itself, the exigencies of political hobnobbing will be obliged to find its grovelling level—in the presence of the One individual, who would revive the history of liberty, honour and courage. Practically for the last 25 years, Bengal has been chosen to bear the travails of a new birth. In this legislation, my friends here have only one alternative to adopt—to watch in solemn pause and welcome the birth and not to add to the sufferings of humanity, and therefore to throw out this Bill, and thereby to prove true to your countrymen.

Mr. Muhammad Azhar Ali (Lucknow and Fyzabad Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Mr. President, the legislation that is before the House at present relates mostly to the Bengal province, and I would like to remind the House that Bengal is that very province where once the partition of Bengal took place. The House very well remembers, and I suppose the Government also remember it very well, how the matter came about and how it was that it ended. In reply to our Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore when he says that the House has not suggested so far any remedy to this terrorist movement, I would like to refer him first of all to that incident which happened in India when His Imperial Majesty himself came to this country to undo the effects of the partition of Bengal. It was that very province which had shown to the British Government how the people of Bengal could organise themselves and how the people of Bengal could rise to the occasion. Sir, if this Bill is passed and if this measure is enacted and if this enactment is worked, I have absolutely no doubt that the people of Bengal will again rise to the occasion and it will be a very sad day in the history of India if any of the Royal family has to come again to this country to appease the people. I would also remind my friend Mr. Arthur Moore how the matter of the Cawnpore mosque was settled by one of the greatest Viceroys of India, and how Lord Irwin had to settle the question with Mahatma Gandhi. Those are the instances and those are the ways in which conciliation could come to India, and let me tell the House that it would come in that very way and by no other means. (Applause.)

Sir, I have been following continuously for the last four days the debate that has been going on in this House and the trench warfare that has been occasioned in the passing of this drastic legislation. Every clause and every portion of the Bill has been contested. There have been Government cannons and machine guns, but still with small opposition forces in the House and with such unanimity that the Opposition could have, they have after all been able to carry a very small portion of the Bill in their favour. Still the country knows very well how we are constituted. When the new constitution comes into being, we hope that this defect will be removed and it is then that India will breathe free air. Sir, by this Act and by this legislation, we are depriving the detenus of their ordinary rights; we are depriving them of their customs and of their manners; we are depriving them of their ordinary clothing. If there is a Mussalman detenu, then I do not know how he will be able to offer his prayers with only one short cloth that is given to him. The only remedy which I can suggest and which has been suggested by my Honourable friends also is the grant of Dominion Status and it should be granted to us without the least possible delay, at the least provincial autonomy. The statements which my Honourable friends Mr. Mitra and Mr. Amar Nath Dutt have read out today from a girl in Bengal will show from a detenu's point of view as if she was serving her own country and responding to the calls of her country, but all over India, from a different point of view, she is represented to be an anarchist. Although we cannot help admiring the feelings and sentiments that she has expressed and her desire that she would like every countryman to come forward and serve the cause of the Indian nation, still we cannot like her action and every one denounces that. Sir, this terrorist movement is, of course, confined at present to Bengal. But if the enactments go on just as they are going on now, and if this autocratic way of rule continues, I am bound to confess before the Government that difficult times may come and other provinces may also adopt the same terrorist attitude. It will then be a very sad day for the Government to carry on their administration. At present I only want to appeal to the Government Benches that the administration of the country cannot be carried on in the way in which it is being carried on. If no conciliatory Acts are passed and if no conciliatory policy is adopted, I am afraid Government will have to face very bad days indeed in this land.

Sardar Harbans Singh Brar (East Punjab: Sikh): Mr. President, I have risen because I have felt on this measure very deeply since its introduction. I am reminded of what an ex-Secretary of State for India has said, I mean Mr. Wedgwood Benn, that the greatest State interest is the impartiality of the law. By that he meant not the impartiality of our Judges and jurors but the impartiality exhibited by the Department of Public Prosecutions in the initiation of the proceedings. Sir, he considered it bad enough to start proceedings without the greatest care against a person when he had a chance of defending himself in an open court of law, when he had a chance of cross-examining the prosecution case and of putting in his defence. But here by this measure not only has he none of these opportunities; he does not even know what his fault is, and what wrong he has done either to the State or to the society. The only reason for depriving him of his liberty for an indefinite period is a report by the police. The Government are to act on that drama-like story written by that department of the State. What the Indian police is, we all know. If their statements are to be accepted as true, it will be very difficult for us to find cases which can ever be described as false, and if they (the policemen) are to be considered as respectable gentlemen, it will be very difficult for us to find the contrary.

[Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar.]

Sir, is it right now, at the time when Government are trying to ease the political situation in this great sub-continent, that they should try to persecute the young men and women in this country? Is it fair for them that they should start in a spirit of vengeance to solve the political situation of the country? Nobody in this House or outside would support terrorism as such. None of us would ever like to lend our support to such a movement. But what we feel is that the remedy applied to it is not going to prove the proper remedy, but it will prove to be an incentive to the movement itself. It will not suppress the movement. When one person is detained in prison, it will produce ten to take place. The fact that we, the people of the Opposition, are here is a proof of our moderation. Had we been extremists, then our place would have been in Deoli or in some other jail. But even our moderate amendments like the one that the provisions of this Bill should be complied with have not been accepted and that shows the spirit with which the Government are trying to persecute the spirit of nationalism. Now, that we have had many a battle between the Government and nationalism and that at every time conciliation was found to be the only remedy and that repression did not succeed, this should have opened the eyes of the Honourable the Home Member, now nearing his retirement. He must have realised that it is no use trying the old-fashioned quack remedies which, instead of proving real remedies, will increase the disease all the more and prove to be an incentive to the movement which they have at heart to suppress.

Sir, I feel it with sorrow and I utter it with great reluctance, that these measures, these policies and these actions of Government will undo what I always loved and valued, namely, the friendship and co-operation of the British people with Indians. My five years stay in England brought me into contact with the best of Englishmen, from the retired reactionary Civilian to the most up-to-date socialist of the Glasgow type. Among my friends I counted Sir Michael O'Dwyer and Mr. Maxton. I can say on the floor of this House that they valued my friendship. My views were the same as they are now. I always spoke with the utmost frankness about how I felt about it, and it was my frankness regarding the political conditions in India that made even the die-hards like me. I addressed meetings there on the Indian political situation. In Scotland at Edinburgh, and in Glasgow and even in London, I addressed meetings. Those contacts with the people there made me love them and love their principles of liberty and democratic government, and their jurisprudence that every one is presumed innocent until and unless the contrary is proved. That made me admire them. But, alas! these Christian gentlemen who have come to the East to give God to the heathens advocating the spirit of Christ and to give English jurisprudence to these people in preference to their own mediæval laws are now trying to forget those English principles and trying to govern this country and direct the destinies of the people in other ways, all the time professing to lead us to the progressivism of the West. This is the inheritance they are going to leave to the future Governments of India, of jurisprudence. Here, I appeal to the heart of the Honourable the Home Member that now that he is going away from this unpleasant atmosphere of a coercive Government in India, now that he is going to that great freedom loving country, to that great nation which has fought for the freedom and the principle of self-determination of another people in addition to their own, I appeal to him that he should give the spirit of English jurisprudence to the man in the street, to the ordinary citizen of the State and even at this late date I appeal to him to realise that in the past even in this country repression and coercion and persecution have failed as a remedy. On the other hand it has proved as an incentive to discontent, and that reconciliation and large mindedness of dealing with the problems with a broader outlook have succeeded. I appeal to the Honourable the Home Member that he should even now consider the advisability of giving up these measures and these remedies for dealing with the most complicated situation. Sir, these regulations have been tried from time almost immemorial and these regulations have been on the Statute-book for over a century. This detention without trial has not been able to suppress the spirit of nationalism and the spirit for liberation of the country from autocracy in that one province of Bengal, what to say of in the whole of India. This has been tried in the last century and it was tried early in this century but proved of no avail. Is experience of no utility, is reason of no benefit to the Members opposite? Are they always to be guided by the mere fact that they have a mechanical majority in this House? Are they only to consider whether a measure is good or bad by the fact that they have a standing majority due to the presence of the official block? In that spirit they will not be able to carry out the mission for which they profess to have come here, for the mission which they profess to carry out as also the pledges of the Sovereign given to India to be a self-governing Dominion within the Commonwealth of the British Empire. It is nothing but a modest demand from these Benches that fairness must be shown in all measures to the views of those who represent public opinion on the floor of this House. It is we who have come here to represent the masses, the teeming millions, for safeguarding whose interests the Honourable Members opposite justify their presence within the borders of this land. Is it to their interest that they should alienate the feelings of even moderate people by adopting measures which men of experience and culture like Diwan Bahadur Mudaliar think will not serve as a remedy for the disease which the Government are trying to eradicate from the young men of Bengal? Is it fair that with the Round Table Conference going on in London, the Consultative Committee in the Viceregal Lodge, the Franchise Committee on the rails, we should, on the other hand, instead of appeasing the conditions in the country, instead of winning support for the reforms coming in the near future, force the people to feel that the Government are not showing their bona fides and that the Government are not really doing within their inner councils what they are professing to do for the betterment of the political condition of the country? In the year 1930 they were feeling in the same strain as now of suppressing the national spirit, but after a year's trial they came to the conclusion that they were tired of repression and could pursue it no longer. They thought that conciliation was the only remedy which could solve the problem and save the situation. We are not aware of the reasons which again led them to start the same old method of solving the problem, namely, repression. Early in the year they thought that they would take five or six weeks to suppress the movement and crush the Congress. Even now after about three months they are not sure whether this period of six weeks is not going to be extended to ten times that period to enable them to crush the Congress. Either today or tomorrow history will repeat itself. Conciliation will again have to be considered as the only remedy. Why embitter feelings? Why prolong the agony? Why not come to grips with the situation? The hand of friendship from the Indian side is extended to them, it is for them to grasp it.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Ask for 30 per cent. representation for Sikhs in the services.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: I would be the last person to deny a fair share to the community which my friend Mr. K. Ahmed represents. I think Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians

Mr. President: Need the Honourable Member go into all these questions at this late hour?

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: Everybody and every community feels that the situation can only be solved by conciliation. Measures like the present will only add insult to the injury. It will not in any way stop either the movement in Bengal or appease the national situation outside. I appeal now to the Honourable the Home Member that history is bound to repeat itself. Let them retrace their steps and even now revise their decision and not pursue this measure to its logical end and put it on the Statute-book. I appeal to him that he should win the sympathy of the young men in the solution of the problem and win the heart of India before he leaves the shores of Bombay.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The Honourable Sir James Grear: Mr. President, after so many days' debate and at this very late hour, I am sure that the House will not expect, or indeed desire me to say more than a very few words and indeed there are only three things which I do desire to say. The first is this: it has been a matter of very great regret to me that it has been imputed to me, that during the course of the debates on this Bill, more particularly in matters relating to the conditions of detention and the like, I have shown an attitude unsympathetic and lacking in humanity. Honourable Members who have expressed that view, have, I think, forgotten that while much to my regret I was unable to accept several amendments standing on the paper, nevertheless on points of very great substance relating to these matters, I have given assurances which, though they are not to be embodied in the Statute, nevertheless will stand as assurances which will be honoured when the occasion arises. The second thing that I have to say is this: it has been suggested that the whole policy of the Government in dealing with the particular trouble of Bengal also as has been implied with the general political situation, is involved in this measure. My Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore said some very pertinent words on that subject. The policy of Government is two-fold, as has been repeatedly said. One is to urge on with all possible expedition the advance in political progress of this country, and in the meantime and predominantly for that purpose, to maintain the only conditions under which that progress can safely and securely be made. The last thing I have to say is this: some remarks which I could only construe in a disparaging sense were made on the Government of Bengal and the Legislature of Bengal. I think, Sir, that if we reflect fairly and candidly on the question, Honourable Members opposite may perhaps misjudge the wisdom or they may misinterpret the motives of the executive Government of Bengal, though I do not think they have any warrant for doing so. But they certainly have no warrant whatever for misjudging the motives and for making reflections upon the intelligence and knowledge of the situation which has been displayed by that Legislature. Therefore, I say once more,—that we ought to treat with due respect and due regard the strongly expressed views of that Legislature, and as the Central Legislature we ought to render them the assistance which they require from us.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 31st March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

LETTER BY MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ON THE FUTURE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA.

1084. Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware that a letter was addressed by some Members of the Legislative Assembly to the Honourable the Leader of the House on the question of the future constitution of India?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to lay the letter on the table of the House?

(c) Do Government propose to forward the letter to the Secretary of State for India along with the proceedings of the Assembly to which the letter refers?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes.

(b) A copy of the letter referred to is laid on the table.

(c) Action will be taken as suggested.

Legislative Assembly,
New Delhi, 16th March, 1932.

To

The Hon'ble Sir George Rainy, Leader, Legislative Assembly.

SIR,

Least the speeches of the Assembly Opposition leaders revealing their own views during the debate on Monday, the 14th March, 1932, on the "token" cut motion of Sir Hari Singh Gaur under the head Executive Council (future of Indian Constitution) should be misunderstood as expressing the considered views of the Opposition, the undersigned who were not able to express their views owing to the peculiar circumstances in which the debate took place on Monday, desire to place on record that they are not agreeable to whittling down the scheme of Constitutional reforms advertised at the Round Table Conference, nor are they agreeable to the whittling down of the responsibility at the Centre in any future scheme, federal or otherwise, nor do they approve of a revival of the Scheme of the Simon Commission or of the India Central Committee in any shape or form.

CANDIDATES APPOINTED TO THE SUPERIOR TELEGRAPH AND WIRELESS ENGINEERING BRANCHES, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

1085. *Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: (a) Is it a fact that two candidates have been appointed, with effect from the 1st March, 1932, to the Superior Telegraph and Wireless Engineering Branches (Posts and Telegraphs Department) on the result of the competitive examination held by the Public Service Commission in November, 1931?

(b) Is it a fact that their position on the consolidated list of candidates for the Superior Engineering Services Examination was 22nd?

(c) Is it a fact that as a result of their selection the sixth candidate on that list has not been selected either for the I. R. S. E. or for the I. S. E.?

(d) Is it a fact that the principle followed in making the selection last year was to treat the examination as a combined one for all the three Superior Engineering Services and to select from the consolidated list as many of the topmost candidates as there were open vacancies in all the three Engineering Services combined?

(e) Is it a fact that the result of the selection for the I. R. S. E. and the I. S. E. on the result of the Superior Engineering Services Examination held in November last has not yet been announced? If so, will Government explain the reason for making appointments to the Superior Telegraph and Wireless Engineering Branches (Posts and Telegraphs Department)?

(f) Is it a fact that the principle followed last year in making the selection for the I. R. S. E. or I. S. E. has not been followed in the case of the sixth candidate mentioned in part (c) above?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) The two candidates alluded to have been selected for training with a view to appointment as stated.

(b) They were twenty-second and twenty-third in the list.

(c) and (d). Yes.

(e) The selection was announced in two Press Communiqués dated the 24th and 21st March, respectively.

The second part of the question does not arise.

(f) In so far as last year, those who were highest in the list were all selected for the service, whereas this year the first four candidates and the 22nd and 23rd were selected, the practice has not been uniform. In making their selections, Government gave the top candidates their first preference. Messrs. Suroj Kumar Kanjilal and Prem Mahesh Agarwala were the next persons in order of merit who had entered themselves as candidates for this service.

ARREST OF MR. W. A. EDGE OF THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT, DELHI, FOR ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT.

1086. Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that Mr. W. A. Edge, S.D.O. of Central P. W. D., Delhi, was arrested by the police on 15th March, 1932, in connection with alleged embezzlement of I. D. R. charges at Bardhamba?

(b) If the answer to the above be in the affirmative, will Government say if they have suspended Mr. Edge and if not, why not?

(c) If Mr. Edge is kept on duty can he under the rules deal with matters having direct or indirect bearing on his case?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhaie: (a) Yes.

(b) Mr. Edge was not suspended. Before arrangements could be made to relieve him, the case against him was withdrawn and he was discharged.

(c) Does not arise.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN JAINS AND HINDUS IN CONNECTION WITH RETRENCHMENT IN THE OFFICE OF THE ACCOUNTANT GENERAL, CENTRAL REVENUES.

1087. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai (on behalf of Bhai Parma Nand): (a) Is it a fact that discrimination has been made by the office of the Accountant General, Central Revenues, between the Jains and other Hindus in the matter of retrenching the employees in that office?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, do the authorities in that office propose to create a kind of differentiation between the Jains and other Hindus? If not, what are their reasons for the above discrimination?

Mr. J. O. Nixon: Enquiry is being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

†Question withdrawn by the questioner

FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT AND THE PROVINCES.

1089. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the new constitutional reforms will simultaneously bring readjustment of financial relations between the Centre and provinces?

(b) Is the Federal Finance Committee looking into this aspect of the question?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to adhere to the principle of equitable distribution of tax between the Centre and provinces, as has been the practice since 1921, or do they want to go back to pre-Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms policy again and collect taxes at the centre and distribute to provinces as has been done in the case of the North-West Frontier Province by giving it a subvention of one crore of rupees from Central funds?

(d) Do Government propose to allocate further taxes from the Centre to the North-West Frontier Province, so that it will do three years hence without the subvention?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The Government of India are unable to state what the new constitution will provide in this matter.

(b) The Federal Finance Committee will report on certain aspects of the question.

(c) I cannot at this stage state what the Government of India's opinion will be on any proposals which may eventually be made.

(d) The position of the North-West Frontier Province will depend upon the final constitutional arrangements which may be adopted.

SUBVENTION GRANTED TO THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

1090. Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to the announcement of the grant of a subvention to the North-West Frontier Province in the Honourable the Finance Member's speech in paragraph 36:

"The subvention is to be operative for three years, or until the new constitution for India is inaugurated—whichever is the earlier. In either event the position will again be revised"; will Government be pleased to state if it will be left to the new Assembly (Federal Assembly or whatever it be called) to revise the amount of subvention to the North-West Frontier Province?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether this subvention of one crore of rupees will be incorporated also in the new Government of India Act, arising out of the constitutional reforms?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). It is impossible for me at this stage to say what procedure will be provided for in or under the new legislation for such a payment as this.

Consequently I am unable to reply explicitly to part (b) of the question, but the Honourable Member may rest assured that due provision will be made in the new Act.

GRANTS TO ORISSA AND SIND AND FOR BUILDINGS IN NEW DELHI.

1091. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to grant lump sum provincial balances to the Provinces of Orissa and Sind as stated in the footnote at page 685 of the Detailed Estimates and Demands for Grants ("a sum of rupees ten lakhs from the Government of India balances will also be placed at the disposal of the new province")?

(b) Are Government making any special contribution towards the Council and other buildings of the new Government?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The Government of India are not at present proposing anything of this kind.

(b) The Government of India assumed an expenditure of Rs. 3 lakhs for special building operations necessitated by the new status of the North-West Frontier Province in estimating the amount of the opening balance to be allotted to the province.

Mr. B. Das: Will the Honourable Member bear in mind the suggestion made in the question?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am sure my Honourable colleague always bears in mind my Honourable friend's suggestions.

PROTECTION FOR THE COTTON MILL INDUSTRY.

1092. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have referred the question of protection to the cotton mill industries to the Tariff Board? What are the terms of reference of this inquiry?

(b) Did the cotton mill industries ask for such an inquiry at present?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). Government have not yet referred the question of protection to the cotton mill industry to the Tariff Board for enquiry but they propose to do so shortly in accordance with the undertaking given in this House by the Honourable the Finance Member in his Budget speech on the 29th February, 1930, and by me on the 13th March, 1930, during the passage of the Cotton Textile Industry (Protection) Bill. The terms of reference, when formulated, will, as usual, be published in the Gazette of India.

NUMBER OF CLERKS IN THE OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION, DELHI, AJMER-MERWARA AND CENTRAL INDIA.

1093. Mr. S. C. Mitra (on behalf of Mr. B. N. Misra): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of clerks working in the Office of the Superintendent of Education, Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara and Central India and how many of them are Hindus, Muslims and others?

(b) Is it a fact that the son of the Head Clerk of that office is also working under his father?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) There are ten clerks in the Office of the Superintendent of Education, Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara and Central India, of whom seven are Muslims and three Hindus.

(b) Yes.

DEPARTMENTAL PUNISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT SERVANTS.

1094. Mr. S. C. Mitra (on behalf of Mr. B. N. Misra): Will Government please state if it is a fact that no departmental punishment is permissible under rules in the following cases:

- (a) if a Government servant merely attends a political meeting and takes no part in the proceedings thereof;
- (b) if a Government servant is honourably acquitted or discharge after full enquiry by a court of law on the charge of bribery or any other allegation amounting to moral turpitude such as misappropriation of Government money, etc., and
- (c) if a Government servant, though handed over to the police, is not ultimately challaned by that authority for want of evidence against him?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to rules 22 and 23 of the Government Servants Conduct Rules, a copy of which is in the Library.

(b) and (c). An order of acquittal or discharge by a court of law is no necessarily a bar to the institution of departmental proceedings. No would the inability of the police to pursue an investigation into the conduct of a Government servant always prevent such conduct being the subject of departmental proceedings.

INDIAN ARMY CADETS ADMITTED TO SANDHURST.

1095. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Sir Abdullat Suhrawardy): (a) Will Government please state the total number of Indian Army Cadets who have been admitted into the English Sandhurst by nomination up to now? How many of them were above the age of 25 or the date of their nomination?

(b) Have Government considered the following recommendation of the Indian Military College Committee which was presided over by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief:

"Indian Army Cadets will ordinarily be eligible for nomination as at present up to the age of 25. As for some years to come at any rate, it may be difficult to obtain from the ranks youngmen of 25 or under possessing sufficient educational qualifications, it is desirable that the condition of age should be waived, as is also the present practice for the next few years?"

(c) Do Government propose to waive the condition of age in the case of those Indian Army Cadets who are members of the regular units of the Indian Army and of the Auxiliary and Territorial Forces? If so, to what extent? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The total up to date is seven. One was over 25 years of age. The figures given at the end of paragraph 13 of the Indian Military College Committee's report appear to have been incorrect.

(b) Yes.

(c) It will not be necessary to do so, since no difficulty is now anticipated in obtaining a sufficient number of Indian Army cadets below the age of 25 years.

PORTERS OF THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE "A" DIVISION REMOVED FROM SERVICE.

1096. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Lala Brij Kishore): (a) Is it a fact that some porters of R. M. S. "A" Division have been removed from service? If so, how many and on what grounds?

(b) Will Government be also pleased to state how many have been re-instated after an appeal to the Postmaster General, United Provinces and how many of these are still unprovided for and outsiders working in their places

Mr. T. Ryan: With your permission, Sir, I propose to take questions Nos. 1096, 1097 and 1098 together. Government have no information on the points raised in these questions with all of which, however, it is within the competence of the Head of the Circle to deal. A copy of the questions is accordingly being forwarded to the Postmaster General, United Provinces, for such action as he may think desirable.

DISSATISFACTION AMONG STAFF OF THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE "A" DIVISION.

1097. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Lala Brij Kishore): (a) Are Government aware of the fact that great dissatisfaction prevails among the staff of R. M. S. "A" Division if so, why?

(b) Do Government propose to make any inquiries?

PORTERS APPOINTED TO THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE "A" DIVISION.

1098. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Lala Brij Kishore): (a) Is it a fact that many porters have been appointed in the R. M. S. "A" Division, without producing medical certificates of fitness and without the approval of the Postmaster General? If so, what departmental action do Government propose to take in the matter?

(b) Is it a fact that certain porters of other Circles have been taken in the R. M. S. "A" Division, without the approval of the Postmaster General, United Provinces, and their travelling allowance bills passed? If so, what action has been taken in the matter?

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

SECRET EUROPEAN CIRCULAR REGARDING THE REFORMS.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Has Government's attention been drawn to the article in the Tribune of the 20th March, 1932, under the caption "Secret European Circular"?

(b) Are the facts contained in it impugning the bona fides of the present British Government regarding the Round Table Conference, their mind to break up the Conference in order to fight the Congress and give only nominal reforms to India correct?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1096.

(c) Is it a fact that in consequence a plan was adopted in which the British Government, the Europeans, the Muslims, the Princes and the minorities joined hands and also succeeded in roping in their so-called "strange companions" the Moderates represented by Sir T. B. Sapru, Sir A. P. Patro, Mr. M. R. Jayakar and others?

(d) Is it a fact that in consequence the Europeans of the Round Table Conference pressed upon Government to show one essential earnest of good faith, viz., to undertake to bring in the Provincial and Central constitutions in one Act?

(e) Is it a fact that in return the Europeans of the Round Table Conference promised the Muslims to find places for them in European firms?

(f) Is it a fact that all this took place sometime before the United Provinces Congress Committee passed a resolution advising tenants in a particular district in the province to withhold payment of rent and long before the Congress restarted the civil disobedience movement?

(g) Is it a fact that Mr. Benthall was one of the members of the Round Table Conference?

(h) If so, is it a fact that Mr. Benthall or any other European has issued the circular in the terms mentioned in the aforesaid article to give effect to the above-mentioned secret settlement?

(i) Are Government prepared to deny that such a circular has been issued?

(j) Are Government prepared to repudiate the charges mentioned in the aforesaid article publicly by a press communiqué and make a full statement on the subject on the floor of this House? If not, why not?

(k) If what are stated above are correct, will Government be pleased to state what is their present object in carrying on the Round Table Conference Committees any further and at such enormous cost?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Government have seen the Press accounts of the circular. They have no other information regarding it.

(b) to (k). Government are concerned with the other part of the question only in so far as they relate to first, the suggestion of bad faith on the part of His Majesty's Government as regards the Round Table Conference and their policy of constitutional reforms for India, and second the implication that action was taken against the Congress not because of their activities but as part of a preconceived plan.

In regard to the first, I would refer the Honourable Member to the statement made by the Prime Minister on the 1st December last, which contains a full enunciation of the policy of His Majesty's Government. I would further remind him of the intensive efforts that have since been made, and are now being made, to expedite the progress of the reforms. I would also refer him to the statement issued by His Majesty's Government on March the 19th, 1932, and to the speech made by the Secretary of State in the House of Commons on March 24th, 1932. These contain a complete refutation of the first suggestion.

In regard to the second, there is no foundation whatsoever for the suggestion that the action taken against the Congress was not determined solely and entirely by the situation created in India, and particularly in the United Provinces and the North-West Frontier Province, by their activities. In this connection I would refer the Honourable Member to the statements issued by the Government of the United Provinces on the 14th of December, 1931, by the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province on the 24th and 30th December, 1931, and by the Government of India on the 4th January, 1932.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Mr. Benthall in his letter says that as a result of the election the policy of Government undoubtedly changed. I want to know how that policy changed?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I see no obligation resting on Government to explain circulars attributed to particular private individuals

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I am not asking him to explain the circular. I am asking how the policy of the national Government changed?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member is assuming that the statement attributed to Mr. Benthall in this newspaper article is correct.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: What responsibility have the Government had in the selection of Mr. Benthall as a delegate to the Round Table Conference.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: It has been explained many times that the selection is made by His Majesty's Government and not by the Government of India.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Undoubtedly so, but did the Government of India have any hand whatsoever in the matter? That is my question. Did the Government of India forward his name or suggest his inclusion in the delegation?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India are not the constitutional advisers of His Majesty's Government in this matter. It rests entirely with the Government at home as to whom to consult and whom not to consult.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I understand the constitutional implications of the position. My whole question is, had the Government any hand whatsoever in this matter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am speaking purely from recollection, but I do not recollect the Government of India making a single corporate recommendation.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: What does the Honourable Member mean by the expression "single corporate recommendation?"

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I mean what I say.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member kindly explain the expression having regard to the fact that English is not my mother tongue?

Will the Honourable Member now represent to His Majesty's Government in England that in so far as Mr. Benthall has misrepresented the objects with which the Government at home are actuated in regard to the reforms, they should consider the desirability of removing Mr. Benthall from the European delegation.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member is assuming that the Government have any knowledge whether this article correctly ascribes certain views to Mr. Benthall. The Government of India have no such knowledge.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Government be pleased to write to the Home Government and ask them to write to Mr. Benthall and find out whether this is a correct copy of the letter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India see no reason for taking any such action.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Do I take it that the answers to this question are being given by the Honourable Member without any reference to the Home Government?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member knows perfectly well that no disclosures are ever made as regards communications between the Government of India and His Majesty's Government.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Well, I know that.

Sardar Sant Singh: Is it a fact, as stated by Mr. Benthall in this particular letter, that he consulted the best legal opinion available, of the Law officers of the Crown, of the India Office and of the Foreign Office. May I know who pays the Law Officers of the India Office—India or the British Government? If the advice was given by the India Office lawyers, was it done with the consent of the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have no information as to how it was done.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member take steps to ascertain whether it was done or not?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not see any sufficient reason for doing so.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state if the Government have consulted or inquired from Mr. Benthall as regards this article, after this short notice question was put?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state who is this D. W. Mullick who has subscribed to this article?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have no idea.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: This article was published first in the Advance of Calcutta and it was subscribed by Mr. D. W. Mullick. Has the Honourable Member made any inquiry or does he know who this Mr. Mullick is?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The answer is in the negative.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state if, after this short notice question was put, there was any communication with the Secretary of State, and will the Honourable Member also explain why consent to this short notice question was given so late as to-day? The question was put on the 24th of this month.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have already said that we do not in any circumstances disclose communications which pass between the Government of India and the Secretary of State.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I only want to know a fact, whether the Secretary of State was communicated with or not?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I am not prepared to satisfy the Honourable Member's curiosity.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member please say why there was delay in giving his consent to this short notice question being asked?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government are not bound to accept short notice.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: That is quite true. I am asking why there was delay in giving consent. I do not dispute the right of the Government not to accept short notice questions.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not think the Honourable Member is entitled to have a reply to that question.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Was it not due to the Easter holidays?

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Is the Honourable Member aware that his refusal to supply answers is more eloquent than any reply that he might have given?

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it because the surreptitious activities of Mr. Benthall are in consonance with the wishes of the Government of India that the Government of India refuse to take any steps in the matter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am not aware of any surreptitious activities of Mr. Benthall, and the Government of India have no sympathy with surreptitious activities of any one whatsoever.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: In view of the disclosures made in Mr. Benthall's letter, are the Government of India prepared to give an opportunity to this House to discuss the new facts brought to light?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member is still assuming that we have information that this is the circular issued by Mr. Benthall. We have no such information.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: May I know whether the Honourable Member has come across any contradiction that may have appeared in the Press so far from Mr. Benthall, that is to say, has he ever challenged the accuracy of the facts as published in the Press?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government have no information.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member kindly ask the Director of Public Information to go through the files of newspapers and satisfy himself as to whether such a contradiction has ever appeared in any papers?

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Will the Honourable Member kindly state why no categorical answers were given to the several parts of the question?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have answered the question fully in so far as it relates to matters for which the Government are responsible.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Will the Honourable Member kindly state, with reference to the suggestion of bad faith to which reference is made, whether that suggestion is contained in the question or in the statement attributed to Mr. Benthall—I mean, the suggestion of bad faith on the part of Government?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I will read my answer over again “(b) to (k). Government are concerned with the other parts of the question only in so far as they relate to, first, the suggestion of bad faith on the part of His Majesty's Government as regards the Round Table Conference and their policy of constitutional reforms for India, and, second, the implication that action was taken against the Congress not because of their activities but as part of a preconceived plan.”

That suggestion and that implication are repudiated in my answer.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Sir, in the latter part of his answer the Honourable Member stated that the statements to which reference was made by him contained a complete refutation of any suggestions of bad faith and so on. What I am now asking is whether the suggestions of bad faith were contained in the question of my Honourable friend, or whether the suggestions were contained in the statements which appeared in the secret circular.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have given an unqualified repudiation of the suggestion and of the implication.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to state, with reference to the statement that the Honourable the Leader of the House has made regarding the expediting of reforms, whether it is their purpose to expedite the reforms with Mahatma Gandhi in jail, or whether they propose to release Mahatma Gandhi, and thus create an atmosphere of good will, and secure his presence at the Third Round Table Conference?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government policy in that matter has I think been very clearly stated—and it is strange my Honourable friend seems not to be aware of it—not longer ago than yesterday.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Are Government aware that the result of the Round Table Conference will be a failure till this policy of repression is reversed and those who are in jail are released and a new policy of conciliation is inaugurated?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: That, Sir, is a matter of opinion which I think this House has debated five or six times during this session.

Some Honourable Members: Not a matter of opinion but a matter of fact.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to initiate at the proper place the starting of conversations with Mahatma Gandhi to secure his co-operation at the Third Round Table Conference, thereby following the precedent established by Lord Irwin?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not see, Sir, how that in any way arises out of the question or from the answer I have given.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: With regard to the expediting of the reforms, do the Government realize the futility of expediting the reforms, with the Congress leaders in prison?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government desire, Sir, to take every step that in their view will expedite the reforms,—and obviously the Honourable Member is endeavouring to lead me on to what is essentially a question of opinion.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Are the reforms contemplated going to be nominal or substantial?

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: In view of the fact that grave allegations have been made in the Press, and in view also of the fact that the document that has come to light is in the nature of a secret document, will the Honourable the Leader of the House still rely upon His Majesty's Government's statement, or should he not, in the interest of the good name of the Government, see that this thing should be publicly repudiated by Government in a statement?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have nothing to add, Sir.

Mr. B. Das: Is it not a surprising coincidence that the views of the Associated Chambers of Commerce and of the European Association regarding financial safeguards and commercial safeguards entirely agree with the views of the diehards in England like Mr. Churchill and Lord Rothermere, etc., and that they also agree with the views advocated by the Treasury Benches here?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I cannot add to the very full answer I have already given.

Mr. B. Das: Does not the Honourable Member agree with me that the views of Mr. Benthall, of the Associated Chambers of Commerce and also of the diehards in England as also of the Treasury Benches here somehow or other coincide nicely?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I must adhere to what I have already said.

Sardar Sant Singh: May I ask the Honourable gentleman as to how this miracle has happened? Mr. Benthall says these phrases:

"On the whole, there was one policy of the British Nation and the British community in India and that was to make up our minds on a national policy and stick to it. But as the result of the elections the policy 'undoubtedly' changed. The right Wing of the Government made up its mind to break up the Conference and to fight Congress. The Muslims, who do not want responsibility at the Centre, were delighted. Government undoubtedly changed their policy and tried to get away with Provincial autonomy with a promise of Central Reforms, what line were we to take? We had made up our minds before this—that the fight with the Congress was inevitable: we felt and said the sooner it came the better but we made up our minds that for a crushing success we should have all possible friends on our side."

Now the circumstances came to turn out exactly as had been foreshadowed by Mr. Benthall. I want to know what is the reason,—the meaning of all that?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I cannot add to the very full answer I have already given.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Sir, is it a fact that most of the Ordinances against the Congress had been got ready long before the end of November, i.e., long before the Second Round Table Conference dissolved? (Some Honourable Members: "Please answer".)

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Legislative Secretary give us the answer to this particular question? He is the person who is supposed to have drafted the Ordinances. May I ask when he drafted them?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I have answered the question very fully and very completely already. (Some Honourable Members: "Not at all".)

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: I think, Sir, we are entitled to ask these questions of the Honourable Members of the European group through their leader Mr. Arthur Moore, whose representative Mr. Benthall was in the Round Table Conference.

ELECTION TO THE CENTRAL ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR RAILWAYS.

Mr. President: Order, order. I have to inform the Assembly that the following non-official Members have been elected to serve on the Standing Advisory Council for Railways, namely:

1. Sirdar Sohan Singh.
2. Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney.
3. Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy.
4. Kunwar Raghubir Singh.
5. Pandit Satyendranath Sen.
6. Sardar Sant Singh.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, the following Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State:

"I am directed to inform you that the Council of State has, at its meeting held on the 30th March, 1932, agreed without any amendment to the Bill to extend the operation of the Salt (Additional Import Duty) Act, 1931, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly at its meeting held on the 23rd March, 1932."

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

PERIOD OF TOUR OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY IN SIND.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, in the unavoidable absence of my Honourable Colleague, the Finance Member, I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 657 asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 7th March, 1932, regarding the period of tour of the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay in Sind.

(a) The time spent by the Commissioner on visits to Sind was as follows:

1928-29, 11 days of which $6\frac{1}{2}$ were spent on the journey. The tour was cut short by fever, 1929-30, $13\frac{1}{2}$ days of which 7 were spent on the journey.

1930-31, The Commissioner was in Karachi on 19th and 20th hearing revision petitions. He had intended to visit Sind in March but postponed his tour because he was to accompany a Member of the Central Board of Revenue on a tour in the Presidency proper.

In the calendar year 1931, he spent $14\frac{1}{2}$ days on a visit to Sind of which about 7 were spent in travelling.

(b) and (c). No, but persons or bodies who have expressed a desire to discuss matters with the Commissioner are informed direct of his visits if he considers that it would be proper for him to interview them.

The Central Board of Revenue is suggesting to the Commissioner that he should publish his tour programmes when possible.

TAXATION IN THE CAWNPORE CANTONMENT.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): Sir, I lay on the table a statement giving the information promised in reply to starred question No. 355, asked by Sirdar Sohan Singh on the 15th February, 1932, about taxation in the Cawnpore Cantonment.

(a) and (b). Yes.

(c) Permission was at first refused but was granted later and two meetings of the Association were held in the locality mentioned.

(d) No.

THE PORT HAJ COMMITTEES BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): I would beg your permission, Sir, to move the motion No. 18, which stands in my name.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member seek the permission of the Chair to take up item 18 on the Order Paper now?

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes, Sir. I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to establish Committees in the principal ports of pilgrim traffic to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz.

Sir, the objects of this Bill are so clearly stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons that it is not necessary for me to say very much. This is the second of a series of Bills which are intended to implement the recommendations of the Haj Enquiry Committee. The object of the Bill I introduced the other day was to improve the conditions of pilgrims on the voyage from and to India. The object of this Bill is to improve conditions in the ports by converting the Haj Committees which already exist, and which are merely advisory and consultative, into statutory bodies with much wider powers than they have at present.

The object of the third Bill, which I shall shortly introduce, is to improve the condition of pilgrims on their way to and from the ports by controlling the activities of muallims, that is, professional pilgrim guides, most of whom are foreign subjects.

Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Frank Noyce: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE HEJAZ PILGRIMS (MUALLIMS) BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce: Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to regulate the activities of persons in British India who offer to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Frank Noyce: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE FOREIGN RELATIONS BILL.

Sir Evelyn Howell (Foreign Secretary): Sir, I move that the Bill to provide against the publication of statements likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of foreign States, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration.

It will be within your recollection, Sir, that in the September Session of this House it was decided not to circulate this Bill for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon but to refer it to a Select Committee, together with the expressions of opinion which were to be obtained by executive action meanwhile. It is in accordance with customary usage, Sir, that the House as a whole by referring it to Select Committee agreed with the principle of the Bill. I do not wish to labour this point at present, but I shall, if necessary, revert to it when I come to deal with the amendment of my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. There was then in September a general consensus of opinion in the House that, in the words of my Honourable friend Sir Hari Singh Gour, "We must put down these libels upon foreign States without remorse and without compunction". Sir Hari Singh Gour himself consented to serve on the Committee, and I take this opportunity, though he is not here and I greatly regret his absence, to tender to him and to the other Members of the Committee and, above all others, to my Honourable friend Mr. Shannukham Chetty, who served as Chairman, my most cordial thanks for the advice and the assistance which they so willingly rendered. (Applause.) The recognition of the evil, which the Bill introduced in the September Session was designed to prevent, and the determination to deal with that evil in the same way as other civilized countries have dealt with it and yet to secure adequate scope for the exercise of the rights of free speech, which is the privilege of all inheritors of the British tradition, mark in my opinion a very statesmanlike attitude on the part of the House. Upon that attitude the House is to be congratulated and I should like to express the hope that they will adhere to it.

So, then, the Bill which the House considered as too wide and consequently a faulty instrument for its declared purpose was referred to Select Committee. From that Committee it has emerged very different indeed in shape, but in principle unaltered. Like the Bill in its original form, it sets out to bring the law in this country into line with the common law of England. From the English common law model, however, the Committee permitted itself one conscious deviation, and in one respect deviated, I think unconsciously, in consequence of its desire, and in my opinion a very natural desire, to secure the rights of the subject. I will deal with the first of these deviations when I come to mention of particular alterations introduced into the Bill by the Select Committee, and with the second at a later stage when I come to move the amendment to clause 2, of which I have given notice. But before I come to particular alterations effected in Select Committee, let me repeat once more a very simple point which a large number of Members of this House still, in spite of all that I and other speakers have said, seem to have a strange difficulty in apprehending. The Bill is designed for the protection of the Rulers of foreign States. A foreign State is one thing, and an Indian State is another. As I told the House twice in my speech on the 21st

[Sir Evelyn Howell.]

September last, "The Bill has nothing whatever to do with the Indian States and in no way affects the publication of any statement regarding their Rulers". I now say it a third time, and I ask you, Sir, and I ask the House to believe me and, if it is still there, forthwith to expel this particular bogey from their minds.

We now come to the particular alterations effected by the Select Committee. The first point which Honourable Members will notice is that whereas, like the English common law, the Bill in its original form was universal and attempted to secure some measure of protection for all foreign Rulers alike, it has now become particular and is restricted in its scope to certain Rulers, to wit, the Rulers of States outside but adjoining India. This change introduces into the Bill the element of definition of foreign States for which some critics pressed. The application of the Bill to the Indian States was really ab initio impossible, but the addition of these words makes it doubly so. But, Sir, not only does this alteration emphasise the exclusion of Indian States, which exclusion was always inherent in the proposals of Government, but, as I have already stated, it also excludes a very large number, in fact, the vast majority, of foreign States from the scope of the Bill. In its present shape the Bill has no application to publications about the Ruler of any foreign State, unless that foreign State is one of these contiguous to India, that is to say, one of those which touch India's land frontiers. The States, which do so touch, are Persia, Afghanistan, China, Nepal, Tibet, Siam and perhaps also Bhutan. Personally, I think this limitation a mistake, for reasons which I should have no difficulty in explaining, though whether it would be wise to do so here and now is another matter. But the alteration found favour with the Members of the Select Committee, and the matter not being vital, I do not, on behalf of Government, think it necessary to press the point. Let the scope of the Bill be confined to these few contiguous States. This, then, is the first conscious deviation from the English common law model, to which I alluded above. In the eyes of my Muslim friends, the alteration has one advantage, as they regard it. It removes from the scope of the Bill such countries and their Rulers as the Hejaz, Iraq and Palestine, none of these being contiguous to India, to which they and their co-religionists are accustomed to go on pilgrimage.

The alterations in the Bill effected by the Select Committee introduce the element of particularity in another respect also. In its original form the Bill, in clause 2, its operative clause, ran as follows:

"Whoever makes, publishes or circulates any statement, rumour or report with intent to promote, or which is likely to promote, or whereof the making, publishing or circulating is likely to promote, unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of any foreign State shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both."

In its present form the same clause of the Bill runs:

"Whoever commits any offence punishable under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or against a member of the family or against a Minister of such Ruler, with intent to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State, or whereby the maintenance of such relations is likely to be prejudiced, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both."

It will be seen that now, to come within the scope of this clause, not only must the publication be defamatory within the meaning of that word as defined in the Chapter of the Indian Penal Code quoted, but it must be defamatory of a particular person or persons belonging to a particular small group of persons, to wit, the Ruler himself, the members of his family and his Ministers—in other words the Ruler himself and those persons about him whose good name and reputation he may be supposed to regard as precious and therefore disposed to protect, or, to put it in another way, attacks on whom he might be expected to resent. I will deal with the second, and as I think unconscious, deviation from the English common law model when my amendment to clause 2 comes under discussion. It was in respect of this deviation that Sir Lancelot Graham and myself recorded our minute of dissent. Apart from that, the effect of clause 2, as it now stands, is to put the foreign Ruler, in respect of articles in the Indian Press to which he may take exception, precisely, save in one respect in the same position as any private British subject. The sole difference is that whereas private persons aggrieved by defamation have to bring their complaint before the Courts themselves, on behalf of the foreign Ruler, who cannot do that, proceedings may be initiated by the Governor General in Council.

If we now come to clause 3, we see that the Committee have restricted the cognisance of offences under the Act to the Courts of Presidency or First Class Magistrates, and the initiation of proceedings to the Governor General in Council. In practice I think that both restrictions were quite unnecessary, since there was no chance whatever of proceedings being initiated in any lower court or by any other person. However they conform to the customary rules of procedure, and on behalf of Government, I am quite prepared to accept them.

Clause 4 needs no comment.

Clause 5 is designed to relieve the Courts of the task of ascertaining who is and who is not a foreign personage, defamation of whom constitutes an offence. The Courts have no means of obtaining information on this point and the clause calls for no further comment except in one respect. I have explained above that the formula adopted is intended to confine the scope of the Bill to persons, attacks on whom the foreign Ruler might be expected to resent. I admit that the words "members of his family" are capable of wide interpretation, but I would ask the House to have confidence in the Governor General, who is usually selected for his high office because he is a statesman of conspicuous sagacity, and secondly to remember that the Governor General in Council is a responsible authority. Certain amendments have however been proposed in respect of this wording which we, probably, with some slight alterations, will be prepared to consider, so perhaps I need not go into them further at the moment.

Reverting now to the Preamble of the Bill, I draw your attention, Sir, and that of the House to the alteration in the formula used. The original Bill mentioned "statements likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of foreign States", whereas the present Bill calls them "statements likely to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of certain foreign States". This matter of phraseology is one primarily for lawyers to determine, and personally I prefer the original form. But I am satisfied with the wording of the Bill, and I would only ask the House to see that under the guise of an amendment a wording is not adopted here which will render the whole provisions of the Bill nugatory by making it impossible for any prosecution ever to succeed. We have a real danger to contend with and we cannot be content with make-believe protection against it.

I do not think, Sir, that there is any other alteration to which the attention of the House need now be drawn. But before I resume my seat, I should like to recapitulate the points which I desire to bring before the House. The main points are these. The Bill has nothing whatever to do with the Indian States. Its scope is confined to defamatory articles, within the meaning of the word defamation as defined in the Indian Penal Code, against the Rulers of a certain small number of States whose territories adjoin the land frontiers of India and to certain persons in close connection with those Rulers either as Members of their family or as principal Ministers of their Government. It places the Rulers of those States on precisely the same footing with regard to defamatory articles as private British subjects except that since those Rulers are unable to appear in Court themselves, it enables the Governor General to take action on their behalf.

In respect of penalties and procedure, the offence, with one small exception, falls within the well established canons of the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code. The small exception is this, that whereas in the penal section in Chapter XXI of the Code, imprisonment may only be simple imprisonment, in the Bill imprisonment of either kind is provided for. With the exceptions above noted and those deviations to which I have alluded and to which I shall revert, the Bill is in general conformity with the principles of the English common law, and statutes resembling it are in force in nearly all the civilised countries of the world. I gave a list of those countries in my earlier speech, and I need not repeat it now. In conclusion I would only remind the House that they have so far dealt with this matter in a very statesmanlike spirit. They have realised the practical difficulty, and as practical men have set out to deal with it. I earnestly adjure them to adhere to that attitude and to give to Government the support necessary to enable them to place upon the Statute-book a measure which will not restrict more than is absolutely necessary the liberties of the subject, while providing a necessary measure of protection for those foreign Rulers with whom it is of vital importance to India that friendly relations should be maintained. Let me assure the House that by so doing they are really safeguarding Indian interests against a very real and a very definite danger.

Sir, I move.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill as reported by the Select Committee be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon by the 1st August, 1932. Sir, I do not want at this stage to give a brief summary of the speeches delivered at the Simla Session last year, but I should like to remind the House of one or two important points made out by my distinguished friends Sir Abdur Rahim and Sir Hari Singh Gour. Sir Abdur Rahim said in his speech:

"Look at the English law which he wanted to reproduce. I shall refer again to Stephen's 'Digest':

"Nothing is an offence against this Article which is a fair criticism on a matter of public interest as defined in Article 392."

Mark the words "fair criticism on a matter of public interest". Then he goes on to say:

"I will now give the gist of Article 392. It is rather long:

"The publication of a libel is not a misdemeanour if the defamatory matter consists of comments upon the persons who submit themselves or upon things submitted by their authors or owners to public criticism provided that such comments are fair.

A fair comment is a comment which is either true or which if false expresses the real opinion of its author but such opinion having been formed with a reasonable degree of care and on reasonable grounds.'

If a comment is true it is exempted. Does this Bill seek to exempt that?"

These were the remarks made by the Leader of the Independent Party, and I will now quote one passage from the speech of Sir Hari Singh Gour, the Leader of the Nationalist Party. He said:

"A fair criticism of the ruler and the ruled, a fair criticism of the oppression and tyranny of people, herein lies the birthright of every man and every citizen; and if a newspaper is to be mulcted for such criticism—whether it be of a neighbouring Indian State or of a foreigner beyond the seas is immaterial—I submit the liberties of the press in India would be seriously encroached upon and the Press would be placed in a position of great jeopardy if you were to make them the victim of the fancies and whims of foreign potentates, and it is this that the Bill proposes to do."

These are the criticisms made by the Leaders of the two parties. I should now like to examine whether in the Bill before us these things have been removed. Before I go into the detailed discussion, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the promise made by the Leader of the House (the Honourable Sir George Rainy). He said:

"What I should be prepared to say on behalf of Government is this, that if the Bill is referred to a Select Committee we should be quite prepared to circulate it by executive order, and the Committee would meet when the opinions had been received, and in the ordinary course their report would be submitted to the House next session."

So a solemn promise was given that the Bill would be circulated and on the receipt of this promise Mr. Maswood Ahmad who originally moved for circulation said:

"After the assurance given by the Honourable the Leader of the House that the Select Committee will sit in Delhi and that by executive order this Bill will be circulated, I do not want to press my motion and I beg leave of the House to withdraw the motion."

Sir, I should like to know whether the Bill was circulated. (Several Honourable Members: "Yes") and whether it was circulated only among the Local Governments or circulated among the public. And if it was circulated among the public, I should like to know whether the opinions received from the public were laid before the Committee, because I have got a number of opinions with me here, and I should like to know if all these opinions were considered by the Committee.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, the Bill was circulated to Local Governments and High Courts and by the High Courts it was passed on to numerous Bar Associations. All the documents and all the opinions received were placed before the Committee and considered by them.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Whenever we use the word "circulation",—and I use that word in my motion,—we always mean that it will be circulated among the public and not restricted to circulation among the High Courts and Government officials, because they are part of the Government machinery with which we are not concerned. Government always get the opinions of the officials, but what we are concerned with now is whether the opinion of the public was obtained on this particular question.

An Honourable Member: Are not the Bar Associations public bodies?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: They do not represent the real public who will be affected by this Bill.

Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhammadan Rural): Are we not the representatives of the public here?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: My Honourable friend says he is a representative of the public. He is probably unaware of the feelings in his own constituency, and I will read a passage from a resolution passed by an Association in his constituency at Muzaffarnagar. It says:

"This meeting of the Muhammadans in the district of Muzaffarnagar expresses its great condemnation of the Foreign Relations Bill which is going to be moved by the Government."

An Honourable Member: How is it an interference with religion?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: There is another Resolution passed by an Association at Sitapur which says:

"This meeting of the Muhammadans of Sitapur considers that the Foreign Relations Bill is really an interference in their religion and records its strong protest."

I received similar protests from various Associations and one is from Ambala town and others from various other places. In each of these it is stated that a copy was sent to the Foreign Secretary. I should like to know whether the Foreign Office had received copies of these resolutions, and if so, whether they were placed before the Committee.

Sir Evelyn Howell: We received copies of numerous resolutions which were, as my Honourable friend has endeavoured to inform the House, in the nature of protests against the Bill on the ground that it interfered in religious matters. I submit that that criticism is entirely unjust. The Bill in no form ever had anything to say about religious matters at all.

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah (Central Provinces: Muhammadan): Is religious controversy excluded under the Bill?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I said so in my earlier speech in this House.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: The first thing that I would like to emphasise is that when the promise was given to us on the floor of the House that the Bill would be circulated, we clearly understood that it would be circulated among the public and the opinions received from the public would be considered by the Select Committee. That promise was not carried out

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): It was carried out to the letter.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I said it was not circulated among the public. . .

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria (Bombay Northern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Does the Honourable Member mean that it ought to have been sent to every one of the 350 millions of Indians?

Sir Lancelot Graham: It was circulated precisely in the same way in which Bills ordered by this House to be circulated are circulated. Precisely the same procedure was followed, except that it was sent out by the executive department concerned, instead of by the Legislative Assembly Department.

Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: May I know from the Honourable Member why he did not raise this objection when the Bill was referred to Select Committee?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I opposed it then, I oppose it now and I will oppose it in future. Whenever a Bill has to be circulated, I understand that it is published in the Government Gazette; the opinions of the public should be invited and the opinions received should be laid before the Committee and should be considered by them

Sir Lancelot Graham: That is exactly what was done here.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): I think the Honourable Member should proceed with his observations. Explanation has been given that the procedure followed in the matter of circulation was identical with what is done on the vote of the Assembly. If the Honourable Member wishes to challenge that explanation, he is entitled to do so, but if he does not challenge that statement, he should proceed on the basis that the circulation did take place in the usual manner.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, I understand that all the opinions received from the public were laid before the Select Committee and were considered by them. There is no indication in the report that this was carried out, but still I take their word that all these opinions were considered by the members of the Committee.

Sir Lancelot Graham: We cannot give a promise that all the members of the Committee read all the opinions.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: That is a different matter; but if it was circulated among them, my object is fulfilled; but if it is only shown in a bundle to them, I do not think the terms of the circulation were carried out.

Sir Evelyn Howell: They had ample opportunity to study the whole matter.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Then that is all right.

Mr. President: Order, order: the Honourable Member should proceed.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I come now to the subject matter of the Bill itself. In the first place the word "adjoining", as it is defined here, is not very clear to me. I should like to know whether in this sense France is adjoining England. Will it be called adjoining or will it not be called adjoining, as there is a sea between the two countries? That point is not very clear to me. If that is the case, if the intervention of the sea between the two countries will not preclude them from adjoining. . . .

Sir Evelyn Howell: I said clearly adjoining the land frontiers of India.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Then this will practically exclude all those countries which are separated by sea. The second thing is that India itself is not defined. I should like to know for instance whether Aden forms part of India. . . .

Sir Lancelot Graham: India is defined in the General Clauses Act.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Does Aden form part of India?

An Honourable Member: It forms part. . . .

Sir Lancelot Graham: The Honourable Member knows perfectly well that Aden forms part of India under the General Clauses Act.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: So I understand that all the countries adjoining Aden will come under the clauses of this Bill. . . .

Sir Evelyn Howell: The Honourable Member can draw his own conclusions.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Another thing which is not very clear to me is this, whether a place like Pondicherry or Goa, which is really adjoining the land frontier of India, will be included here. . . .

Sir Evelyn Howell: No, Sir; it will not.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: He says that it is not adjoining the land frontier of India; this is really an interpretation

Sir Evelyn Howell: I should like it to be understood that I am not a legal expert; I am advised that Pondicherry for the purposes of this Bill is excluded as also other possessions of foreign powers which are commonly described as being in India.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: This is the explanation which is given by the Foreign Secretary, that the countries like Pondicherry, Goa, etc., are excluded from the border of India; but we know that the statement of the Foreign Secretary is not enough. This thing ought to form part of the Bill. Therefore this particular thing, that is, whether foreign possessions in India are foreign powers adjoining the land frontier of India or not . . .

(Mr. N. N. Anklesaria interrupted.)

Mr. President: Let the Honourable Member go on with his observations.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Leaving that question aside, I shall take up one or two particular cases. Suppose a foreign Ruler adjoining India acted against the interests of the Muslim religion, demolished shrines or really did an act which was against the canons of Islamic law, and supposing there is criticism of that action, will it or will it not come under this Bill? The Foreign Secretary may say it will not, but his mere statement will not be enough; it must be definitely stated that this thing will not come under this particular clause. This is really a point on which Muslims are particularly interested. There may be action taken by the King of Persia or even by any other king against the Islamic law or against Islamic shrines; and if there is criticism of his action, then will it come under this Bill or not? I understand that, according to the Bill now before us, a person who makes a criticism of that kind can be prosecuted under clause 2 of this Bill and sent to rigorous imprisonment for two years; and unless there is a clause definitely excluding any criticism on matters of religion on the action taken by the King or his Ministers or any other person against the Islamic canons, from this Bill, I am afraid the mere statement of the Foreign Secretary will not satisfy the Mussalmans, as we all know very well that statements of Members during the debate on a Bill are not sufficient guarantee for not giving effect to sections of the Bill.

The Foreign Secretary said in his first speech at Simla, and repeated it today, that his fundamental object is to bring the Indian to the level of civilised countries. I do not see much force in this, because, after all, it is a very unimportant point; there are many things in which we are behind the British law; and in this particular case if we remain behind the English law, I do not think any serious harm is going to be done, as we all know that this particular law has been very rarely applied, and I believe that the last case which occurred was about 200 years ago. Therefore it is not necessary for us to copy a law which is practically obsolete in England itself. The real object which is at the back of the mind of the Foreign Secretary is really to provide some kind of consolation to the present Ruler of Afghanistan . . .

Sir Evelyn Howell: I would be obliged if the Honourable Member will not mention foreign countries by name.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Thank you. I shall not mention any particular country, Sir. Now, in reply to one question we were told that there have been only six cases under the Ordinances which were really the predecessor of this particular Bill. Two of these articles were written by the Zemindar, and I had a talk with the editor of the Zemindar, and I can stand surety, Sir, that he will not write any article on this particular topic. So, if this is the only thing which could save us the odium of this particular Bill, then I stand here and give security for this particular. . . .

Sir Evelyn Howell: May I interrupt the Honourable Member for a moment? I submit, Sir, if my assurances are not going to be accepted by this House, there is no reason why the assurances given by the Honourable Member should be accepted by this House. (Laughter.)

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, this is really a matter in which the decision of the High Court has been given. They have said that the speeches delivered in this House could not really alter the meaning of the law, but the assurances I am giving. . . .

Mr. S. C. Mitra: There may be a change of editor tomorrow.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: The assurances I am giving are assurances from one individual to another individual. My friend just said that there might be a change of editors, and if such a thing happens, and if really an article is written on this topic, then action can certainly be taken against him; but I assure him that there is no desire on the part of any one in India to interfere with the internal affairs of any State. The choice of a Ruler and the settlement of internal affairs are matters for the people of the States concerned and they should decide for themselves, and we are not concerned with those things, and I may assure my Honourable friend that the people in India take absolutely no interest whatsoever in the internal affairs of any of these adjoining States.

No doubt, the Bill has been very much modified and a good deal of its poisonous effect has been removed, but the fact remains that a Bill of this kind is uncalled for at this stage. It unnecessarily creates excitement among the people without sufficient justification; it is quite unnecessary to bring in a Bill of this kind at this juncture when people are sleeping and are not taking any interest in these matters. By trying to enact a law of this kind you will create a feeling in the public mind that the Government have got some sinister motives behind it and they want to gag the mouths of the people and the Press beforehand. If feelings of this kind exist in the country, I can quite understand your taking action to meet the situation, but when there is no excitement, when there is no emergency of any kind, if you take action of the kind you now propose, then you create an impression in the public mind that you have an ulterior motive behind you. I do not know what the foreign policy of the adjoining districts is likely to be tomorrow, and this Bill is only to prevent something which Government have in their mind. But as I said it is quite wrong, it is quite undesirable, it is quite unjustifiable to create such an impression in the public mind, particularly at this time when we have got so many other things to look to. Therefore, I would ask the Government Benches, and particularly the Foreign Secretary, who really has got the interests not only of the adjoining territories but also of India at heart, to consider what impression his action would produce in the public mind if this legislation is enacted at this time. I would therefore request him once more that he should circulate the Bill to elicit public opinion and this measure should not be pushed through in this session, as it will create unnecessary apprehension in the public mind. One definite complaint was brought to my notice last night, and it was perhaps also the subject matter of a resolution passed in one of the big conferences in Lahore, and it is this, that this measure if passed into law will seriously affect the religious liberty of the Mussalmans of India and especially of the Shia Community. They say if any action is taken by any Minister, Ruler or any member of the family of the Ruler against any of the tenets of Islam and there is bona fide and genuine criticism against such action, there will be trouble. Therefore, Sir, on the ground that this measure is quite unjustifiable, uncalled for and unnecessary, I once more appeal to my Honourable friend to accept the circulation of the Bill for eliciting public opinion.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I support this amendment, and I submit that there are very strong reasons why consideration of this Bill should not be proceeded with now. Sir, we have noticed a tendency on the part of the Government to bring before the House very important measures at the fag end of the session, with the result that with the official block at their command and a few non-official Members who generally support them, they are able to carry through any measure, however opposed to public opinion in the country. Sir, this Bill creates a new offence unknown to the Penal Code, and creation of a new offence is a serious matter indeed. A new offence ought not to be created unless the matter has been fully canvassed by public opinion. Sir, it has been said that the Bill had been circulated to certain bodies, High Courts and Bar Associations and others, and the opinions received from these bodies were placed before the Select Committee. I do not dispute that, but there is this cardinal fact to be borne in mind, that this Bill, as it has emerged from the Select Committee, is a different Bill altogether. It is not the same Bill. The scope of the former Bill was that if any person by his writing or speech does anything likely to prejudice foreign relations, then he would be liable to certain penalties. That is something on the lines of what is called sedition in this country,—something which prejudices relations between the Government of the country and some foreign Government. Further, be it noted, in the original Bill the wording was “foreign Government” and not “Government of States adjoining India”. There is the Honourable the Law Member,—I am glad to find him in his seat today,—and he will confirm me that an offence of defamation is altogether different from what was intended to be covered by the original Bill. Defamation is a personal wrong against certain individuals, be they Rulers or Ministers or private individuals. Now, by this Bill a man will be punished if a defamatory charge is made, if a defamation is published by him against a Ruler or a Minister or a member of the family of a Ruler, and if it is likely to prejudice our relations with that State. Is not that a wholly different measure from the original Bill that was circulated for public opinion, at least to some sections of the public or to some associations? But this is a different measure altogether. They had not before them any public body such as the High Court had before it a Bill limited in scope to defamation. We contended, and strongly contended, at that time that you must limit the scope of your Bill to the cases of defamation as in the English law,—the antiquated, obsolete English law. We said that if they wanted to have a Bill at all of this character, they must limit it to cases of defamation as is the case in the English law. Government saw that it was not possible for them, or that it was not advisable to carry through the original measure. Therefore, they have dropped it. They have initiated a new measure of a different character having accepted the suggestion of the Select Committee. Then what follows? Is it not the rule, is it not the procedure of the House, that when a Select Committee alters a Bill in such a way as to make it a different Bill altogether, then it must be re-circulated for public opinion? If that is so, then I say that there is a very good case now for re-circulation of this Bill, because it is a Bill with a different scope, with a different objective, and it creates a different offence. The creation of a new offence, as I have said, is a serious matter. This Bill proposes what the wisdom of Lord Macaulay and others who framed the Penal Code deliberately omitted to enact—I take it they deliberately omitted it because this old antiquated law of defamation against foreign Princes was in existence in those days, and they refrained from enacting any such law here. Why? Did not foreign States, or rather foreign States contiguous to India exist at that time? The Penal Code is comprehensive, it is so wide, and it is so well drafted, that it has received encomiums from almost all parts of the world, the juristic part of the world, and I say therefore that the framers of the Indian Penal Code deliberately refrained from enacting any such law as is now proposed to be put on the Statute-book. That being so, I say it is a serious concern of the public that an offence like this should be created now, without the public being given full opportunity to consider the position and express its opinion thereon.

Now, what is the scope of this Bill? This is another letter on the liberty of the Press. Can there be any doubt about it? It comes to this, the Press of this country is not to discuss foreign relations, a most vital matter for the country. Discussing foreign relations is a most important duty of the Press. It is a duty which is fully recognised by the civilised Governments throughout the world. The provisions of the Bill are so wide that the Political Department can obtain a conviction on almost anything, because under the system of Government which now prevails here the Political Department is a reserved subject. They will claim, and claim rightly too, that they are the only people who know anything about the foreign relations of India with other countries. If they say, if they give evidence,—as it is proposed to do—that foreign relations will be prejudiced, who is to say no to that? The result will be that they will be the sole judge of whether a writing in the Press is defamatory, or rather, if defamatory, whether it is likely to prejudice foreign relations. And look at the scope of it,—likely to prejudice foreign relations! You could not use language wider than that. You may call it a law, but it lacks the very elementary requisite of law,—that is, definiteness. The court must find it very difficult to give effect to language of that kind. The result must naturally be that if the Secretary of the Foreign Department gives evidence before the Court that in their opinion—because it is a matter of opinion—the foreign relations are likely to be prejudiced, there is an end of the matter. I say the Court will find it impossible to go behind that opinion. I am absolutely sure, my Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell knows fully well that that will be the result of a proceeding in Court at the instance of the Foreign Department. I take it that evidence will be given according to the ordinary procedure and the requirements of the Evidence Act. Once that evidence is given, whether the defamation charged is likely to prejudice foreign relations—that will depend entirely upon the evidence of the Foreign Department. The Court will be helpless, will be entirely at the mercy of the official witness.

Look at another provision of the Bill. Any member of the family of a Ruler—has any attempt been made to define that? So far as I remember, the General Clauses Act does not attempt to define any such thing. I do not know of any Act which defines the member of a family, especially of a Ruler, an Oriental Ruler. I think Sir Evelyn Howell will find it very difficult to define the members of the families of certain rulers adjoining India. (Laughter.) A pitfall of this character should not be allowed to creep into any statute passed by this Assembly. My Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad has pointed out other difficulties too. My Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell has assured the House that Arabia, Iraq and all those places would be excluded, but there is another legal difficulty which arises in this connection. If Aden is part of India, then Arabia is contiguous to India.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Not the whole of Arabia, Sir.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Part of independent Arabia would be included.

Sir Evelyn Howell: The Hejaz would not, I submit.

Sir Abdur Rahim: It may be possible to try some such distinction, and I know my Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell is acute enough to draw such distinctions, but it will be very difficult for a court of law to define what is or what is not included within the definition given in the Bill. There is the case also of places like Pondicherry, Goa, Chandernagore. It will, therefore, not only be very difficult to say with respect to anything which is written in the Press or uttered from the platform and which may be considered by any of the representatives of foreign powers or their Ministers as defamatory—whether or not foreign relations are endangered or prejudiced thereby, and that there are the other questions which will raise further difficulties. I do not want to deal with all those questions at present. My main point is that this Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee creates a new offence. I do not say that the Select Committee was not well advised in narrowing down the Bill to cases of defamation as in the old English law. That may be so. It is in fact what we demanded, but Government having dropped their original idea and having accepted the view of the Select Committee of this House to bring in a Bill with a much narrower scope and of a different character altogether, it now becomes necessary to re-circulate the Bill for public opinion according to the ordinary procedure of Select Committees. The Committee itself ought to have reported that the Bill is so altered as to require re-circulation. I do not know if any stronger case could be made out for re-circulation. It may be said that the first Bill was of a wider scope, but my point is that although the present Bill is of a narrower scope, it creates a different offence. It is a different measure, and therefore it ought to be re-circulated. There is one other point. I do not know if Dr. Ziauddin intended to raise it, but from the way he dealt with this question it suggested itself to the House that this Bill particularly affected the Mussalmans, but that is not so. On the other hand it might very well be argued that some of the adjoining States being Mussalman States, it affects the non-Muslim inhabitants of the country more than the Mussalmans. At any rate that is not the point. The whole point now is whether the Bill ought not to be re-circulated as it creates a different offence to the one in the original Bill. The Honourable Member in charge of the Bill has alluded to the fact that in other countries some provision or other of this nature exists. It is perfectly true, but we have got to see whether there is really a good case for re-enacting them here. The conditions of India are very different from the conditions in Brazil and places like that. We know in European countries, whether the law is there or not, criticism of foreign policy is a matter of every day occurrence and is a most vital part of a nation's interest and are we going to stifle such criticisms in this country? As a matter of fact in England, as the Honourable the Law Member will admit, the law in this respect has been obsolete. It is more than 100 years, I believe, since there was a prosecution. I pointed this out in my last speech. I did listen very carefully to what Sir Evelyn Howell had to say on this point on the previous occasion, and I must say that neither I nor most Members on this side of the House were convinced of the necessity for such a measure. Anyway even if there be a necessity, I think we must consult public opinion on the Bill as it has been reported on by the Select Committee, and that is the question now before the House. I do hope the Government will consider this point seriously, and I am sure that Members on this side of the House will consider it necessary and vital that a measure of this importance should receive in its present form that judgment of public opinion which its importance deserves.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer Merwara: General): I rise just to say a word in support of the amendment proposed by Dr. Ziauddin. The question before us is nothing more than that the Bill should be re-circulated instead of being taken into consideration on the ground that the Select Committee appointed to consider it has materially altered it. If there has been a material alteration in the Bill, and this, I think, has been fully proved by my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim, it is not only proper but incumbent that the Bill should be circulated to elicit public opinion. From an offence of the nature of sedition to an offence of the nature of defamation and libel, one has to travel very far in fact from one place to another. They are two different and two distinct kinds of offences. One is entirely personal. The other is with regard to the State. The object of the Bill evidently is that nothing should be done to prejudice relations between the Government of India and another State. That being so, if we find that the offence which was made punishable by the original Bill has been changed, it is very necessary that the matter should go again before public opinion, and Government should know what public opinion in the matter is. As it is, I think the scope of the Bill, by including Ministers and members of the family of Rulers of adjoining States, has been made very wide. It is very difficult to define or determine for the purposes of the Bill who the members of the family of a particular Ruler are. As, however, I do not want to go into the merits of the thing, I support the amendment on the ground that as there has been a material change in the Bill it should be re-circulated for eliciting public opinion.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, the Bill has been very much modified by the Select Committee, but notwithstanding that fact, the Bill is neither fish, nor flesh nor good red herring. If my objection had been only to the language and the terms in which the provisions are drafted, I could have moved amendments and taken my chance. As it is, the Bill has been materially altered, as pointed out by the leader of our group, and a good case has been made out for sending it out for eliciting public opinion. Sir, both when he introduced this Bill as well as on the present occasion, the Foreign Secretary stated that this Bill was intended to bring the law into line with the English law on the subject, and further he said that this Bill purports to embody the principles and practice of the English law. Both the propositions are incorrect and can be disputed. This Bill as it stands is neither justified by doctrines of international law, nor is it in accordance with the practice of civilized nations. The object underlying the Bill appears to be based on a political necessity rather than on a legal necessity. Sir, the Foreign Secretary's statement that, "It is a recognized principle of international law that the States, in their relations with other States, are responsible for acts committed by persons within their jurisdiction" is incorrect in theory and at variance with international usages and practice. The modern theory and practice of international law on the subject has been recently summarized as follows by an able writer:

"An individual may violate international law and thereby occasion injury to foreign States or its nationals, but his acts need not necessarily be attributed to the State within which he is found nor engage the responsibility of the State. The State is never responsible for the act of an individual as such. It cannot be regarded as an absolute guarantor of the proper conduct of all persons within its bounds. Before its responsibility can be engaged, it is necessary to show that it has violated an international duty recognized by the customary and positive law of nations in a clear and definite form."

These duties are summarised as follows:

- (1) The individual may do harm either to a foreign State itself or to an alien. In the former case a public claim is constituted, i.e., a claim by the foreign State in its own behalf. This includes attacks and insults directed against the head of that State or its flag.
- (2) Protection to diplomatic agents. Failure would entail reparation.
- (3) Injurious acts from individuals within its jurisdiction, such as raids on their territories.
- (4) Libel on Sovereigns or violation of their ambassadors' privileges punishable under the criminal law of the land, for which generally exemplary punishments are meted out.

It will thus be seen that the responsibilities of the States in respect of activities of individuals are not as wide as they are now sought to be made out. They are restricted (1) by considerations that a State is not responsible for the activities of individuals as such but only for its failure to fulfil certain international duties imposed upon it by the law of nations. (2) These duties do not include the prevention of any and every act of individuals that a foreign State may consider injurious to its interests as the elaborate explanation of the Foreign Secretary would have it but only the prevention and bringing to justice of actual acts of injury done to a foreign power by individuals by the commission of injurious acts recognized as international injuries by international law. These acts are:

- (1) Aggression on the territory of a foreign State.
- (2) Injury to property and life of its nationals.
- (3) Libel on its head.

With regard to the question of State regulations and domestic laws as are said to be obtaining in every modern State, I would like to take the case of Great Britain first. In Great Britain there is no specific law on the subject, except the Foreign Enlistments Act, to enforce international obligations. But the Foreign Enlistments Act applies principally to the case of war and acts of aggression and is primarily directed against mercenary soldiers. In peace, the liberty of the Press and opinion is restricted only by the English law of libels. This gives protection not only to British subjects against one another but to heads of States and ambassadors. This is all the law in England on this subject. To say that this Bill is intended to bring the law into line with the English law is palpably inaccurate and absurd. This is nothing but an encroachment of the executive in this country. For instance, even with the wording of clause 2 amended, as now, it can have only one effect, the suppression of all expressions of opinion on the foreign policy of the British Empire in India, so far as regards those States in particular to which this Bill is sought to be now applied, excepting those expressions of opinion as may be permitted by the Government of India. There is no proper judicial control. Moreover, once a complaint is lodged, justifiably or unjustifiably, there is absolutely no criterion left to the Judge whether a person is guilty or not. The question whether a particular statement is likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of a foreign State is a question of fact. It must necessarily vary according to the circumstances of the case. A statement which may promote unfriendly relations with one State may not do so with another. Whether it will do so in a particular case will depend upon an infinite variety of circumstances including the domestic political situation of a foreign State of which the Judge can take no cognizance at all. This difficulty was pointed out in one of the opinions gathered on this Bill from the Judges of our High Courts. The measure will thus have the effect of subordinating the domestic government of one country to the necessities of the domestic situation in another. Such a law, so far from being in conformity with international law, is absolutely at variance with the fundamental principle of a full national sovereignty. (Hear, hear.)

The Foreign Secretary has further stated, Sir, that it is intended to bring this law into conformity with the practice and procedure obtaining in England on this subject. In this connection I would like to read a few cases from which it will be seen that whatever may have been the law in England in ages gone by, so far as the present period is concerned, England has no such law as is now intended to be introduced here. Here is an important case:

'The German navy, which was one of the main factors of the growing hostility between Great Britain and Germany towards the beginning of the present century, was the subject of much pointed attention on the part of the British Press. In 1904 a British paper suggested that the British navy should fall upon the German fleet before it had grown too strong and destroy it just as it had destroyed the Danish fleet in 1807. Sir Frank Lascelles, the British Ambassador, had a talk on this subject with Prince von Bulow, the Imperial Chancellor, and reported to the Foreign Office on December 28, 1904:

'.....the constant attacks in the English Press, which had met with no official disapproval, and the new scheme for the reorganization of the Navy had given rise to the belief, which had become very prevalent in Germany, that England had the intention of attacking her.'

Count Metternich's statement had given great satisfaction to the Emperor, who had become suspicious in consequence of his attention having been drawn to a recent article in the Army and Navy Gazette and a suggestion in Vanity Fair that England should treat the German fleet in 1904 as she treated the Danish fleet in 1808. (sic.) I said that the two papers he mentioned were without any practical importance and I thought it a pity that the Emperor should have paid any attention to them. About same time the British Ambassador in Berlin had a long discussion with Herr von Holstein of the German Foreign Office about the tone of the British Press, and he wrote to Lord Lansdowne on December 30, 1904: 'This subject again came up for discussion between the two Governments about six months later. While giving an account of a conversation he had had with the Imperial Chancellor, Sir Frank Lascelles wrote to Lord Lansdowne on June 12, 1905:

'He (von Bulow) regretted that this state of things should exist and that the English Press should continue the hostility against Germany. I was aware of the sensitiveness of the Emperor to English opinion, and hardly a day passed without His Majesty's sending him (Bulow) a sheaf of English papers to read.'

Lord Lansdowne also wrote to Sir Frank Lascelles on the subject. He stated:

'So far as I was able to follow the argument of these personages, the strained relations which were believed to exist between Great Britain and Germany were due, in the first place, to the attitude of the English Press, and in the second.....'

With regard to the attitude of the Press, His Excellency (Count Metternich, the German Ambassador in London) who knew this country so well, must I thought be well aware that His Majesty's Government was in no way answerable for the language of our newspapers."

At the time of the Bosnian Crisis of 1908, the British Press generally took up a very strong anti-Austrian attitude. This led to very strong diplomatic representations on the part of the Austro-Hungarian Government to the British Government. On November 5, 1908, we find Sir W. E. Goschen writing to Sir Edward Grey,—“His Majesty's Government regret as much as any one that the newspaper Press, should at times be utilized as the vehicle for international recriminations. But even if they had the power to interfere—which it is of course will known they have not. . . .”

Here it is specifically admitted, Sir, that they have no power to control the Press. There is also another case. It is the case on which the Marquess of Salisbury expressed the opinion that the Press is not under control:

“In March, 1900, extremely provocative articles were published in The Times regarding Germany. Sir F. Lascelles, the British Ambassador in Berlin, sent the following telegram to the Marquess of Salisbury on this subject on March 16.”

To this telegram, complaining about the conduct of the British Press, Lord Salisbury sent the following reply:

“I approve of your language to the Emperor which if necessary you can repeat from me. The incidents referred to are most unfortunate but the vagaries of the newspapers are entirely beyond my control.”

Then, Sir, you will find a number of other instances where even British Ministers and Statesmen have repeatedly stated that, whatever may be the English law on the subject years ago, at the present moment, or even at the time of 1900, there was no such law in existence which could control the Press. In this connection, I would like to draw the attention of the House to one particular opinion expressed by one of the most brilliant I.C.S. men of the province of Madras, Mr. Galletti. This is what he says:

“The Bill gives power not only to the Government of India but even a local Government to prosecute for anything likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government that, is His Majesty's Government in England, and the Government of any State in the world; and power to any magistrate to award punishment.

2. In practice both under the present constitution and the federal constitution it will be the Viceroy who will decide on prosecution, and conviction will follow as a matter of course. It is a power I would not entrust to any one man except on one condition, that in the particular circumstances he will be subject to the control of public opinion.”

I find from the report of the Select Committee that no distinction has been made between the expressions of opinion in religious matters and political matters. Be that as it may, I would like to read this passage in the very language which this European civilian has used:

“No Viceroy will dare to prosecute for expressions of opinion, however strong, that a neighbouring State is not governed in accordance with the principles of the Koran or that one pretender to the throne is a better Muhammadan than another. I would confine the Bill, like section 125 I. P. C. to Asiatic States.”

That of course is done to a certain extent. However, jurisdiction should be given only to Session Courts. Mr. Galletti states:

“I would give jurisdiction only to Sessions Courts sitting with jurors.”

That is a point which was not accepted by the Select Committee and I find that there is an amendment standing in the name of Mr. Maswood Ahmad to that effect. Mr. Galletti further says:

“I would not have a separate Act. I would add a section to the Indian Penal Code after section 125, which would be merely a logical corollary to that section.”

[Mr. B. Sitaramaraju.]

There is also another opinion, as has been pointed out by Sir Abdur Rahim, which would have this treated in the same way as defamation is treated. Further on Mr. Galletti says:

"The objection to the Bill in its present form is obvious to any man of liberal mind. Everyone has his preferences and his prejudices. Queen Victoria resented attacks on her fellow potentates and had the will but not the power to prosecute any one who attacked them. The parallel with England would only hold if the Sovereign in England exercised that power as the Viceroy would have whether under the present or the future constitution. The power is exercised by the Government in England and the Government in England is under control. Napoleon III demanded the punishment of Englishmen who libelled him, but public opinion prevented the Government giving his satisfaction. A Government that intercepted Mazzini's letters was promptly brought to hell in parliament and in press. Mr. Gladstone was never in danger of prosecution for calling the Government of Naples the negation of God or for campaigns against Turkish atrocities. Even in the war no one was in danger of prosecution for attacking Signor Giolitti or President Wilson or King Constantine though these attacks fell under the mischief of the present Bill. Libels on President Kruger were allowed although they led to the Boer war. King Leopold of Belgium was freely libelled for alleged atrocities in the Congo Free State. Attacks on the Soviet and Fascist Governments and on the personal character of Stalin, and Mussolini are made daily in England. France allows a virulent and vulgar Anti-Fascist paper full of scurrilous attacks on Mussolini, to be printed in Paris. Public opinion in England and France will not permit the Government to prosecute. The objection to giving power to the Viceroy to prosecute is that public opinion here is not strong enough to check the Viceroy. A further objection is that it is unnecessary to defend non-Asiatic Governments."

Sir, these are the opinions expressed by a European Civilian serving in the Presidency of Madras. I would also like to give the words of another European Civilian, who is the District Magistrate of Kurnool. With reference to the remarks made by the Honourable the Mover of this motion, he states as follows:

"If the Foreign and Political Department wants legislation it should not camouflage it. The Honourable Mover's speech was so elaborately camouflaged as to be almost irrelevant in parts."

Sir, from my own province several opinions have been received which are against this Bill. I would also quote the opinion of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras. This is what he says:

"I find it somewhat difficult to support the measure that has been proposed. In a country like India having a population of 72 million Muhammadans in close neighbourhood of Muhammadan States the prevention of all criticism of the acts of the neighbouring rulers—in matters affecting their co-religionists is liable to be considerably resented. The Bill makes no distinction of the criticism of these rulers in matters of religion as distinguished from temporal affairs. It is so wide that it includes both; and both the criticism and the consequential resentment is likely to be much greater in these matters than in purely temporal affairs. I am not aware of any law anywhere in the world which in the slightest degree prevents the members of a particular sect from criticising the conduct of heads of states in reference to their conduct in matters of religion. This is very different from preventing libels against rulers of Foreign States, because an attack on the character of a ruler may now be necessary for criticising his conduct with reference to his religion. Knowing how zealously Muhammadans in any part of the world watch the interests of their co-religionists abroad, and that India has perhaps the largest Muhammadan population, I think the Bill is particularly unsuitable to the conditions in this country."

Sir, the opinions that I have read out so far are entirely against this Bill, but I am sure it will be said that the Assembly has already accepted the principle of the Bill. Sir, we have never accepted the principle of the Bill. We have been fighting from the beginning, and we even went into the lobby against it. However that be as the very wording of clause 2, even as amended, shows, it is a Bill which cannot be accepted. The Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee is altogether different from the previous one, and it is absolutely necessary that we must have the opinion of the country on it before we proceed with it. It was stated by a writer of great reputation that the Foreign Relations Bill was justified neither by doctrines of international law nor by the practice of civilised nations. Its springs, he said, are in fact not legal but political, and it is rendered imperative by circumstances peculiar to India. British

1 P. M. foreign policy, so far as it concerns India, has of necessity to recognise the fact that there is a potential threat to the unity of the Empire in the nationalist aspirations of India. Its efforts therefore to a partial extent at any rate are directed to counterbalancing those aspirations, or at least towards seeing that no foreign influence complicates the internal situation. It is therefore a measure directed against the whole country and against all classes so much so that it cannot afford to have freedom of opinion about the foreign relations of the country. It is not correct to state that it is a Muslim affair. It is an Indian affair, and as such I lodge my emphatic protest and support the motion for circulation.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, I am sorry that the discussion, of course inevitably, has been widened in its scope instead of being confined purely to the amendment of my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. At the present stage, I deliberately propose to abstain from offering any remarks on the Foreign Relations Bill or its consideration, and would like to concentrate my own argument on the question of circulation. My opinion on this question is exactly the same as my opinion was during the last Simla Session when a friend of mine and a respected Member of my party brought forward the motion that the Press Bill be re-circulated for opinion. I opposed the re-circulation on principle. In that particular case, I was a Member of the Select Committee, and as a Member of the Select Committee, I felt obliged, even though the Bill was shaped beyond recognition by the Select Committee, to support where the Select Committee supported the Bill and to get it changed on the floor of the House where the minority in the Select Committee differed from that Bill. That is exactly the position that I propose to adopt in regard to this measure, though I am in a better position in this case because I have not been a Member of the Select Committee. Sir, the argument that the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party addressed to this House was chiefly this. He said that when a Bill emerged from the Select Committee changed beyond recognition, then the Bill should be re-circulated for opinion because it is a new Bill. I beg to differ from him. If a Bill emerges from the Select Committee in an aggravated form with objectionable features increased, it becomes necessary to circulate the Bill for public opinion. But if a Bill emerges from the Select Committee in an improved form—and I believe the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party has not stated that the Bill has emerged in an aggravated form with increased objectionable features

Sir Abdur Rahim: I said it was a different Bill, a different measure.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: He said it was not the same Bill. As I said in Simla in regard to the Press Bill, even though one of my friends belonging to my party contended at the time that the Bill was very different from what it was when it went to the Select Committee, I held at the time that it was a Bill which had come in an improved form even though some of its principles had been vitally shaken and some of the clauses had been wholly changed. I said as it had come in an improved form, it was for us to discuss it on the floor of the House and reject it if we did not think it acceptable to us, or amend it in whatever form it should be amended. I am at present not uttering one word on the merits of the Bill because I think there will be ample opportunity during the progress of the Bill, if Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad's amendment does not prove acceptable to this House, to express my opinion on that matter. At present, as amply illustrated by quotations made by the Whip of the Independent Party, there has been a good deal of opinion against the Bill which was circulated and this is more or less the same Bill. I do not for a moment think the object of the Bill is different. I do not believe that the principle of the Bill has been altered; the purpose of the Bill continues to be the same, only it has been improved, but perhaps that is a matter which will have to be discussed at a later stage. It has been improved perhaps in certain aspects, and on that matter I should like to hear Members of my party who have served on the Select Committee, and I believe they have yet to speak on that; but until they have spoken I would leave the question open. My party has not made this a party question. My party has left the doors open. So far as the question of re-circulation is concerned, in the light of certain observations made by Mr. Raju, who quoted abundantly the opinion expressed in the country when it was first circulated for opinion, I conclude that re-circulation is only a superfluity to which I am unwilling to commit my party. At the same time, I may say that when the Bill comes up for discussion on the floor of the House, Members of my party will be free to discuss the matter exactly as they choose.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): The objection which was taken to this Bill at the Simla Session was mostly one objection, that it affected religious performances of Muslims, and it debarred the Muslims from making fair criticism of the actions of those Rulers where the Muslims, on account of their religious performances, have to go. That was the objection strongly taken by my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, that he did not like the Bill to be sent to the Select Committee, and when the House voted in favour of the Bill being referred to the Select Committee on the assurance given by the Leader of the House that, before it went to the Select Committee, it would be circulated for public opinion by executive order, when this was done and the Bill referred to the Select Committee, the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party not only himself refused to serve on the Committee but stopped every Member of his party from serving on the Committee. The result was that every one dropped out.

Sir Abdur Rahim: That was not so.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: One by one every one whose name was proposed for the Select Committee withdrew his name.

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: Because I was opposed to the principle of the Bill.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Once the House having voted for referring the Bill to Select Committee, they refused to serve on the Committee and thus deprived the Select Committee greatly of the benefit which the Committee could have derived from the wise counsels which are tendered to-day.

Sir Abdur Rahim: What about the Honourable Member himself?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: After saying that one is not willing to serve on the Select Committee, it is not fair for one to come and criticise the particular actions taken by the Select Committee. One objection had been taken that public opinion had not been consulted and if opinions had been received they had not been properly considered by the Select Committee. But I beg to differ from this. There were two kinds of opinions received, one was opinion which was real opinion, and those people pointed out the difficulties in the Bill and made certain suggestions as to how to improve the Bill. There were other kinds of opinions which were not opinions at all. Those opinions were that the Bill affected the religious freedom and therefore the Bill should not be enacted. With all humility, I beg to differ from those opinions and also differ from those Honourable Members who call this opinion. I think this could not be the opinion because these people did not study the Bill at all, and this kind of opinion, which neither suggests any remedy, nor points out any difficulty, could be hardly called any opinion. And due weight was given to all those opinions which fell under the first category.

Now, Sir, the chief point which was made by my Honourable and learned friend the Leader of the Independent Party and certain other Muslim Members and also supported by some Governments, especially the U. P. Government, was that an unnecessary legislation, which might create a kind of agitation by affecting certain rights of Muslims, should not be undertaken. That being the case, due regard was paid to this question. It was considered that the principal countries in which Muslims were concerned on account of their religious performances were Arabia, Mesopotamia and Palestine. And it was decided by the Select Committee that these places should be excluded from the scope of the Bill because no criticism of a fair kind should be allowed to come within the scope of the Bill where they are really and vitally concerned. So the Select Committee chose to limit the scope of the Bill, although it was not really warranted. But it was thought that the Government's object could be gained if the scope was narrowed down, and with this narrowing down, the objection which was taken by the Muslims was absolutely taken away. It has been narrowed down to the States which border on India, or are contiguous to the shores of India, and no religious objection can be taken now to the present Bill as it has come out. This Bill affects Hindus, Christians, Sikhs, etc., as much as it affects Mussalmans, and due consideration was given to the fact that no interference with religious performances should be permitted in this Bill.

Another objection is that the Bill, as it has come out of the Select Committee, is totally different from the original Bill. I quite agree in that. The first Bill said that any statement which tended to create unfriendly relations was punishable. It was found by the Select Committee that the scope of the Bill was very wide and they said that a statement which was in the nature of defamation of a Prince would be punishable—defamation as defined in the Indian Penal Code. The Prince or Ruler defamed cannot appear in the courts of British India and in order to give him protection it was laid down that the Governor General in Council should be authorised to lodge a complaint before the court and prove that it was a libellous statement. In addition to that, they have also to prove a second fact, that it also creates unfriendly relations. So in order to have a conviction, these two things will have to be proved by the Governor General in Council.

So the scope has been narrowed down and it has emerged from the Committee in a much better form. The Committee considered whether the court should be the judge as regards the likelihood of unfriendly relations being created, or whether it should be left to the Governor General in Council, and the majority of the Committee came to the conclusion that the court should be the judge and this should form part of the Bill. So with these two things, it is very difficult for the Governor General in Council to launch a prosecution unless they are absolutely sure that they can secure a conviction. They will probably in many cases choose not to prosecute owing to the difficulty of proving that there will be unfriendly relations, because it will have to be proved in court by some officer of Government who will have to disclose the correspondence and evidence in their possession. Sir, I think the Bill goes far beyond the limits that would be required for giving real protection to Rulers of neighbouring States.

One point which struck me during the debate and which was pointed out by my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, escaped the notice and attention of the Select Committee, and I feel sorry that he did not sit on that Committee; if he had been there and if he had pointed it out, the Committee would have been wiser. It was about Aden. Of course if India includes Aden for the purposes of this Bill, then it touches certain States; but the intention of the Select Committee was never to include them in the scope of the Bill. But I feel doubtful whether the word "India" will include Aden, because it is British India which includes Aden, and the word used is not British India, but only India, and therefore I thought that when my Honourable friend was talking about Pondicherry and Goa and other settlements of foreign powers in India, whether they are bordering on India or not, I thought that the word used was not British India, and that anything which stands outside India will be considered to be outside India, as India stands on the map, and not India which may be called British India, which is a totally different thing. Geographical India includes Pondicherry and Chandernagore and Goa, and other places also. But if my friends think that the scope of the Bill, as it stands today, includes those states, which was not the intention of the Select Committee, of course an easy amendment can be made in the shape of an explanation added to clause 2, by which we can say that for the purposes of this Bill, Aden will not be considered as part of India. Then no prosecution will be launched in respect of defamation as far as those territories which are bordering the small colony of Aden in Arabia are concerned. I would not like that, for this little thing, this Bill should be re-circulated again for obtaining the kind of opinions that have been read out by the Honourable gentleman. I do not think any case has been made out for re-circulation.

Another point which has been touched by my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim is this, that the framers of the Indian Penal Code have deliberately abstained from putting down this offence in the Indian Penal Code. I beg to differ from this; they did not deliberately abstain from putting this down. Political circumstances in 1861 were not the same as the political circumstances are today. India did not stand in the same need in 1861 as she stands today . . .

An Honourable Member: Are we in a worse position?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: The political circumstances have changed. The Amir of Afghanistan was not then considered an independent ruler in those days; but he is an independent ruler to-day. The position of other contiguous states is absolutely changed. The circumstances are changing, and for this purpose, every day as the necessity arises, the law has to be changed. The law can never be the same, and it will have to be changed as the circumstances change, and we find today that certain conditions and certain statements appear in the Press, which make it obligatory that protection should be given to our neighbours so that the relations between India and those States may remain solid, and may not be jeopardised by the man who writes in the Press simply for his own sake. I think that the Bill should be considered now and there is no necessity for re-circulation.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty-Five Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty-Five Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahib Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): Mr. President, I support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. So far as the legal aspect of the Bill is concerned, it has been fully dealt with by the Honourable the Leader of my Party and also by my Honourable friend, Mr. Sitaramaraju. As a layman, I will try to convince the House of the necessity of circulating this Bill for eliciting public opinion. The contention of the Government is that it has been circulated, but circulation by means of an executive order is no circulation at all according to our view. It will be circulated to Local Governments, to High Courts and to Bar Associations, but there are so many important associations run by the public and they are of all-India reputation, and this Bill has not been circulated to them. So far as I know, Sir, the All-India Muslim League has not been consulted on this important question, nor has the Muslim Conference been consulted. The All-India Khilafat Committee, the Jamiatul-Ulema-i-Hind, Delhi, Jamiatul-Ulema of Cawnpore, have been totally ignored, the Anjuman-i-Islam of Lahore has not been consulted; in fact not even a single public association has been consulted; nor have the Government consulted any Hindu, Sikh, Christian or Parsi Association on this important matter. So, Sir, the Mover of this amendment was cautious enough in using the word "circulating" this Bill and not "re-circulating" as has been put down by my Honourable friend, Mr. Maswood Ahmad.

[Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahib Bahadur.]

We do not recognise this circulation by virtue of an executive order. The whip of our party, as has been pointed out, is not in favour of that kind of circulation of a Bill of this important character. My friend Mr. Yamin Khan, who is absent now, laid strong stress on the point that we did not signify our willingness to serve on the Select Committee when our names were proposed, and in that connection he went to the length of saying that the leader of our party prevailed upon us not to serve on the Select Committee, which is not at all a fact. We have got our own independent view; we can use our discretion as to on what committees we should serve and with what committees we should not be associated. The House is fully alive to the fact that all members of our party were opposed to the very principle of the Bill, and therefore we were not willing to serve on the Select Committee. This point has been made much of by my Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan, who said that inasmuch as we have not served on the Select Committee, there is no justification to criticise the Government now. In his enthusiasm to support this Bill, he has ignored even the opinion of some Muslim Associations who have sent a copy of the Resolution passed by them to the Muslim Members here. The House may be aware of the fact, and particularly my friend the Foreign Secretary, that Shias as a whole have raised a hue and cry against this Bill. Lucknow, which happens to be their centre, held many a meeting and they have passed Resolutions, copies of which have been forwarded to Government and also to the Press. Such being the case, it is quite necessary that this Bill should be circulated for eliciting public opinion. As regards the Bill as a whole, Sir, there is some erroneous impression in the minds of some of my non-Muslim friends that this measure will affect Muslims and Muslims alone and so some non-Muslims may keep themselves aloof from this. (An Honourable Member: "Who says so?") I know there are some Members who think like that.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Yes, there are some Members who think like that, I know.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Here is my Honourable friend to support me. But the question is this, Sir. The liberty of the Press has already been curtailed, and this Bill is surely calculated to curtail its liberty to the highest possible degree. There is no sense or justification in saying that Government will avail themselves of reasonable opportunities, and that they will not sanction prosecution unwarrantedly and unreasonably. What may seem reasonable to the Government may be quite unreasonable to us. After all, we know, Sir, how the Governor General in Council acts in matters like this. I do not mean any disrespect to the Members of the Executive Council,—the Governor General in Council have to rely on the opinion of the Foreign Secretary, on one solitary individual, so far as matters like these are concerned. The Governor General in Council don't generally say "No" to what he says. So, Sir, there is great danger in undertaking legislation of this character. So far as my constituency is concerned, I consulted many gentlemen of eminence in my province, and they are all against this. If my friend Mr. Yamin and Members of his way of thinking are of opinion that the modifications that have been made now have to a great extent met the objections of the community, then they are entirely mistaken. I would therefore strongly urge that this Bill should be circulated for eliciting public opinion in its true sense, which is very very important in matters of this kind.

As for the Deputy Leader of the Nationalist Party, I am glad that he gave vent only to his personal opinion. I was afraid that he would even go to the extent of committing his own party against this motion, but he has not done so. He has found it impossible for him to agree with my Honourable friend and Leader Sir Abdur Rahim in one important fact. Sir Abdur Rahim has proved to the hilt that by legislation of this kind a new offence will be created which will not be either in the interests of the Government or the governed. Sir, I hold, that all Indian communities will be affected by legislation of this nature. So, I hope that my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer who, though a Northern Indian now, is a Madrassi . . . (An Honourable Member: "Is that a fault?") No, Sir. On the other hand, I feel proud of him.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I am unwilling to interrupt my Honourable friend, but what I stated was this. I was saying that my Party had left it as an open question. And there are Members in my Party who are both for and against. As for the merits of the question, that is a larger issue; I did not go into it.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: So, I express my joy over that expression that without committing his party in favour of or against the motion, he gave his personal view, and I now request him to change his personal view also, because it has been proved by so eminent a lawyer as the Leader of our Party that legislation of this kind is quite uncalled for and unnecessary, especially as it creates a new offence which is sure to prove detrimental not only to the interests of the Government but also to those of all other communities alike.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: The Honourable the Mover of this amendment brought forward a similar motion when the Bill was before the House in the last Simla Session, and the grounds which he urged in support of that motion were as flimsy and as untenable as those which he has urged to-day.

Sir, the law of England punishes defamatory statements against foreigners outside the dominions of the King only when such defamatory statements endanger or tend to endanger peaceful relations between the Government of His Majesty and the foreign country concerned. That is what is called the law of seditious libel in England, and the two essential ingredients of that offence are that the statement must be defamatory and that the defamatory statement should tend to bring about unfriendly relations. As the Bill which was brought forward at the last Simla Session stood, it lacked the ingredient of the statement being defamatory, and so far as I could understand, the principal desire of the eminent speakers who spoke on the other side was that the law sought to be propounded in the Bill should be made conformable to the English law by adding that ingredient of defamatory statement in the law. As it is in accordance with the wishes of the Opposition that the Select Committee has added that ingredient and has made the law conformable to the English law, one would have thought that the Opposition would have agreed to pass the Bill as recommended by the Select Committee. But as some of my Honourable friends on the other side said the other day, the business of the Opposition is to oppose, and they have been following that maxim to-day

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Not to oppose everything.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: The Honourable the Mover of the amendment in support of his motion for re-circulation relied on the arguments advanced by the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party at Simla. The main ground which Sir Abdur Rahim urged at Simla was that the English law, as found in Stephen's Digest, provided for fair criticism and the Bill as then brought forward did not make any such provision. Whatever justification there might have been for the complaint as regards the Bill brought forward in the last Simla Session, that complaint has absolutely no justification as regards the Bill which is before the House to-day. The law of defamation having been embodied in the present Bill, all the ten exceptions mentioned in section 499 are open to an accused person. (An Honourable Member: "How?") An Honourable Member asks how. Section 499 does provide, he will admit, ten exceptions to the definition of the offence of defamation as defined there, and clause 2 of the Bill, by embodying the law of defamation in the present Bill, also embodies all those ten exceptions, and in order to show how far they guard the rights and privileges of newspaper writers and other writers, I propose to read a paragraph or two from Ratanlal on Crimes. At page 1185 the book says:

"Every writer has a right to comment on those acts of public men which concern him as a subject of the realm, if he does not make his commentary a cloak for malice and slander. A writer in a public paper has the same right as any other person, and it is his privilege, if indeed it is not his duty, to comment on the acts of public men which concern not himself only but which concern the public, and the discussion of which is for the public good. And where a person makes the public conduct of a public man the subject of comment and it is for the public good, he is not liable to an action if the comments are made honestly, and he honestly believes the facts to be as he states them, and there is no wilful misrepresentation of fact or any misstatement which he must have known to be a misstatement if he had exercised ordinary care."

Then again:

"A newspaper has a public duty to ventilate abuses and if an official fails in his duty, a newspaper, is absolutely within its rights in publishing facts derogatory to such official and making fair comment on them, but it must get hold of provable facts. The editor, however, should be most watchful not to publish defamatory attacks upon individuals unless he first takes reasonable pains to ascertain that there are strong and cogent grounds for believing the information which is sent to him to be true—that proof is readily available and that in the particular circumstances his duty to the public requires him to make the facts known."

Sir, similar comments are found on the other exceptions in the Penal Code. Then it was urged by the Honourable the Mover that the Bill was not circulated among the people most concerned. I quite agree that the Bill was not sent round to the 350 millions of the population of India, but it was sent to people most competent to give their opinions on it and the very fact that my Honourable friend the Mover has cited before the House protests from several associations shows that there is absolutely no justification for his complaints on this score.

Then my Honourable friend said that the Bill is likely to affect the religious susceptibilities of the Mussalman section of the Indian population. This was the very ground which was urged in Simla and the Select Committee has taken care to see that no such ground exists in the present Bill by eliminating all countries from the purview of this Bill in which Mussalman shrines are situated and comments as regards which country may affect the religious susceptibilities of Muhammadans.

Sir, my Honourable friend on the other side said that the Bill is so very much altered that it should be re-circulated. As the Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party pointed out, what reason can there be for circulation of a measure which has been altered in the sense of improvement in the direction of popular wishes. Sir, so far as I am concerned, I see no sense absolutely in such a demand. I can quite understand it if the Bill had been made more reactionary and oppressive but looking at the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee, I see no ground for complaint on this particular head also, more especially as the Select Committee themselves say in their report that the Bill has not been so altered as to require re-publication and that the Bill be passed as now amended. On that Select Committee was the Leader of the Nationalist Party, who spoke at very great length against the Bill in this House at the Simla Session. My Honourable friend Dr.

3 p.m. Ziauddin relied on arguments of his learned leader, Sir Abdur Rahim, in support of his proposition that the Bill should be circulated. I have read the arguments put forward by Sir Abdur Rahim at the Simla Session, and I find that as regards the most important argument advanced by him, namely, the argument based on the English law, Sir Abdur Rahim's remarks are a tissue of unmitigated inaccuracy. Those remarks are found on page 950 of the debates.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): He is not in his seat to answer you.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: I am sorry he is not here. He ought to be here. His lieutenants are here. He says:

"Will my Honourable friend the Law Member point out any English law which has a provision to that effect. What is this English law. It is an old obsolete thing. The last prosecution was in 1803 and so far as I can find, there have been only four cases, one in 1764, one in 1778, of another I forget the exact date and the last one was in 1803."

As I said, this statement is a tissue of unmitigated inaccuracy. The law is not obsolete in England. The last prosecution as shown by Antonelle's case was as recently as 1905.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: The Honourable gentleman has not told us what is the English law?

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: I have already stated what the law of England is. The English law is that a defamatory statement about a person outside the King's dominions is not punishable by the law of England unless and until that defamatory statement also tends to prejudice peaceful relations of His Majesty's Government with the foreign country concerned.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: What is the inaccuracy you are talking about?

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: The inaccuracy is that the law is obsolete and the last prosecution was not in 1803 but in 1905.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Give some details.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: The examples quoted are a quarter of a century old at least.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: Then, Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party, when speaking about the statement of law made on the floor of this House by the Honourable the then Law Member, Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, said that the law of seditious libel was not as propounded by the Honourable the Law Member, even though the Honourable the Law Member had actually cited the very words of Bishop's "Criminal Law" and said that the American law was exactly similar to the English law,—and it may be noted, the present legislation seeks, as explained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons and the Report of the Select Committee, to embody the principles of the English law. I submit, therefore, Sir, that, in citing the authority of the Leader of the Independent Party, my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad has not much advanced his case for circulation. With these words, I submit that this motion should be rejected.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhamadan): Sir, as a member of the Select Committee, I should like to say just a few words on this motion. I am free to confess that when the Bill was first introduced into this House it had many objectionable features; and those Honourable Members who thought it fit to oppose the Bill at that stage were in my opinion perfectly justified in doing so. But the House by a majority accepted the principle of the Bill and referred it to a Select Committee. The Select Committee, as will be seen, has improved this Bill to a very great extent; and I note that my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad also has admitted in the course of his speech that the most objectionable features of the Bill have been removed by the Select Committee, or at least very greatly modified. Sir, the Bill when it was originally introduced was very wide and comprehensive. It embraced within its scope all foreign countries, but the Select Committee has restricted it to only those countries which were outside India but adjoining India. (Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: "You call that an improvement?") It was done on the ground that statements which may be published in this country would not be likely to have any serious effect on those countries which are very far from India. For instance, a statement which might appear in the Indian Press attacking the Head of the Brazilian Government, or any other Government very far from India, is not likely to lead to any serious complications or to endanger or prejudicially affect the relations between India and that far off foreign territory.

An Honourable Member: What about the State of Arabia?

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: It was in that view of the matter that this Bill was restricted in its scope. Now if this modification, which was made by the Select Committee, is open to any objection, it is quite up to Honourable Members to discuss it on the floor of this House; and if a suitable amendment is tabled on that particular point, Honourable Members may either accept or reject that amendment on the merits as they like. This in itself is not a ground for re-circulating the Bill.

Then another improvement effected by the Select Committee is that the responsibility of adjudicating whether a writing is of such a nature as to prejudice the friendly relations between this Government and the foreign State concerned is cast by the Select Committee on the court. The provision of the Bill as originally introduced was that the Governor General or the Government was the sole judge in deciding whether a particular writing was likely to be prejudicial to the maintenance of friendly relations, but the Select Committee has made an improvement and thrown the responsibility of deciding that particular question upon the court concerned. I find, Sir, in his minute of dissent my Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell and my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham have pointed out this difference and disagreed with the improvement. With regard to the motion for re-circulation, I have to point out that the Members of the Select Committee unanimously held that the Bill had not been so altered as to require re-publication, not to speak of re-circulation. There were both Hindu and Muhammadan Members on the Select Committee, but not a single member has recommended re-circulation. With regard to the provisions of the Bill, I may state that there is a distinct improvement with regard to clause 2, which after all is the main and operative portion of the Bill. The Bill as originally introduced embraced within its scope all writings which were likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of any foreign State. But the Bill as it has emerged out of the Select Committee is restricted in its scope, and is limited only to offences of defamation "with intent to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State, or whereby the maintenance of such relations is likely to be prejudiced". I am not speaking about the merits of the Bill. If the Select Committee have made mistakes, let us all discuss the Bill on the floor of the House; and if I have made any mistake in putting my signature on the Select Committee's report, it should be quite open to me to revise my views if I am convinced; but no case has been made out for re-circulation. This Bill was circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion in the country in the same way as other Bills in the past have been circulated. Those opinions so far as they are reflected in the papers before the House were before the Select Committee also; and I think they are available to all Members of this House. The motion for re-circulation is a dilatory motion. I am not giving at this stage my opinion on other provisions of the Bill. I shall be free to express my opinion if necessary one way or the other, on the merits of the amendments that may be moved. But so far as the question of the re-circulation of the Bill is concerned, I am unwilling to agree to it.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, the Bill is a very useful one, and I think that in some quarters its real object has not been properly understood. It is based on a very common sense and daily-life practice, as every one of us wishes to be very friendly with his neighbours. So, it is the duty of the Government of India to be very friendly with their neighbours. Just as it is the bounden duty of the Government to maintain peace, law and order within India, so it is the bounden duty of the Government of India to have very friendly relations with the adjoining Rulers who are also very friendly with us. The object of the Bill is not to interfere with the religion of any community because the policy of non-interference in religious matters by the British Government is too well known, nor it is the object of the Bill to deprive the Press of its liberty because if the Press is abusing its liberty, we have for that purpose other laws and other regulations. I myself complained about some of the articles published in the newspapers in Northern India last year when I was in London. At that time we were surprised that the Government were not taking proper action against those articles which were malicious and were written simply as propaganda work by one party living in a foreign but adjoining State, and bribing the newspapers in British India and using those articles as party politics against our very friendly Rulers. We were feeling that it was the duty of the Government that when the other Rulers were so friendly with us, we ought to have regard for their respect, especially when we knew very well that those articles and accusations were not in the interests of any religion either in the other countries or in India. That propaganda was going on simply by the force of money. Is it not the duty of the Legislature and of the Government to keep very friendly relations with our neighbouring States? If it is our bounden duty to keep peace and to have every regard for various communities and for the freedom and liberty of individuals in India, is it not also our duty to pay our full attention to the friendly relations with the neighbouring States who are very friendly with us and who give us all possible help and in whose countries there is no propaganda against us? The object of the Bill is only this, so far as I can understand it. If the Bill had been properly understood, I do not think there would have been the least objection in any quarter of the House (Mr. S. C. Mitra: "And yet there is objection to it from every quarter of the House".) The Muslim institutions or Anjuman which have objected to the Bill have misunderstood the aim and object of it. They thought, according to their different religious opinions, that perhaps in some far off places, beyond Aden and other places, the Bill was going to be affected and would have some interference with their religion. But the Honourable Sir Evelyn Howell has explained the Bill so clearly that there is no scope for the interference with different religious ideas of the Shias and the Sunnis or of any other religion. It is purely for the purpose of keeping under our thumbs that malicious propaganda which is sometimes started by those parties who wish to create some trouble in the neighbouring States and who are sheltered and harboured here with the aid of money. Articles are written simply to create ill feelings between the two neighbouring countries. Sir, the mischief-makers in India are trying their best to bribe the vernacular Press mostly to create such troubles. (Mr. B. Das: "What are those newspapers? Will you kindly mention their names?") Some people who are living in the North-West Frontier Province would very much like to create trouble there. If once trouble is created there, those who live in the Frontier can understand what calamities and troubles they will lead to if there are no friendly relations with the neighbouring State. I must take this opportunity, Sir, of thanking the other side of the Frontier for their very just, neutral and friendly attitude; otherwise even if they had the slightest idea of creating the slightest trouble, it would have cost us, as I said the other day in my speech in this House, thousands and thousands of lives and millions and millions of pounds. It is most important on the part of the Government of India to keep very friendly relations with the neighbouring States for the good of India itself and also for the good of her people. Many of us do not realise the situation and the position in which the Government of India are placed. If for a moment we place ourselves in the position of the Foreign Office and of the Government of India, we will soon realise that our first duty is to have a full regard for the safety of India by maintaining the friendly relations with the neighbouring States.

The second duty would be to have a full regard for the internal safety and for the internal management of the country. Sir, it is very easy for a man to manage his house according to his position or power, but it is not so very easy for him to manage the affairs with his neighbours. People, as a rule, have more regard for their neighbours than for those who live actually with them. The aim and object of the Bill is only this and nothing else. Its aim is not to interfere with the religion of any community or with the freedom and liberty of the Press, or to stop and muzzle those people who are very fond of writing articles and discussing foreign and political affairs. I think that if we all look into the real aim and object of the Bill, there will be no objection to it in its original form as it was moved by the Honourable Sir Evelyn Howell.

As for the technical side of the question whether it should be according to the English common law or whether that law is obsolete or dead, all these things are irrelevant in my opinion to the aim and object of the Bill. I will leave it to the Honourable lawyers to struggle and fight and show their ability on those points. So far as the real object of the Bill is concerned I as one coming from the N. W. F. P. should like to have a plain talk and go straight to the point. Sir, the Bill is very useful and necessary and all those Honourable Members who generally wish that the relations of the Government of India should be friendly with their neighbours both in and out of India should give their support to the Bill.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I feel fortunate that I have to speak on this Bill at this early stage. I was one of the Members of the Select Committee and therefore there is a justification for me to place the facts and the law before this House in order that they may come to a fair judgment on the Bill as well as on this dilatory proposition. To begin with, I may say in one word that this Bill aims at protection to the foreign rulers and the scope of such rulers has now been restricted to which I will refer shortly. The Bill gives protection to foreign rulers against any scurrilous statements that are made against them in India. Such statements will be an offence under this Bill if the intention is to create unfriendly relations between the British Government and the ruler of the foreign State. That being the object, I submit when this question came before the Select Committee, several objections were raised and some of those objections were actually such that the Select Committee accepted them. But still there are some other objections which the House has yet to decide upon. I may say at this stage that I am one of the dissenting Members of the Select Committee so far as certain objections are concerned.

Now it will be clear to the House that the original Bill which was presented to the House and which went to the Select Committee provided in clause 2 that if any one "makes, publishes or circulates any statement, rumour, or report with intent to promote, etc.", then it would be an offence.

[Mr. Lalchand Navalrai.]

This was a very wide scope and it was considered by the Members of the Select Committee that it should be curtailed, as otherwise it was too wide to include any sort of flimsy statement or report or even unfounded rumour for which a man could be put to trouble. Therefore this was conceded by the Select Committee, especially in virtue of certain remarks that were expressed by the Government of the United Provinces at page 26 of the report of opinions which say:

"There is a general feeling among Muslims that the definition of the offence given in clause 2 of the Bill is too wide in its scope. Fears have been expressed that as this clause stands at present it might be held to be an offence under this Bill to criticise matters affecting Islam such as the administration of the places in the Hejaz in which Indian Muslims have a vital interest. The Local Government considers that it is impolitic to cause genuine apprehension to any large section in India by passing a measure intended to avoid the susceptibilities of neighbours who as a rule are very far from being equally scrupulous in regard to attacks on the British Government."

Sir, in view of this opinion and several other opinions which were considered by the Select Committee, it was decided that so far as the first portion of clause 2 was concerned, it should be changed. Then it was changed in this manner. The Bill which has issued out of the Select Committee reads thus:

"Whoever commits any offence punishable under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India"

Now, there were two objections, one was such as I just read out to the House. The other was that this Bill would apply to any foreign State and it was not advisable that it should be passed in a way which would affect Indians' expressing their opinion with regard to every foreign State. Therefore the Bill was curtailed and the words now used are "a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India". Now this Bill would certainly apply actually to those States which are very adjoining, not such of the States as are far away. Therefore, I do not think there is any fear on that score, especially as the Honourable the Foreign Secretary has also said that the intention is no other. I do not think there is any other view of the Treasury Benches on this point. With regard to these too wide words the Select Committee searched for some precedent and found out words which were already used in a Statute under which people are being punished. Therefore instead of these wide expressions they changed those words into such statements as come under the definition of defamation as provided in the Indian Penal Code. This Chapter XXI used in clause 2 relates to defamation. The House knows what defamation is, but in order to remove certain impressions of the House that the objections raised have not been met by the Select Committee, it becomes necessary for me to say something with regard to this offence and the definition of defamation together with the safeguards under it. Section 499 of the Indian Penal Code defines defamation as under:

"Whoever by words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations, makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person, is said, except in the cases hereinafter excepted, to defame that person."

Now, Sir, this is a definition which is applied here in India. Any man who makes an imputation of this character will come under section 499 T. P. C.

and be punished. There may be a certain fear in the minds of the Honourable Members that any fair criticism or fair comment which is made in good faith will also be covered by this and a man will be punished for it as well, but I want to remove that misunderstanding because section 499 I. P. C. is subject to certain exceptions.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): I hope the Honourable Member is not going to repeat what Mr. Anklesaria has already stated to the House. The exceptions to section 499 were read out and commented upon by Mr. Anklesaria.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I am not going to repeat them. I am only referring to them to remind the House that there are safeguards provided. What I particularly want to draw attention to, without reading these exceptions, is to refer to three exceptions only showing that these three are pertinent to this question. They are exceptions Nos. 1, 3 and 9. So my humble submission is that there are safeguards which have been provided and therefore there is no fear that any fair comment or any comment which is harmless will make anybody punishable.

Then, Sir, proceeding further I find that there are certain objections which from my point of view have not been accepted by the Select Committee. With regard to those I submit that the first comes under this clause 2, and it says that an imputation against the Ruler of a State or against a member of his family or against a Minister of such Ruler shall be punishable. I object to this on the ground that 'family' and 'minister' were not included in the original Bill. The original Bill referred only to the Ruler, and we do not find that there is any precedent even in the English law and English countries where any other person but the Ruler of a State is so protected. On this point my view is that it is not necessary or proper to extend any protection with regard to any libel respecting any member of the family of the foreign Ruler. If the intention is to bring the Indian law on this subject into conformity with the English law, there is no such provision in the English law, making libel on the members of the family of foreign Sovereigns amenable under such special laws. The expression "member of his family" is very wide and elastic, and may include even a remote kinsman of the Ruler. The dictionary meaning of the word "family" is a body of servants or survivors of a house or the retinue or following of a person of estate or authority. Even the narrower meaning includes those descended really and putatively from a common progenitor. The modern meaning too would include a group comprising immediate kindred. These are my submissions with regard to this point. The word "family" is very wide, and that is one of the objections which this House has to consider.

Then, Sir, further on we find that the words are "with intent to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State". I take objection to the words "friendly relations". My humble submission is that the object of the Bill is not that there should be protection against unfriendly relations, but that there should be protection against the creation of enmity and hostility between two Rulers. Therefore so far as these words are concerned, namely, to create unfriendly relations, they will be distorted and misinterpreted. On this point my view is that from the political point of view, the idea underlying the Bill is to prevent the dissemination of defamatory statements against foreign Rulers, made with intent to create enmity or hostility between the two Governments, and not only with an intent to cause unkind or unfavourable relations between them, or such as may merely tend to displease the Ruler. The word "friendly" means kind or favourable. The use of such an expression will go a great way to put too much restraint on the freedom of speech and the privilege of the Press. I submit, therefore, that the words "with intent to create enmity" may be more appropriate and this is what I am asking the House to consider.

Then, Sir, so far as the other portions of the Bill are concerned, they will also be considered at the time when amendments are moved, but I will make one remark so far as the courts are concerned. There was a difference of opinion in the Select Committee as to which courts should try these cases. Some of the Members were of the view that it must be the Sessions Court to try such an offender and that also should be considered by the House for this is a graver defamation than defamation against a particular man who can be tried in India by a First Class Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate. But in these cases where there will be many legal points to decide, I submit that the trial must be in a Sessions Court.

Now, Sir, with regard to this amendment for re-circulation of the Bill I submit that it is true that the opinions that were promised by the Government have been obtained. Government made only a promise that the opinions would be sought through Government agency and opinions have been got from their officers. But to be fair to the other side also, I would say that I have got those opinions in my hand and I find that excepting one or two opinions of the Bar Associations the opinions are of Government officials. I submit it will not be correct to say that many Bar Associations have given their opinion. On the contrary I find that at page 4 there is an opinion sent by the Chief Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara of a Government pleader and not of the Bar Association. I also find elsewhere an opinion of another Government pleader—Malik Khuda Buksh, Public Prosecutor in Derajat. At the end I find on page 25 a letter from the Secretary, Bar Association, Madras, and there is also another secured by the High Court from a Government advocate. So far as this question is concerned, my view is this: it is true that opinions have been sought, but the opinions have not been sought from the public. The Government opinions are there and the opinions of certain bar associations are also there; that is all. Therefore it is for the House, after I have placed all these views before it, to decide whether it is necessary that this Bill should be re-circulated.

Mr. K. P. Thampan (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I move that the question be now put.

Shaikh Sadiq Hasan (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, I feel it my duty to say a few words about this Bill. Unfortunately the British Government are becoming more irresponsible every day; and we find that their only aim and object is to make such laws and Ordinances as are distasteful to the people. As a matter of fact they are getting very desirous of curtailing the liberties of the people, and for this reason they always want to put forward such Bills as are absurd and very harmful to the country. The Bill which we have got before us does not protect the potentates only; it tries to protect their families as well

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Family does not include wives according to Mr. Lal Chand's interpretation. Do you include wives?

Shaikh Sadiq Hasan: My friend, Mr. Mitra, asks, do I include their wives? It is not only a question of their wives; if they happen to be Hindus who believe in a joint family system, it may protect their collaterals to the tenth degree; and in the case of Muhammadans, if they have got more than one wife, it protects their brothers-in-law and perhaps the sons and daughters of those brothers-in-law as well. It is only possible to bring such an absurd Bill before the House because the best elements of the country are non-co-operating with the Government and they have not come into the Assembly

An Honourable Member: Are we not here in a representative capacity?

Shaikh Sadiq Hasan: Yes; the gentlemen who have signed the report on this Bill no doubt have come in their representative capacity; but if they had been fighting against those radicals, I am very sure that most of them would not have been able to come here

An Honourable Member: Question.

Shaikh Sadiq Hasan: And if they had come, they would have such a restraining influence over them that they would not have dared to place such silly things before us. (Interruption.)

Now I want to take another point. It is said here "with intent to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government." etc. Now, Governments generally have not got a very high morality. Governments always judge according to their friendship with the States. If the British Government happens to be very friendly with a foreign State, they will consider any act as prejudicial to that Ruler; but if on the other hand they were unfriendly, as they were in the case of Amanullah Khan, they would allow full latitude to people to criticise him.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: The Bill says "prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations". If a man is unfriendly, there is no question of prejudicing those relations: it is only those who are friendly who are sought to be protected.

Shaikh Sadiq Hasan: I have only one more word to say and it is this: that foreign relations in the past even in England have caused great troubles. Take the case of Queen Mary: there was a civil war over there because she had a soft corner in her heart for the King of Spain. In the same way later on in the days of King James, a great man of whom the English are proud, Sir Walter Raleigh, was executed because the King of Spain wanted it to be done. Even in the time of Charles the First, civil war in England was due, I think, to some extent because he favoured the Spanish very much. What I have to say is this: this Bill is not so innocuous, and is not so harmless as it appears; but it may have serious consequences in time to come. It may appear at the present moment of no consequence, and we may pass it very lightly in this House, but we cannot say how it will result in the future; and I consider that in the interests of the country and in the interests of future generations of India, the Bill should be re-circulated.

Dr. R. D. Dalal (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: I accept closure: the question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, as my friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, with his usual acuteness reminded the House, the actual issue under discussion is a narrow one. Should this Bill be circulated for further opinion or should it not? On that point he gave a clear expression of his own opinion. My friend, Mr. Yamin Khan and other speakers have touched on the same point and have shown that so far as technical and constitutional reasons go, there is no ground whatever for eliciting further opinions. We have obtained large numbers of opinions, some favourable and some unfavourable; extracts from them have been read to the House, and they show that the question has been considered by most people who are in a position to offer an opinion of any value; and those opinions had to be consulted and have been consulted by the Select Committee. Many speakers, however, have by no means confined themselves to this narrow issue, but wandered off into other aspects and topics and questions connected with the Bill, and into those fields I am afraid it will be necessary for me, though I hope not at very great length, to attempt to follow them. The first point is . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair would like to inform the Honourable Member that the discussion has proceeded on his motion as well as on the amendment for circulation, and therefore all the speeches made were perfectly relevant and in order. The Honourable Member can deal with the whole subject now.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Thank you, Sir. I never meant to imply for a moment that they were not relevant.

Mr. President: The Chair thought that the Honourable Member was speaking under a misapprehension.

Sir Evelyn Howell: I have dealt with the question of necessity for collecting further opinions. There is another and a practical side of the question. Is the Bill of a nature which we can afford to have deferred? A number of Honourable Members have said—my friend, Dr. Ziauddin amongst them—that there is no situation now, therefore why not leave things quiet and in effect why should we put the lock upon the stable door until the steed has been stolen? I submit, as I have said before, that the danger is real and practical, and we do not wish to have the mischief done.

before we can take any steps to prevent it. I think that perhaps to emphasise this point I had better tell the House what happened last year. Early in March of last year a certain newspaper in Lahore,—it is no secret that it was the Zamindar—started a series of most malicious and defamatory attacks on the Ruler of an adjoining and friendly country, and followed them up by publishing a violent and inflammatory appeal from a dynastic rival of that Ruler, who had shortly before been driven from the throne of his country by the force of public opinion amongst his subjects. These publications produced a great deal of excitement both in this country and outside it. They could not in any way be dealt with under the ordinary law, and consequently early in April of last year the Foreign Relations Ordinance was issued. Still the stream of vituperation continued, and action consequently had to be taken under the Ordinance. During the six months for which that Ordinance was in force, from April to October of last year, six prosecutions in all were sanctioned under it. Three of these were brought against the Zamindar in respect of six articles published on various dates between the 18th April and the 2nd June. Two different editors were prosecuted and all three cases resulted in conviction. Each of the editors was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. In addition to these prosecutions against the Zamindar, three other newspapers, all published in Lahore, the Afghanistan, the Kesari and the People, were also prosecuted. In one case, that against the Kesari the editor apologised and the case was dropped. In another case, brought against the newspaper, the People in respect of a defamatory article about the Persian Government, conviction was followed by a sentence of imprisonment until the rising of the Court, and a fine of Rs. 200. In the third case, the editor of the Afghanistan was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. It will be remembered, Sir, that last year in September I stated on behalf of Government that if the publication of further articles of this nature compelled Government to take further action, there would be no hesitation in promulgating a second Ordinance. I have reason to believe that a good many Members of this House thought that perfectly reasonable, and that had that action been necessary, it would have been supported by a strong section of public opinion. Those organs of the Press, however, whose conduct had compelled the issue of the Ordinance, have, since its lapse, I admit, been quiescent, and attempts have therefore been made to argue that, because this is so, the need for the Bill has been removed. What are called in England "white glove assizes" frequently occur. But no one has so far suggested that murder and other crimes should cease to be punishable on that account. So here, no one can doubt that one of the main reasons why that campaign came to an end was the action taken by Government under the Ordinance and its expressed determination to do the same again should necessity arise. Nor can it be doubted that when the same inducements are once more forthcoming, if there is no statutory bar, the same consequences will once more ensue, and it is the absolute duty of Government and of this House to guard against that danger.

I have dealt with the points in so far as they have penetrated my intellect which were pushed at us by my friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. I now come to the arguments advanced by Sir Abdur Rahim. He said that this Bill created a new offence. I submit, Sir, that that is not so. This Bill does nothing but make a slight alteration in procedure, whereby a person hitherto debarred from access to our Courts, if he is aggrieved by a defamatory article, can have the remedy which the law provides for all and sundry. Then, Sir, the same speaker urged us to note the differences between the Bill as it would be if it came into effect in the form reported by the Select Committee and the English com-

4 P. M. mon law. I admit, Sir, that there were two points on which our Bill deviated from the English common law model, but I submit that the English common law is not a fetish to be slavishly worshipped, or copied and adopted in every respect. The English common law is a practical thing. It is the outcome of practical necessity, and we here have to do the same. If there is a slight difference between the English common law, and our law, I do not think that it matters much. The point is, is the spirit of it in accordance with that? Is it fair? That is what we have to look to. A third point which Sir Abdur Rahim made was that Aden is included in British India, and therefore if the Bill came into force, certain potentates whose domains might be supposed to adjoin the hinterland of Aden would come within the scope of this measure. I used the luncheon interval, Sir, to consult the map, and I see that, as I said in this House it is correct that the so-called Protectorate of Aden and the Hejaz do nowhere touch, and therefore, the Hejaz, as I said, remains excluded from the scope of the Bill. A Potentate known as the Inam of Sana has his territories adjoining the Aden hinterland and he would no doubt, I suppose, if what Sir Abdur Rahim said is correct, be one of those who might desire a complaint to be made and a prosecution to be launched on his behalf. But the danger is very remote.

An Honourable Member: What about Iraq?

Sir Evelyn Howell: Iraq is excluded from the scope of the Bill entirely. The other people adjoining Aden are certain obscure chiefs in a country called the Hadramaut about which no one knows very much or cares more than he knows. But if any Honourable Member thinks it necessary to table an amendment to the effect that for the purposes of this Bill India should be understood as not including Aden, I think that we could undertake to accept it.

I now come to what my friend Mr. Sitaramaraju said. He quoted at considerable length from certain papers relating to attacks in the English Press against the German Emperor in the year 1904, and in the course of his remarks he quoted a despatch from Lord Salisbury who was then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in England which ran—"The instances are most unfortunate". I think, Sir, that the same might have been said of the instances which Mr. Raju quoted in this House. Because as he said, some obscure writer in an English paper in the year 1904 made a perfectly preposterous suggestion that the British fleet should attack the German fleet before it grew too powerful, this offended the German Emperor and no action was taken against the writer in England, and from that moment relations between the two countries grew steadily worse, with the result that 10 years later the Great War followed. I submit, Sir, that if that writer had been muzzled from talking about a subject of which he obviously understood nothing the Great War might perhaps have been deferred.

Then, Sir, Mr. Raju also quoted from various opinions which were before the Select Committee. One of these was from a gentleman, whom he described with a great deal of eulogy, which he no doubt deserves as a very brilliant Civilian, and he proceeded to read extracts from that gentleman's opinions. But he always stopped at every point where the gentleman expressed any opinion contrary to the view Mr. Raju was advancing. Had he gone on a little further in one of his readings he would have read as follows:—"Libels on President Kruger were allowed, although they led to the Boer War". Sir, which is the greater evil—to have an unnecessary war or to muzzle an ill-informed journalist for writing on a subject which does not concern him?—I ask the House.

Another opinion cited by my friend was that of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in Madras. I submit, Sir, that if the opinion from which I have just been quoting and that of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras are both read as a whole, it must be apparent that they were both in favour of some measure for dealing with the evil of which I have spoken so often, although like this House they thought that the Bill then before the House was too wide, and I submit that the alterations which have been introduced by the Committee go a very long way towards meeting the objections which both those gentlemen recorded in the expression of their opinions.

I now come to my Honourable friend, Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur, who complained that no heed had been paid to the opinions expressed by various Shia associations in the United Provinces. I submit, Sir, that again is covered by the alterations made in Committee. If I am not mistaken, the representations made by those associations of Shia Muslims were on account of acts alleged to have been committed in the Hejaz. The Hejaz has been removed from the scope of the Bill and whether the Bill passes or not, it makes no differences to anybody who wishes to write about things that happen in the Hejaz.

Next came my Honourable friend Mr. Lalechand Navarai. I must confess that I found myself in some difficulty in knowing which way he was speaking. He gave a very elaborate defence of what had been done in the Committee, and then said that he was a perfectly unprejudiced man, and quite ready to make up his mind all over again and in the opposite direction at a moment's notice. (Laughter.) However, one of the amendments tabled by him in pursuit of this amiable intention is to substitute the words "to create enmity" instead of "to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations" in the appropriate sections of the Bill. I submit that diplomacy like other professions is entitled to its own language. We have our conventions in this House here. We talk about so and so as "my Honourable friend" although perhaps he may be personally almost unknown to us. We refer to other gentlemen as "the Honourable and gallant So and So", just as they do in the House of Commons, although we have no reason to suppose that any particular gentleman, because he has served in the Army, is more or less gallant than any other member. So, in the world of diplomacy, relations between the Powers are always friendly, until unfortunately sometimes they break down and then relations cease. As long as they are relations, they are friendly relations, and when you have certain classes of Powers to deal with, who, I must confess, are perhaps not so far advanced as some other countries, you have to look out what you are doing, because you have to take care not to offend them. They may take offence reasonably or unreasonably, but I submit that the mischief which they are in a position to cause by taking offence is so great and the evil of just being able to put a check on the unrestrained enthusiasm of a newspaper or two here and there so small, that it really is necessary to disregard the lesser evil for the sake of preventing the greater.

Finally, there come this question about families and Ministers and what not, and the insinuations that the Governor General in Council may at some future date sanction prosecution because somebody had said something offensive about remote descendants or distant collaterals of some foreign Ruler. Well, Sir, the Governor General in Council is aware, just as well as the rest of us, that foreign Rulers are very human beings after all and do not very much care what is said about their third or fourth cousins or probably do not set any very great store by imputations against the reputation of their minor officials. The point is that those attacks which the foreign Ruler is likely to resent may have consequences,—may even have consequences as dangerous and as deplorable as war. But whether they have those very serious consequences or not, they may have minor unpleasant consequences. The sort of thing I have in mind is this, that some illogical foreign Ruler might be attacked in the Indian Press. He might cause representations to be made and he might be told that the Governor General in Council had no means of dealing with this sort of thing and nothing could be done. "Very well," he would say to himself, "I will see about that. I will just see that any Indians who may come to my country in future do not have too comfortable a time while they are here." I submit that that is a possibility: It cannot be entirely discounted. But if the Government of India are in a position to say, "We have done all we can; we are slaves to law in this country; we cannot go outside it, but such law as we have we have put in motion," the objections which any foreign Ruler might have to any article that appeared in the Press would be to a great extent met.

Sir, I have I think dealt, so far as I can, with all the really relevant criticisms that have been advanced, and I hope that the amendment of my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad for circulation will be rejected. (Applause.)

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill, as reported by the Select Committee, be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 1st August, 1932."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide against the publication of statements likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of foreign states, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 2 of the Bill stand part of the Bill.

Sir Evelyn Howell: I beg to move the amendment which stands in my name relating to clause 2, the operative clause of the Bill.

The House has before it the Bill, as reported by the Select Committee, and Honourable Members will have noticed

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should read his amendment.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Very well, Sir. The amendment is as follows:

"That for clause 2 the following be substituted:

2. Where an offence falling under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code is committed against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or against any member of the family or against any Minister of such Ruler, and, in the opinion of the Governor General in Council, the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State may thereby be prejudiced, the Governor General in Council may make, or authorise any person to make, a complaint in writing of such offence, and, notwithstanding anything contained in Section 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, any Court competent in other respects to take cognizance of such offence, may take cognizance thereof on such complaint."

Power of Governor General in Council to prosecute in cases of defamation which prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations with certain foreign States.

Sir, this amendment was foreshadowed by the minute of dissent which Sir Lancelot Graham and myself submitted. In that minute of dissent it was pointed out that whether any given statement was likely or was not likely to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between the Government of India and any of the neighbours of India was a very highly specialised and technical matter. The Government of India could indeed send myself or some officer of my department to give evidence in court on the subject, but that would give the defence an opportunity to make further statements and insinuations which would have a far worse effect on foreign relations than the original article which ex hypothesi was forming the subject of the prosecution. Moreover if the expert witness who came before the court stated that any particular article had tended to prejudice those relations, the court would practically be bound to accept his statement. If therefore the burden is to fall on the expert, on whom it should fall, why should it not be there ab initio? Another possibility before the court would be to attempt to summon some representative of that foreign State in this country. That again would lead to exceedingly unhappy consequences. The representatives of foreign countries are, though not by right yet in practice, as far as possible exempted from attendance in the courts, and if any such representative were summoned, he would no doubt be most reluctant to come and would very likely on arrival in court say that he—according to the technical position at the moment—being a consular representative, had no knowledge of these diplomatic matters. So the court would not get very much further. Then again if it sought for further evidence, it might require documents to be produced, and documents in such a case would almost inevitably be of such a nature as could not be produced in court or subjected to public scrutiny. The point then of this amendment is to relieve the prosecution of the double burden which the Bill as reported by the Select Committee seeks to lay upon it, and here again, although I said just now that we do not want to copy too slavishly the English common law, I do submit that this is a point in which we need not go beyond the provisions of that common law. In England all that has to be done is for the prosecution to prove a libel against the head of a foreign State, and certain other persons—but for the moment I confine myself to a libel against the head of a foreign State. If it has done that, it has discharged all that it is required to do. Here in this country why should it not only be required to do that, which is the burden that has been just laid upon the court by requiring defamation within the meaning of Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code to be proved, but also to go into further fields where the court can have no means of forming an opinion except by expert evidence, which is the same authority that has in the beginning decided whether or not a prosecution should be launched?

The House may reasonably object and say, "If this contention" (in support of which I am now arguing) "is so reasonable and so easy, why did you not urge it before the Select Committee?" To that I reply that we did our best, but the Committee decided against us. I might, Sir, in this connection, quote the famous saying of the Irish jurymen who, when asked why the jury had taken so long over such a simple case, said, "I never met in my life eleven such obstinate men". Sir, I move the amendment that stands in my name.

Mr. President: I have received notice of an amendment to this amendment by Mr. Maswood Ahmad. I see he is not present here.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: There are two clauses, one as it is in the Bill and another as proposed in the form of an amendment. Both are very nearly the same, except in one principle, and that is a very vital principle. We had discussed at great length in the Select Committee whether it should be left to the Court to judge that unfriendly relations have been created or are going to be created by certain articles which appear in the Press, or whether the sole judge should be the Governor General in Council. That was the real difference of principle. It was suggested that although the article may amount to libel on the Prince it should be a libel of this nature as to create unfriendly relations. If that is left to the Court, then necessarily some kind of evidence has to be produced before the Court and the Court cannot make up its mind unless it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the tendency of that article was to promote unfriendly relations, which means in other words that a certain amount of resentment might have been shown by the Prince concerned. When this question came up, the majority thought that if any private person was defamed he could go to the Court and get a conviction merely on account of proving that a particular statement is libellous, but in the case of the Prince who cannot appear himself personally before the Court, the Governor General in Council take upon themselves the responsibility of launching a prosecution, and they could not get a conviction unless they prove more than what a private individual would have to prove—that the statement is libellous and at the same time is a libel of such a nature as to create unfriendly relations between the Indian Government and the Prince concerned. When this point came up, it was really the intention of the majority of the Select Committee that protection to a Prince should not be more than what is enjoyed by an ordinary person in the country, and because he cannot appear himself personally, therefore this responsibility may be left to the Governor General in Council to protect the interests of the person who on account of his position and status, cannot come to an Indian Court. I confess very frankly that this point came up so suddenly that we could not give very serious thought as to what it would amount to, and it was not known at that time that there was this last ingredient. As it happens, one thing that the present section refers to is, "with intent to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations", which means, the Court has to judge whether it is going to create unfriendly relations or not.

Now what my Honourable friend, Sir Evelyn Howell, proposes is that in the opinion of the Governor General in Council if it is so, then that will determine the point. Now he takes the responsibility upon himself to be the sole judge as to whether unfriendly relations are being created or not. The real objection to the proposed section as it stands in the Select Committee's Report, as has been pointed out, is that, although the intention of the Legislature may be to keep up friendly relations, the bare fact that it has to be proved in an open Court that some kind of unfriendly relations are going to be promoted, the very nature of the evidence which will be tendered before the Court, if there were not such bad unfriendly relations already created, will tend to create unnecessarily the unfriendly relations which it has been the intention to avoid. A prosecution may be launched for the purpose that the friendly relations may continue, but when the Foreign Secretary or his subordinate comes before the Court and says that there is a tendency to create unfriendly relations, and with an unlimited number of questions put by the counsel in the cross-examination that might lead to such a result that the Foreign Secretary might be obliged to ask for the protection of the Court in disallowing those questions, but the Court might force him to answer all those questions which might be put by counsel in order to prove the justification of the charge or otherwise. That kind of question which may come before the Court, that by itself may create a tendency to ill-feeling which may be resented by the Prince concerned more than if there had been no prosecution at all. Well that is the tendency which it was thought fit to avoid, and the two Honourable gentlemen who have put in their minutes of dissent have urged that point. But unfortunately we could not see eye to eye with them at that time. But now, Sir, I must frankly admit that, after all, knowing one's own mistake, there is no mistake in having that corrected later on, and I think I must say now that a good deal of ease has now been made out for their view. I agree that if it goes to the Court, it will be more harmful and more injurious than if there had been no prosecution at all. There might be cases of a very delicate nature, and the disclosure of the facts concerning them before an open Court, and with moreover the Press finding a good opportunity in that to magnify these things in their publications, might create still greater hostility between the two countries, and for this purpose and after all, there can be no other evidence except oral evidence and the written representation of the Prince concerned, and the oral evidence of the Foreign Secretary tending to show that that writing has created or tended to create unfriendly relations,—beyond that they can produce no other evidence, because the nature of the documents may be so confidential that they could not be produced before the Court. So I think when the Court has to decide or to rely mostly upon the evidence of the Foreign Secretary, it is much better to leave the matter to the judgment of the Governor General in Council than on mere oral testimony which might lead to the prejudicing of relations which we intend to keep very friendly. So I think this amendment is one to which I must after due thought accord my support, and I support it.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, my Honourable friend, Sir Evelyn Howell, the Foreign Secretary, is establishing his position as a good research worker in this House. He has given one piece of research work in history. He maintained on the floor of this House that if in 1904 Lord Salisbury, the then Foreign Minister, had taken timely action against a certain paper, then the Great War would have been avoided.

Sir Evelyn Howell: I said, Sir, not that it would have been, but that it might have been, avoided.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, I happened to be present in Germany at that time, and I followed the whole thing very clearly, and the causes of the war were quite different from what the Foreign Secretary is assuming them to be. Now he is making another research into Indian jurisprudence. We have always considered that, before any person is punished, all the evidence must be studied and examined openly in a court, with a right of appeal to the High Court. After deliberating a good deal over this question during the last four days, we now find here that in this Bill also he is taking away this power, and it is declared that the mere statement of the Governor General in Council through the agency concerned would practically be considered to be sufficient proof for the prosecution.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: No, no. Libel must be there.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: But what about the proof of the libel?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Libel must be proved.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: It means that the Governor General in Council's word is the final word to indicate that this thing has created unfriendly relations? Tell me which Magistrate will go against it.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: No, no—it must be under the Indian Penal Code, Chapter XXI.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Then the statement of one of the persons appointed by the Governor General is to be considered sufficient for the purposes of law and all the procedure that is now laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code is to be set aside.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: No, no.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: In practice, if not in words.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member please go on.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: According to the recommendations of the Foreign Secretary. Sir, the point now before us was fought out in the Select Committee, and it was carried by the unanimous opinion of non-official Members that this clause should not find a place in the Bill; but the two official Members still press this question, and I am at a loss to understand why my friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, who expressed one opinion on the Committee, has now changed his mind on further consideration. (Mr. S. C. Mitra: "That is not surprising at all.") When I moved this motion for circulation I had in my mind this amendment of the Foreign Secretary and I knew that on account of the fag end of the session and the thinness of the Opposition, any motion of the Government would be accepted by the majority, especially when we had some non-official Members amongst us who considered themselves to be more representative of the Government than representatives of their own constituencies. (Laughter.) Sir, it was pointed out that the opinions which were worth having were carefully considered. There are two kinds of opinions. There is a legal opinion for which we want a legal phraseology in order to find out that the words do not connote more than what we intend them to imply. The second category of opinion is the opinion of the people who are affected by the law. This opinion is also equally important. The Select Committee, to my mind, did not pay sufficient attention to the opinions expressed by various Associations and by the representatives of the people who will be affected by this particular law.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member is again discussing his own amendment. The question of opinions is no longer relevant to the present issue. The present issue is whether the clause, as submitted by the Select Committee, should be amended as proposed by the Honourable Member Sir Evelyn Howell or not. The question of opinions is no longer relevant.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: My argument against the present motion is that the opinions expressed by various Associations are opposed to this particular clause and that is the point which I am bringing in proof of my opposition.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member oppose both the clause and the amendment?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I oppose this particular clause as it stands.

Mr. President: We are discussing clause 2 with the amendment proposed by Sir Evelyn Howell. Is the Honourable Member opposing both?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am opposing both. In the first place, my reason for opposing it is, as I pointed out last time, that in this clause the word "family" is still there. I do not want to repeat the arguments again, but there is no doubt that the word "family" is a very wide word, and in certain countries it may really cover half the people. My second objection is that the word "Minister" is also a very wide word. Any person who may be asked to carry on the work may be called a Minister. The connotation of these two words is very wide and it is very desirable that they should be narrowed down. The other point of my opposition is "adjoining India". As has been pointed out already, India includes Aden as well. And I was rather surprised by the argument of my friend Mr. Yamin Khan when he said that the connotation of India is smaller and the connotation of British India is larger. I thought that if you qualify the word, you always diminish the sphere of that particular thing. India is certainly a much wider term than British India, and unless this particular clause is modified in a manner so as to exclude Aden, I am afraid that it will be interpreted to mean Aden and the adjoining territories.

Sir, I repeat very briefly what I said before, that there is really no occasion for bringing in a clause like this. The Honourable Sir Evelyn Howell himself pointed out in his speech that since the lapse of the Ordinances no case has arisen. And if no case has occurred in the country after the lapse of the Ordinances and if nobody is taking any interest in it, may I ask if it is wise to remind the people and to tell them that a thing of this kind they could do and ought to do? It is not wise really to legislate on a measure which really has got no definite application. No doubt, it is necessary to keep friendly relations with our neighbouring countries, but is it wise if, in order to please the neighbouring countries, we displease our own people? Therefore, with these remarks I oppose this particular clause as it is amended and the original clause as it stands in the Bill.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: Sir, I support this amendment with the full conviction that if the motion is passed, all possible objections that can be urged against the original Bill will be met. The Honourable the last speaker seems to consider that the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code are one and the same thing. The amendment proposed by the Honourable the Mover is an amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code. It therefore does not and cannot create any new offence. Therefore all the ground that could have been for the objection that the proposed Bill created a new offence disappears absolutely. (Interruption by Mr. K. Ahmed.) The Criminal Procedure Code does not and cannot create any offence. My Honourable friend is a Barrister and he ought to know it.

Mr. K. Ahmed: If you had practised yourself, you too would have known it. What is section 110?

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: Sir, the attempts of the legal experts of the Government of India to frame a measure to deal with libellous attacks on foreign potentates have been, to say the least of it, very unfortunate. The matter has been on their minds for the last more than three years, and during all that long period, we have been finding them groping in the vast realms of English, Continental and American jurisprudence. The result of all that groping has been what my friend Sir Hari Singh Gour characterised as "a mouse after the mountain has laboured." Sir, there are plenty of laws in pari materia in the different countries of the world and nothing could have been easier than to have copied, say, for instance, the law of France on the subject, which simply provides that attacks on foreign potentates are defamation punishable with a certain period of imprisonment and with a fine of a certain amount. We have already got the law of defamation in our Statute-book and no person in his senses could then have been able to say that a Bill which was reproducing section 499 of the Indian Penal Code should be circulated for opinion. No person in his senses would then have been able to urge that section 499 of the Indian Penal Code could possibly affect the susceptibilities of my Muslim friends, but unfortunately our own Statute-book was the very last thing which suggested itself to the minds of the legal experts of the Government of India. The discovery was made only a few days ago, on the day when the amendment No. 5 standing in the name of the Honourable Member, Sir Evelyn Howell, was given notice of.

Sir, I do not propose to go into the verbal amendments proposed in the language of clause 2 as regards certain words and phrases. But if this amendment is acceded to by the House, then I say there is absolutely no scope for any of the amendments as regards those words and phrases. As I said, no new offence would be created, only the law of defamation would have been amended on its procedural side. At present on account of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code no one except the aggrieved party can prosecute for defamation. The simplest thing therefore would be to remove that bar from the way of the foreign potentates, who, under the existing law, if they choose to resort to our law courts as complainants, are perfectly entitled to pursue the remedy given to them under our law in the same manner and to the same extent as the meanest subject of His Majesty in India. This amendment simply seeks to avoid that bar, and I fail to understand how any reasonable man could possibly object to it. I therefore support this amendment on these grounds.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 1st April, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Friday, 1st April, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBERS SWORN :

The Honourable Mr. Harry Graham Haig, C.S.I., C.I.E. (Home Member); and

Mr. Satyendra Nath Roy, C.I.E., M.L.A. (Government of India: Nominated Official).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CLASSIFICATION OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

1099, *Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) whether any correspondence has passed between the Government of India and any of the Provincial Governments on the question of classification of ex-M. L. As. convicted for their civil disobedience activities or imprisoned under Ordinances and, if so, whether a decision has been reached that they should be treated as "A" Class prisoners, if not, why not;
- (b) whether the Government of India have instructed Provincial Governments to give "A" class treatment to all ladies imprisoned either under Ordinances or in connection with the civil disobedience movement; if not, why not; and
- (c) whether the issuing of such instructions is under contemplation; if so, when will the instructions take effect?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: (a) There has been no correspondence on the general question between the Government of India and Local Governments. The Government of India ascertained the facts in a particular case from one Local Government.

The classification of convicted persons depends partly on the nature of the offence and partly on the mode of living as determined by social status, education and habit of life. Generally, the classification is the function of the Courts, subject to confirmation and review by the Local Government concerned. This being so, it would be inappropriate for the Government of India to issue general instructions of the nature contemplated by the Honourable Member. I have no doubt, however, that the fact that the person has been a member of the Indian Legislature or of a Legislative Council is taken into consideration with other facts by the Courts and by Local Governments.

(b) and (c). No such instructions have issued or are under contemplation, since they would be contrary to the principles which, as I have explained, govern the classification of convicted persons.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: In view of the special circumstances of the case when several ladies are taking part in the political movement, will Government be pleased to reconsider their attitude in regard to the classification of lady prisoners?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I think, Sir, that the general principles already laid down after careful consideration some years ago by the Government of India in consultation with the Members of this Assembly are sufficient to meet the case.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to consider the desirability of classifying political prisoners as political prisoners instead of mixing them up with ordinary prisoners?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: That, Sir, is an old question which we have been into many times and it has been explained repeatedly that it is not possible to establish a classification for political prisoners.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Are Government aware of the disadvantage both to the political prisoners and to the ordinary prisoners in their getting mixed up together?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: That, I am afraid, is an inevitable accompaniment of the situation.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government take early steps to remove this disadvantage both to the political prisoners and to the lady prisoners, and appoint a committee to go into the question and make recommendations thereon?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: No, Sir. I am afraid Government are not prepared to do that.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that in the previous civil disobedience movement all ex-Members of the Assembly were put in class "A", but this year some of the ex-M. L. A.s have been put in class B, particularly Mr. Dwarka Prasad Misra, an ex-M. L. A. from the Central Provinces?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I think it is the case that normally Members or ex-Members of the Legislative Assembly would under the existing principles be put in class "A."

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to state whether the particular reference which the Honourable gentleman was pleased to make about correspondence having taken place between the Government of India and one Provincial Government relates to ex-M. L. A. Mr. Dwarka Prasad Misra?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I believe that is so.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to state whether Mr. Dwarka Prasad Misra is at present in class "A" or in class "B"?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I understand he is in the "B" class.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to advise the Central Provinces Government to treat him as an "A" class prisoner in view of the fact that he was a Member of the Legislative Assembly?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: The Central Provinces Government considered that, in accordance with the principles laid down, he should not be treated as an "A" class prisoner.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Is the Honourable Member aware that last year he was treated as an "A" class prisoner?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: No, Sir.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to inquire into the matter and ascertain facts from the Central Provinces Government?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: We have already been in correspondence with the Central Provinces Government and I see no object in pursuing the matter further.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Have Government considered the evil effects of segregating different classes of prisoners from each other and dividing them into different classes?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: Is it the Honourable Member's suggestion that all prisoners should be grouped together and treated alike?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I want to know whether there are no evil effects of segregating prisoners from each other.

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: The present policy is one for which this House must bear equal responsibility with Government.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state if these classifications are at present being made by the Government of India or the Provincial Governments or the Magistrates?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I explained in answer to the original question that the classification is made by the Courts, subject to confirmation and review by the Local Governments.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Are the Magistrates instructed by the Government to award any particular classes?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: The function of the Local Government is to confirm and review orders made by the Courts.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: My point is, do the Local Governments give any instructions to them previous to their awarding the classes?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: The general instructions are contained in orders issued by the Government of India and I do not suppose the Local Governments find any necessity to supplement those instructions.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member please place those instructions of the Government of India on the table?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I think they must have been placed on the table long ago. There was a communiqué of about February, 1930.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi: Will Government take action if the Courts deviate from those rules?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I have already explained, Sir, that the Local Governments do exercise a review over the action taken by the Courts.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Do Government realise that if M. L. A.s are given "A" class, the protection which the other prisoners are likely to receive from M. L. A.s will be reduced in this House?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that lady prisoners from Delhi have been placed in mixed jails in the Punjab and that their health is suffering because they are not allowed to move about in those jails?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I cannot follow the question very clearly but it does not seem to me to arise out of the original question we are discussing.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Is the Honourable the Home Member satisfied with the reception he has got this morning on the assumption of his office? (Laughter.)

SUBSTITUTION OF AIR FORCE UNITS FOR GROUND TROOPS ON THE FRONTIER.

1100. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Will Government kindly state when the Howell Report on the possibility of substitution of Air Force units for ground troops on the Frontier was signed; and why has it not yet been published? When do Government propose to publish it; and what action, if any, has been taken on it?

Mr. G. M. Young: The report was signed a year ago. As regards the other points the Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply which I gave on the 30th March to Mr. Moore's starred question No. 1071.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I know what action has been taken on the report of the Howell Committee? That was not answered.

Mr. G. M. Young: The report of the Howell Committee has not been published. It is not therefore possible to give in full the action taken on the report. In my answer to Mr. Moore's question, I did give a certain amount of information relating to the action taken.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it the contention of Government that they are unwilling to give any information as to what action has been taken by Government or is contemplated to be taken on this report?

Mr. G. M. Young: Obviously not; I did place a certain amount of information on this point before the House the day before yesterday.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: What is the nature of the action which they have taken on that report?

Mr. G. M. Young: I would refer my Honourable friend to the reply I gave on that day.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Will the Honourable Member kindly repeat that answer if he has got a copy in front of him?

Mr. G. M. Young: I will let the Honourable Member have a copy. The Honourable Member himself put a number of supplementary questions, so I assumed that he had heard my answer.

NON-INTERFERENCE WITH "BUY INDIAN" PROPAGANDA.

1101. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Are Government aware that the Home Member in the Madras Legislative Council said that he would address a District Magistrate and Police Superintendent and ask them not to interfere with the "Buy Indian" work?

(b) If so, are Government prepared to issue special instructions of a similar kind to all the Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: (a) I have seen a Press report of a statement by the Home Member, Madras, to the effect that instructions have been issued to District officers not to place obstructions in the way of the legitimate activities of the League.

(b) No. The matter falls within the province of the Local Governments, who are fully aware of the position and are competent to take such action as may be desirable.

GRIEVANCES OF RAILWAY STAFF OF THE HOWRAH GOODS SHED.

1102. Mr. Bhuput Sing: With reference to the reply to starred question No. 406, dated the 17th February, 1932 (regarding grievances of Railway staff of the Howrah Goods Shed), will Government be pleased to state what action, if any, has been taken by the Agent, East Indian Railway; if not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 1102, 1103, 1104 and 1105 together. I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway, and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

STAFF OF THE HOWRAH GOODS SHED COMPELLED TO GO ON LEAVE ON HALF PAY.

†1103. Mr. Bhuput Sing: (a) Are Government aware that each man of the Howrah Goods Shed (Outward) was compelled to go on leave for 15 days on half pay by rotation during the year 1931?

(b) If not, do Government propose to enquire as to who is the officer who forced the staff to go on leave on half pay and whether the officer concerned compelled the men to go on leave out of his own initiative or due to orders from the Agent; if not, why not?

†For answer to this question see answer to question No. 1102

RAILWAY PASSES GRANTED TO STAFF OF THE HOWRAH GOODS SHED COMPELLED TO GO ON LEAVE ON HALF PAY.

†1104. Mr. Bhuput Sing: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of second class passes issued to the staff of the Howrah Goods Shed (Outward) who were compelled to go on 15 days' leave on half pay?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the money value of the passes issued and the economy effected by compulsory deduction of half of 15 days' pay of those men who travelled on second class passes during their compulsory leave?

ALLOWANCES OF THE STAFF OF THE HOWRAH GOODS SHED.

†1105. Mr. Bhuput Sing: (a) With reference to the reply given to starred question No. 405, dated the 17th February, 1932, are Government aware that the Sunday allowance enjoyed by the staff of the Howrah Goods Shed (Outward) has been stopped?

(b) Is it a fact that Sunday allowance was sanctioned for those men in lieu of Presidency allowance granted to other staff?

(c) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether the Presidency allowance has also been withdrawn from persons enjoying it? If not, why not?

ALLEGED RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN PUNISHMENTS IN THE HOWRAH GOODS SHED.

1106. Mr. Bhuput Sing: (a) With reference to the reply to starred question No. 407, dated the 17th February, 1932, is it a fact that one Mr. R. Blanchet, a Weigh Clerk in the Howrah Goods Shed (Outward), was fined Rs. 5 for being caught while taking bribes?

(b) Is it a fact that one Mr. S. K. Biswas was immediately dismissed for the same offence in the same office?

(c) If the replies to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, are Government aware that this sort of racial discrimination in the Howrah Goods Shed (Outward) is causing much discontent; if not, do they propose to inquire; if not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway, and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

POSTS WITH SPECIAL PAY IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA HELD BY NONMUSLIMS.

1107. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please state the number of posts in each category, i.e., Superintendents, Assistants, Stenographers and clerks carrying special pay in each Department of the Government of India, and their attached offices, names and nationality of the incumbents holding each of them and the nature of duties for which special pay has been sanctioned?

(b) Is it a fact that almost all the posts carrying special pay are held exclusively by non-Muslims in each Department of the Government of India and attached offices?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1102.

(c) Is it also a fact that non-Muslims are in an absolute majority in each Department of the Government of India?

(d) Will Government kindly give the names of Muslims in each category senior to those non-Muslims drawing special pay and the justification for meting out this differential treatment to Muslims?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: (a) For a statement of the number of posts in each category and the posts carrying special pay in each Department of the Government of India and their Attached Offices, the Honourable Member is referred to the Finance Department Notifications No. D.-7806-Ex.-1/31 of the 16th November, 1931. I am unable to undertake the collection of the other information which the Honourable Member asks for.

(b) I have not complete information on the point, but I will obtain it and furnish it to the Honourable Member.

(c) Yes.

(d) It will be seen from the notifications to which I have referred in reply to part (a) of the question that generally speaking special pay is attached to the following categories of posts:

(a) Personal assistants to Honourable Members and stenographers attached to Secretaries, Joint Secretaries, and officers of corresponding status in some offices.

(b) Assistants and clerks in charge of sections in certain offices.

(c) Cashiers.

No question of differential treatment arises. Selection for such posts is made on the basis of fitness and not on communal considerations. The collection of the information asked for would therefore serve no useful purpose.

ALLEGED DISCONTENT AMONGST MUSLIM EMPLOYEES IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT AND ATTACHED OFFICES.

1108. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: Are Government aware that considerable discontentment prevails among the Muslim members of the Government of India Secretariat and attached offices on account of:

(i) their very meagre representation in the Secretariat and attached offices;

(ii) their utter exclusion from the appointments carrying special pay; and

(iii) the rejection by the Finance Department of the recommendation of Departments or attached offices for the grant of special pay to their deserving Muslim members?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: I am aware that Muslim representation in the offices referred to is regarded as inadequate, but as has been pointed out on many occasions, their representation during the past 5 years has shown a steady increase. I must repudiate the suggestion that any discrimination is made against Muslims in regard to selection for posts carrying special pay.

GRANT OF ADVANCE INCREMENTS OR SPECIAL PAY TO MUSLIMS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA OFFICES.

1109. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Are Government prepared to reconsider the cases of deserving Muslims in each Department and attached

Office of the Government of India who are senior to those non-Muslims holding posts carrying special pay and are otherwise very well reported on and compensate them either by the grant of advance increments or by the grant of special pay?

(b) Is it a fact that precedents of the grant of such compensation to non-Muslims exist in the Government of India?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: (a) Special pay is granted for the reasons set out in Fundamental Rule 9(25). Government cannot accept the suggestion that if a member of the staff is selected to fill a post carrying special pay, those senior to him whether Muslim or non-Muslim should be compensated by the grant of advance increments. Its acceptance would be entirely contrary to the principle which underlies appointment to selection posts throughout the Services.

(b) The reply is in the negative.

AGE OF BABU KHUSHI MOHAMED, LATE CHIEF GOODS CLERK, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY, FORCED TO RETIRE.

1110. *Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that Babu Khushi Mohamed, late Chief Goods Clerk, North-Western Railway, was forced to retire four years before his time for retirement owing to the wrong entry in his service book?

(b) Is it a fact that for the rectification of the age entry in his service book Babu Khushi Mohamed produced proof of birth certificate duly attested by a Magistrate, a school certificate and also a certificate of the Civil Surgeon of the rank of Lieut.-Colonel?

(c) Is it a fact that four similar Hindu clerks' cases were decided favourably, viz., Babu Tara Chand, Clerk, Agent's Office, Lahore, Babu Wazir Chand, Clerk, C. C. M. Office, Lahore, Babu Budh Raj, P. W. I. and Babu Radha Kishin, Station Master? Is it a fact that age entries in these cases were corrected as a result of which the men in question could continue in service? If so, why was the application of Syed Khushi Mohamed rejected?

(d) Is it a fact that various appeals and telegrams sent by Syed Khushi Mohamed failed to bring any satisfactory reply from the Agent and Railway Board? Will Government be pleased to say whether Railway employees of the class of Syed Khushi Mohamed have any right of appeal against the decision of the Agent? If not, what authority can they appeal to?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway, and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE RETRENCHMENT COMMITTEE REGARDING DAIRYING AND ANIMAL HUSBANDRY DEPARTMENTS.

Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Will Government please state what action they contemplate taking on the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee regarding the Dairy Department of the Imperial Agriculture Department?

(b) Are Government aware that there is a strong public feeling against the proposed closing down of the Imperial Dairy Institute at Bangalore? Has this Institute proved very useful for providing training to Indian apprentices and for helping in developing the dairy and cattle industry of the country?

(c) In the event of the Bangalore Institute being closed down, do Government contemplate starting a new one anywhere else?

(d) Will Government please state if this kind of training can be given at the dairy farms in charge of the Military Department and whether the Military dairy farms are open to the public at present?

(e) In what ways are the activities of the Dairy Department to be curtailed?

(f) Are Government aware that the public appreciate the useful work done by this Department and that its discontinuance will cause considerable discontent?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (e). I would refer the Honourable Member to page 57 of the Summary of the Results of Retrenchment Operations in Civil Expenditure and in Military estimates, which was circulated to Honourable Members with the Budget papers. As stated in that summary, Government have decided that the Imperial Institute of Animal Husbandry and Dairying at Bangalore and its allied stations at Karnal and Wellington should be retained, but that their activities should be somewhat restricted until financial conditions improve. All experiments in cross breeding with European cattle at Bangalore will be abandoned and attention will be concentrated on breeding high yielding strains of indigenous cattle only. Similarly, work at Karnal will be confined to cattle and that on buffaloes, sheep and goats will be discontinued. The training of students in dairying at Bangalore and its allied stations will continue to be given on the same lines as at present. The Creamery at Anand has been closed from March 1st.

(b) and (f). Government are aware that the valuable work done by the Imperial Institute of Animal Husbandry and Dairying in promoting the development of the dairying and cattle industry in this country has been widely appreciated. Any apprehensions in regard to its discontinuance should be set at rest by the statement I have just made.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) I presume that what the Honourable Member wishes to know is whether the Military Dairy Farms are open to the public as schools of dairying. The only men trained on these Farms are the apprentices of the Military Farms Department.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

UNSATISFACTORY REPLY OF THE LEADER OF THE HOUSE IN REGARD TO THE EXPEDITING OF THE REFORMS WITH MAHATMA GANDHI IN JAIL.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair has received two notices of motions for adjournment. One is from the Honourable Member, Sirdar Harbans Singh. He proposes to ask for leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the Assembly for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter of definite public importance, namely, the unsatisfactory reply of the Honourable the Leader of the House regarding the expediting of the reforms with Mahatma Gandhi in jail. The second notice is from the Honourable Member, Mr. B. Sitaramaraju. He proposes to ask for leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the House to discuss the unsatisfactory and disquieting reply of the Honourable the Leader of the House to the short notice question yesterday regarding the attitude of Government towards constitutional reforms for this country awaiting decision.

Before I decide as regards the admissibility of these adjournment motions, I should like to ask whether any objection is taken.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, I should like to confine myself at this stage to the first of the two motions which you have read to the House. My submission is that the matter which it is sought to raise on the motion for the adjournment is not a definite matter of urgent public importance within the meaning of the Standing Order. It will be within the recollection of the House that in the short notice question which I answered yesterday, there was no reference to this question of the release of Mahatma Gandhi, though there was a reference to the question of reforms. That question of the release of Mahatma Gandhi arose only on a supplementary question asked by my Honourable friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer. Now, Sir, when the supplementary question was put, I did at one point say that it did not seem to me that it arose either out of the original question or out of any of the answers I had given, but I did not, Sir, as I might have done, ask you to rule the question out of order on the ground that it did not arise, nor did I ask for notice. The reason why I did not adopt either of these courses was that the matter was one on which the policy of the Government is well-known and on which statements had been made in this House recently, and I therefore indicated that the position of Government was unchanged. What is sought in this motion for adjournment to-day is to say that my reply was unsatisfactory because I did not indicate any change in the Government policy in the way of accepting the suggestion underlying the question. Now, my submission on that point is this, that apart from the question which was put, it would not have been open to the Honourable Member to have raised any question of a motion for adjournment of the House on account of the failure of Government to release Mahatma Gandhi or to take action in that direction—for that is the substantive matter that he has raised,—it would not have been open to him admittedly to raise it but for the question implying a suggestion and the answer given to it. Now, Sir, had I given an answer asking for notice or had I asked you to rule that the question did not arise, and you had ruled accordingly, then I think it would have been very difficult to bring forward this motion for the adjournment, and the mere fact that, instead of adopting either course I indicated that the policy of Government had already been stated and remained unchanged, is not sufficient to make it become a definite matter of urgent public importance within the meaning of the Standing Order. There is nothing new, there is no new element in the situation. All that has happened is, that my Honourable friend put a question containing a suggestion and my answer is judged unsatisfactory because that suggestion was not at once acceded to. For these reasons.

Sir, I would submit that the motion does not raise a definite matter of urgent public importance within the meaning of the Standing Order. That, Sir, I think, completes the submission I wish to make to the Chair.

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member, Sirdar Harbans Singh, anything to urge in reply to the objection raised?

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar (East Punjab: Sikh): Yes, Sir. The Honourable the Leader of the House said that there is no new element in the situation which makes the matter a definite matter of urgent public importance. We have all along been told that His Majesty's Government, before deciding on the reforms, would enlist the co-operation of all parties in India and then decide the whole question of reforms. Yesterday's answer of the Honourable the Leader of the House shows that in December last when the repressive policy was already started, the Government had announced that they were going to expedite the reforms with Congress leaders in jail. So, I submit, that we had that answer from the Government yesterday, and this is the first opportunity when we could raise the question on the floor of the House. This is all I have to say.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the House stated that the adjournment motion does not arise because it has nothing to do with the original short notice question put by my friend Mr. Lalechand Navadrai. Sir, the adjournment motion of my friend Sirdar Harbans Singh relates to the unsatisfactory reply of the Honourable the Leader of the House in which he used the expression "expediting of the reforms", which should be taken in the light of the original short notice question. The Benthall circular, and particularly the attitude adopted by Government in the light of that circular, the expediting of the reforms becomes absolutely objectionable because of the imprisonment of Mahatma Gandhi and the determination of the Government to continue that imprisonment. The whole question of reforms and repression, examine in the light of the Benthall circular, introduces a new situation which this House is entitled to consider, and the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable the Leader of the House will, and I hope, Sir, you will also give due consideration to this fact, that we are not concerned with anything more or less than the answer given on the floor of the House by the Honourable the Leader of the House. The answer is unsatisfactory because he proposes to expedite the reforms in the light of the Benthall circular and with Mahatma Gandhi in jail. That introduces a new feature altogether, and I cannot understand how the Honourable the Leader of the House . . .

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think the Honourable Member is unintentionally putting into my mouth words which I did not use. I did not say we wished to expedite the reforms in the light of the Benthall circular.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, it is open to this House to take the entire short notice question and the reply of the Honourable the Leader of the House in the light of the Benthall circular. The expediting of the reforms in the light of the Benthall circular with Mahatma Gandhi in prison assumes a new aspect which this House is perfectly entitled to discuss, and the question has no relation whatever to the short notice question, but the short notice question and the reply have got to be taken together and also the supplementary questions put on the floor of the House, which are the property of the House and which were perfectly in order. The Honourable the Leader of the House did not raise a point of order that they were not in order; all these things have got to be taken together, and taking them together, I think, Sir, a definite matter of urgent public importance arises, namely, the expediting of the reforms as suggested in the Benthall circular with Mahatma Gandhi in prison.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The question which the Chair has to decide is whether the first adjournment motion which arises out of the reply given to a supplementary question is in order or not. The Chair does not propose at this stage to deal with the other motion. As regards the question whether the matter is of urgent public importance or not, the Chair holds that it is a matter of urgent public importance. If 25 Honourable Members regard the answer given to the supplementary question as unsatisfactory, they should be entitled to discuss it. It is for the House itself to decide whether they wish to discuss an adjournment motion on the reply given to one supplementary question or they prefer to discuss the reply given to the whole question. The Honourable the Leader of the House was right in saying that he could have raised the issue when that supplementary question was put. If he had done so the Chair would have decided the point; but he did not raise it; on the contrary he accepted the supplementary question as being in order and replied to it. That point cannot therefore arise on the present occasion. The Chair must therefore hold that the adjournment motion is in order, leaving it to Honourable Members to decide which one they will take up for discussion to-day. As objection has been raised, the Chair requests those Honourable Members who are in favour of leave being granted to rise in their places. As not less than 25 Members have risen I declare that leave is granted and that the motion will be taken up for discussion at 4 P.M. to-day.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): May I suggest that the second adjournment motion should be taken up for discussion? It would be better.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair left it to Honourable Members to decide. If they had not risen on the first adjournment motion, the second would have been put to the House. The fact that more than 25 Members rose in their seats leads the Chair to conclude that Honourable Members prefer to discuss the adjournment motion arising out of the answer given to a single supplementary question.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

PRESSES ASKED TO FURNISH SECURITY.

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Halg (Home Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 54 asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 25th January, 1932.

I place a statement on the table.

The Honourable Member will observe that the information relates to the period up to the 20th January, 1932.

I would remark with reference to part (d) of the question that security is demanded from the keepers and not the proprietors of presses

SUCCESS OF CANDIDATES IN ACCOUNTS SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 784 asked by Bhagat Chandi Mal Gola on the 14th March, 1932

(a) No. The result of the ordinary branch was 11 per cent. of passes.

(b) The markedly lower percentage of passes than usual this year is due to the comparatively large number of failures in two very important subjects, viz., the Public Works Account Code, Fundamental Rules and Civil Service Regulations papers and to the allotment of grace marks on a scale more restricted than in the past.

LEAVE FOR SUBORDINATES OF THE BENGAL AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. P. R. Rau (Financial Commissioner, Railways): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 124 asked by Mr. N. R. Gunjal on the 4th March, 1932.

The Agent, Bengal and North Western Railway, reports that the relieving staff maintained is adequate for requirements, and that the suggestion in (b) is without foundation.

ALLEGATIONS REGARDING POLITICAL PRISONERS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

Sir Evelyn Howell (Foreign Secretary): I lay on the table the answer to the supplementary question asked by Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad in connection with starred question No. 62 asked by him on the 26th January, 1932, regarding "Political Prisoners' Grievances" as published in the Eastern Times of the 13th December, 1931.

From enquiries made it has been found that the following allegations made in the letter in question are substantially incorrect:—

1. Flogging of prisoners.—The allegation is incorrect that any classes of prisoners have been flogged on slight pretext. Flogging has only been resorted to when all other means of restoring discipline have failed and has been inflicted strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Jail Manual which are the same in the North-West Frontier Province as in the Punjab.

2. Use of bar fetters.—Fetters are imposed on prisoners in accordance with rules prescribed for the purpose. No discrimination is made against any class of prisoner.

3. Diet of prisoners and sale of vegetables produced in the jails.—Allegations about the prisoners' diet are incorrect. The standard of diet in the jails is high and quite adequate. The sale of jail vegetables is absolutely prohibited and frequent inspections and surprise visits show that the food is sufficient in quantity and wholesome, and that an abundance of vegetables grown in the jail gardens is kept for the exclusive use of the prisoners.

4. Estimate of food charges per head per prisoner.—The estimate of food charges per head is incorrect. The average dieting cost per head in this province is 0.2.3 per day while in the Punjab Jails it is 0.1.9 per day.

5. Complaints of prisoners against the Chief Medical Officer and their grievances about allotment of grinding labour to them.—It is alleged that by the instructions of the Chief Medical Officer certain prisoners are required to grind 15 or 16 seers for a period of four months. This is untrue. No prisoner is kept in the grinding cell for more than three months at a time provided he does his allotted task as laid down in the Jail Manual. The maximum task that is allowed in the North-West Frontier Provinces is 10 seers per diem.

TAXATION IN DEHRA DUN CANTONMENT.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 361 asked by Sirdar Sohan Singh on the 15th February, 1932.

The total estimated revenue for the whole cantonment for 1931-32 is Rs. 47,430. But, out of this, only Rs. 4,300 are derived from the area occupied by the civil population. A very much larger sum is spent from Cantonment funds on that area. The total expenditure on education during the year amounted to about Rs. 1,900 inclusive of a special grant of Rs. 1,159 to the District Board for the provision of a school room with furniture, for cantonment boys. No separate schools are maintained by the cantonment authority, but two District Board schools, and the Gurkha Boys' School are aided by it.

Mr. President: Further discussion of Sir Evelyn Howell's amendment to Clause 2.†

Mr. O. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I consider that the amendment which has been placed before the House by Sir Evelyn Howell is a decided improvement upon the clause as it emerged from the Select Committee. Fears were expressed by more than one Honourable Member yesterday that a new offence was being created by the present Bill. If however the House would accept the amendment there will be no question of any new offence at all. The offence will be the offence of defamation, an offence known to Indian law ever since Lord Macaulay applied his wisdom in drafting the Indian Penal Code. Under the existing law it is as much an offence to publish a statement defamatory of a foreign Ruler or any of his relations or ministers as it is to defame an ordinary individual within British India, but for practical purposes the difference is this. A foreign Ruler or his minister, or a member of his family, would not cross the frontier and lodge a complaint in British India. Therefore defamation of such a person practically carries with it a charter of immunity from punishment. What the Bill seeks to do, especially the amendment, is to take away that difficulty in the case of a foreign Ruler who may be defamed. Ordinarily in a criminal case a complaint may be filed by any one, but in so far as the offence of defamation is concerned, section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code has laid down that the person aggrieved is the person who alone can lodge a complaint. That being so,

† "That for clause 2 the following be substituted :

'2. Where an offence falling under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code is committed against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or against any member of the family or against any Minister of such Ruler, and, in the opinion of the Governor General in Council, the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State may thereby be prejudiced, the Governor General in Council may make, or authorise any person to make, a complaint in writing of such offence, and, notwithstanding anything contained in section 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, any Court competent in other respects to take cognizance of such offence may take cognizance thereof on such complaint'."

any foreign Ruler, as the law now stands, if he feels aggrieved by any statement published against him, has got to appear before the Court himself and lodge the complaint. Now, Sir, the proposed amendment seeks merely to make an exception to the rule in section 198 in favour of the foreign Ruler. If you turn to section 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, you will see that a new proviso was added to that section in 1923. That proviso enacted an exception in favour of certain classes of persons, such as minors, lunatics, idiots, women, persons suffering from any infirmity or sickness. In the case of such persons, it was provided that the complaint might be filed on their behalf by somebody else with the leave of the Court. What is now sought to be achieved by the present amendment is that, instead of a complaint being filed with the leave of the Court on behalf of a foreign Ruler, a complaint will have to be authorised by the Governor General in Council. I fancy that the object of this Bill might have been attained by a simple amendment of that proviso to section 198. That is all. We are not creating a new offence at all. The offence is the offence of defamation. The amendment that adds further before the Governor General in Council decides to authorise a complaint, he must be satisfied that the publication in question is likely to disturb friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of the State concerned. This question of friendly relations has got to be considered only for the purpose of deciding whether the complaint should be lodged or not. In the Select Committee, the clause as drafted made this element an ingredient of the offence itself. That might lead to some difficulty. As a matter of fact, if you look at the opinions which have been received on this Bill, you will find it has been pointed out by several people that if this question as to whether or not any publication would have the effect of prejudicing friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and a foreign State, is left to be decided in a court of law, it might give rise to various complications and difficulties. Therefore very wisely, this amendment seeks to take away that question from the purview of the courts and to eliminate it from the composition of the offence altogether. The Governor General will merely decide on these grounds whether or not a complaint should be filed. An objection was suggested in some parts of the House yesterday that this might involve the Governor General—acting no doubt at the instance of the Foreign Secretary,—acting in a way not quite impartial; in other words, the Governor General might be showing favouritism in the case of some foreign Rulers, and not in the case of others. I do not believe that that will be so. But assuming that that is so, what is the position? Supposing that the Governor General does not authorise a complaint where a complaint ought to have been filed, my Honourable friends who are criticising the Bill cannot object if no action is taken because their contention is that no action should be taken against anybody. On the other hand, if a complaint is filed, it only means that the matter is brought before the Court, and when it is brought before the Court, the only question which the Court will be called upon to determine is whether or not the publication in question constitutes defamation. That is about all, and not the other question as to whether or not any foreign relations are going to be endangered. So, I submit that the clause as amended in the way suggested will meet all reasonable objections that can be taken. Why should it be an offence to defame a person in British India, but not to defame a person outside British India? Why should you put any obstacles in the way of a person who may be outside British India, merely because he is outside British India, and is not likely to come over to British India for the purpose of seeking his remedy? So, I maintain, Sir, all the apprehensions to which expression was given in the House are utterly groundless.

Then, Sir, if you look at another clause of this Bill—clause 4—you will see there is an important safeguard. Clause 4 contemplates cases where an order of forfeiture may be made. If in any such case an order is made for forfeiture of the document in question, then any party aggrieved by that order has the right to go up to the High Court. That right is secured to him by virtue of the provisions of sections 99A to 99G of the Code of Criminal Procedure being extended to these cases. Therefore, the position is this. If it is purely a prosecution for defamation and nothing more than that, the Court will decide that question as in ordinary cases. If, over and above that, there is an order of forfeiture, the High Court will have the right to go into that question, and if necessary, to set aside that order. Where, then, is the difficulty, where is the danger, I do not see. No grave question of international law are really involved, unless you say that whether or not the Governor General should authorise a complaint to be lodged on behalf of a foreign State is a question of international law. After all, such as it is, it is not so very serious or so very dangerous that we need shy at that.

Some questions were raised as to the scope of this clause—that not merely a foreign Ruler, but members of his family or his ministers have also been included. I do not see what objection there can be to the inclusion of these persons. After all, every person is entitled to be protected against any attacks upon his reputation, and therefore, when we are including these persons, it only means that we do so because they are persons who are not likely of their own accord to take action by coming over to British India. There need not be any fear that the word “family” will be construed in such a sense as to include anybody and everybody. Even if it does, there need be no objection, I submit. As my lawyer friends know, the word “family” has been interpreted in various judicial decisions. It has come to be regarded as a term of art, and therefore there need not be any doubt whatsoever as to the precise implications of that word.

So, on these grounds I think the House will be well advised in accepting this amendment in preference to the form in which the clause has emerged from the Select Committee.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I must congratulate my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary on having found support not only in what is called the United India Party but also in a section of the Nationalist Party.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): He has resigned from the Party.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I did not know that. Is that a fact? Any way, Sir, my Honourable friend has found support from Mr. Biswas, who I thought was a member of the Nationalist Party. It is difficult for me, although I have also practised as a lawyer for a very long time, to understand the necessity for this amendment at all. The main object of the amendment is that the Governor General should have the power to authorise any person to make a complaint under section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The reason given in justification of this proposal is that the foreign Ruler or his representative in India, say his Consul, would not or might not care to go to Court and make a complaint that he has been defamed by certain persons who are citizens of British India. I can understand the case of the foreign Ruler, but I do not know why any one representing him in India could not come before a British Indian Court and make a complaint that he has been defamed or his Ruler has been defamed. I see no reason whatever. We have for the purpose of this Act opened the Courts of British India to such a complaint, and if as a matter of fact any foreign Ruler or his representative feels any grievance with respect to any writing in the Press or any utterance in public on the part of any British Indian citizen, why should there be any difficulty on his part to make a complaint? Once a complaint is made, by whomsoever it may be, the whole question is opened up whether the writing or utterance is likely to prejudice foreign relations or not. Then, where is the difficulty on the part of the representative of any Ruler or a member of his family to make a complaint here? If I followed the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill correctly, I think he said that a Consul may not know what the exact position is. If the Consul does not know, surely, it is too much on the part of the Foreign Secretary to expect us to accept the position that the Government of India are more solicitous for protecting the reputation of the foreign Ruler or his representative than the foreign Ruler or his representative himself. This is a proposition for which I do not see any warrant whatever. Any person on behalf of the foreign Ruler—his Consul or any other representative—might go to Court and say, "Here is a statement which is defamatory which I complain of", and prove that his character or reputation is injured. In that case the Court would proceed according to law. It is a very queer thing that while A's character is supposed to be injured, and he is supposed to be defamed, he should not come into Court, but somebody else, the representative of another Government should come into Court and say that he has been defamed, that his character has been injured and that his reputation has been brought low! Sir, I find no warrant for it whatever. It may be claimed that the Government of India prosecuting a person for defamation of this sort would put the whole matter in a securer position so far as the Courts are concerned. But surely the Secretary or whoever may appear on behalf of the Governor General in Council cannot be in the same position as the person who has been defamed or his representative to enlighten the Court on the question whether as a matter of fact the article in the Press in question or a particular speech has a tendency to lower the person who complains about it in the estimation of the public. Surely it is that person and that person alone who can best speak on the point. I submit therefore that there is no warrant for the proposition which is embodied in this amendment.

Sir I do not find my friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, in his seat. He admitted yesterday that he had committed an error in not agreeing with the proposition of the Government in this respect—the proposition that is now embodied in this amendment. Sir, we on this side of the House wish that Mr. Yamin Khan and his United India Party committed a few more mistakes like that. It was a very grave mistake indeed (Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: "It is a disunited party now.") on the part of Mr. Yamin Khan and his party to commit. I realize that. He further complained that I did not choose to go to the Select Committee, but if my friend had been here in his seat, I would have assured him that my presence on the Select Committee would perhaps have helped him to commit more mistakes and not fewer mistakes of this character. (Laughter.) Sir, the whole amendment, as it is, contains several propositions and I find that there are a number of other amendments in which objection is taken to a certain phraseology in clause 2 of the Bill. For instance, any member of the family of a Ruler alleging that he is defamed would be protected by this Bill. Now, Sir, suppose a man like Bachhai Sakao happened to be a member of the family of the Ruler for the time being and his conduct is criticised and very severely criticized by the Indian Press

Sir Evelyn Howell (Foreign Secretary): May I interrupt the Honourable Member for a moment? Bachhai Sakao was never the Ruler of a foreign State within the meaning of this Bill.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I never said he was. I said supposing he was a member of the family of the Ruler and supposing his conduct, about which we all know, was criticized and very severely criticized and his character was attacked, then the Governor General in Council would be entitled under the provisions of this Bill to lodge a complaint of defamation. I am putting forward a supposition: it may be some other person. It may be Abdur Rahman or it may be some Singh or other. It makes no difference. But supposing a member of the family makes a complaint that he is defamed by being criticized in that way, then the Governor General in Council would be entitled under this Bill to lodge a complaint, though the criticism may be to the effect that he is acting against the best interests of the State concerned, and though the Ruler of that State may be an extremely enlightened and civilized ruler. Then, supposing such a publication is defamatory—that is, the allegations made against a member of the family of a Ruler like that—then in that case surely this Bill would entitle the Governor General in Council, or the Political Department, to make a complaint.

Sir Evelyn Howell: No.

Sir Abdur Rahim: My friend, the Foreign Secretary, shakes his head, but I should like to hear the Law Member on that point, if I am not correct. I should like the Honourable the Law Member to say that such criticism or such reflection on such a member of the family of a Ruler against whom there is nothing to be said would not come within the scope of this Bill. It most undoubtedly will, as any lawyer would tell the Foreign Secretary. Is that a position which can be supported for one moment? It would be a most serious position from any point of view. Of course we do not know the facts as regards the operations of the diplomatic or the Foreign Department. They have their own policy. That is another matter. But from the public point of view, it would be disastrous if the Press is going to be stopped from making criticisms of that character; and I say that there must be some object in including the members of the family of a Ruler. If the Honourable the Foreign Secretary agrees to delete that clause, as I understand

Sir Evelyn Howell: We are prepared to accept an amendment about it—the amendment of Mr. Maswood Ahmad which runs as follows:

“That in clause 2 of the Bill as proposed to be amended by Sir Evelyn Howell for the words ‘any member of the family or against any’ the words ‘the consort or son or the principal’ be substituted.”

Sir Abdur Rahim: Are the Government going to accept that amendment?

Sir Evelyn Howell: Yes.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Then, Sir, the amendment wishes to place on the statute the very words of the original clause, namely, that the offence would result in prejudicing the maintenance of friendly relations. If this amendment were passed, I take it that these words would remain, although there are amendments to delete it or to modify the language. That is another difficulty in the way of the acceptance of this amendment by this House. “Prejudicing the maintenance of friendly relations” is undoubtedly very loose language, and I am sure that the Court will find very great difficulty in obtaining definite evidence on a point of that character.

12 Noon. Now, Sir, these are some of the points against the acceptance of this amendment, but I understand that what the Government wish to secure by this amendment is that the complaint may be made by the Governor General in Council, and that is to suffice the requirements of the law. Sir, I do not think any case has been made out for this amendment. There is no reason whatever why the complaint should not be made in the ordinary way laid down in the law. Mr. Biswas cited the new proviso to section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code by which lunatics, idiots and minors are authorised to make complaints through other persons. I do not know whether Sir Evelyn Howell is very happy over this argument of Mr. Biswas, but I am sure he does not think, seriously speaking, that there is any analogy between the two cases. Apart from that, there is a very serious objection from the point of view of the administration of justice. It is very difficult to understand why we should allow a third person in a case of defamation to come forward and say, “So and so has been defamed, his character has been injured and he has been brought down in the estimation of the public”. I can quite understand the Political Department giving evidence as regards the question whether friendly relations between India and any Foreign State are likely to be prejudiced or not. They have knowledge of these matters and undoubtedly they are in a position to give evidence on such a point. But whether a particular individual has been defamed or not, surely it is for that individual to complain, and I do not see any reason why any Department of Government should butt in when the person concerned or his representative does not complain. I submit, therefore, that this is a bad amendment and ought not to be accepted.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I have very little to say after the able exposition of the subject by my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim. But I should like to add just one or two words. In the Bill, as it was originally introduced, the mere publication of a statement which was likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of a foreign State was deemed to be an offence; but the Select Committee improved upon it and made two elements as vitally necessary in constituting the offence under clause 2. The two elements were, firstly, the offence of defamation, which must be proved by the prosecution to the satisfaction of the Court. The second element was that this defamation must be with intent to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of the foreign State, or whereby the maintenance of such relations is likely to be prejudiced. These were the two elements which were incorporated in clause 2 by the Select Committee. Now, the question is—which is the authority to judge on these two points? The question whether a particular offence falls under defamation or not, clearly the Court has to decide. There was a difference of opinion in the Select Committee with regard to the latter point. The majority of the Select Committee held that the second element, which is to constitute the offence, namely, the intention to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations, is also a question which should be decided by the Court. But my Honourable friend, Sir Evelyn Howell and my Honourable friend, Sir Lancelot Graham, on behalf of Government, objected to the latter ingredient in the offence being subjected to the decision of the Court. They therefore suggested that it should be the Governor General in Council who should decide whether the offence of defamation was likely to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations, and so in the amendment which my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary has moved, it is stated that this offence must be in the opinion of the Governor General prejudicial to the maintenance of friendly relations. That is all. I would submit that the best judge on the latter point should be the Court. We have got enough experience of the Executive Government not to leave such authority in their hands in regard to a decision on such points. The other day with regard to the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill, we saw that the executive authority were very reluctant to place their cards on the table. They very often go on one-sided evidence, and in a case like that the Select Committee came to the conclusion that the best thing to do under the circumstances was to leave the decision of the second element, that is, the intention to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations, to the Court to decide. My Honourable friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, who was also a Member of the Select Committee, was also of that opinion, but the revised edition of his opinion now is before the House; and he says he made a mistake in the Select Committee.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): I frankly admit it.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): To err is human.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I would therefore submit that no case has been made out for the substitution of the amendment which is now proposed to be made by my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary, and I beg to offer my opposition to that amendment.

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): Sir, in the first place, I should like to tender my thanks to my friend, Mr. Yamin Khan. Not only did he see the error of his ways but he has publicly confessed the error of his ways, which seems to me to be a very noble action. But, in the first instance, I should like to fix the blame on myself and Sir Evelyn Howell because we did not press our case with sufficient clearness and force in the Select Committee.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: You did so.

Sir Lancelot Graham: I am very much obliged to my friend, but I think it is possible that this idea was put forward rather suddenly and they did not see the full implication of it and the difficulties of the actual clause which they adopted at the time sitting in that Committee. Therefore, I would personally express my gratitude and my admiration to my Honourable friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, for the conduct in this respect. I am also very much obliged for the valuable support of Mr. Biswas. My Honourable friend, Mr. Anklesaria, in giving us his support, at the same time did not refrain from giving what I might call a backhander. He said, we have blundered, groped and gavelled, and by a supreme element of fortune had arrived at the right conclusion. But I am not disposed to argue with him or quarrel with him as to how we have arrived at the right conclusion, and I am not prepared to say that our first Bill was altogether bad. But what I would say is this, we have found that we are more likely to get this Bill through and possibly, I might say now—I am sorry Mr. Mudaliar is not present—that we have exercised a little of that sympathetic imagination which we were instructed to exercise the other day. At any rate we thought we could get that amendment through and we are now pressing that.

I now come to my Honourable and learned friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, and I must confess that I find him a very baffling friend. Yesterday he attacked us very severely because we were making an addition to the penal law of the country. I felt inclined to interrupt him, but I did not like interrupting, and ask him then to look into our amendment for a solution because our amendment just takes out that new provision and if we carry our amendment, the Bill will make no addition to the penal law of the country. The prosecution

Sir Abdur Rahim: Then why this Bill at all?

Sir Lancelot Graham: I do not think I am going to miss that point. If we carry the amendment to clause 2, which particularly lies under the Penal Code, the difference would be that a person aggrieved will not be obliged to come in person for making his complaint. But the prosecution will be under the Penal Code and will be a plain prosecution for defamation, and it will rely upon us to make out a case under sections 499 and 500. As I said, that to my mind ought really to cause the Honourable Member to agree with me and in his heart of hearts I think he does so; otherwise we should not have had this very rambling and confused speech from him to-day. As far as I can make out, he asked why the law should be changed at all. Because if the Sovereign of a neighbouring State is aggrieved by some reflection on his character or conduct contained in the Press of India, he has only got to send his representative to file a complaint. Is that actually what the Honourable Member said? If so, I do certainly differ from him because the provisions of section 198 definitely lay it down that a complaint must be made by the person aggrieved. Does my Honourable friend suggest that a Court would accept as the person aggrieved the Minister or some friend of the Ruler? I maintain that that would be a complete negation of the provisions of section 198, and if there was any doubt on the matter, I think it would be cleared up by the proviso which says:

"Provided that, where the person so aggrieved is a woman who, according to customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, or where such person is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or lunatic, or from sickness or infirmity unable to make a complaint," etc.

Where a person of one of those classes is the person aggrieved, then and then only "some other person may, with the leave of the Court, make a complaint on his or her behalf". I cannot agree for a moment, and I do not think the Honourable Member would himself agree on reading that section again, that a Sovereign from abroad could send a Minister and say the Minister could act as the person aggrieved. But that is what we are going to do by our Bill.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Send a representative.

Sir Lancelot Graham: No. Under the law a complaint must be made by the person aggrieved and that must be the person whose character is taken away. It is no good my friend saying, for instance, that there is a representative of Afghanistan, or a representative of Nepal here who is entitled to make a complaint on behalf of the Ruler. That being so, I think my Honourable friend must really admit that he entirely agrees with this amendment. The only thing he might say would be, "Well, I think the Court ought to be left to be satisfied as to whether this particular libel affects or is likely to affect the friendly relations and that is the attitude which my Honourable and practical friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, took up. He said, that is the one point which really should be the test of this very difficult issue as to whether the particular article was likely to have the particular effect on foreign relations. I have no doubt that he said so even after reading our minute of dissent. But I maintain that that is a very difficult issue to be entrusted to a Court, and, indeed not the proper question to be entrusted to a Court. When the Government have taken upon themselves the burden of proving their case under libel, there is no need whatever to impose upon them the additional burden of trying to satisfy the Court on this question of the effect on foreign relations. Everybody must admit that my Honourable friend, Sir Evelyn Howell, or whoever sits in his place, is the person who is really more capable than any Court of adopting the correct position on that issue and knowing whether friendly relations are likely to be prejudiced. Not only that, but there is the fundamental difficulty of evidence being produced in the Court likely to have that effect upon the decision of the Court. The very production of evidence and arguing of the case is, as we stated in our minute of dissent, more likely to add fuel to the fire and further to prejudice friendly relations than if you leave it to the certificate of Government.

Sir Abdur Rahim: May I ask whether it is intended by this amendment to preclude evidence on the subject of friendly relations? Is that the object?

Sir Lancelot Graham: I am surprised that the Honourable Member should ask that question. I do not think there can be any possibility of doubt after reading the amendment.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Surely that is the object.

Sir Lancelot Graham: I submit it is not. But I do not know the opinion of my Honourable friend. What happens is this. In effect the Governor General in Council comes to Court and he says, "I am satisfied that the particular article is going to have a particular effect and I believe that article to be libellous. I lay a complaint of libel before the Court".

Sir Abdur Rahim: It is for the Court to decide upon that complaint.

Sir Lancelot Graham: The Court is to decide whether the particular person in respect of whom a complaint is made has been libelled.

Sir Abdur Rahim: And whether friendly relations are likely to be prejudiced.

Sir Lancelot Graham: No. I do not think my Honourable friend could have listened to the very clear speech made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh. It was made plain not only in our minute of dissent, but we have sought to make it plain in the amendment which we put in, and I hoped I had succeeded in making it plain. The real point in issue is as to why should Government be allowed to come in as complainant? The answer is because the foreign relations of Government are liable to be prejudiced. My Honourable friend said, let His Majesty, so and so, come or send his representative. We know that difficulties would arise in such cases, and as a matter of fact as practical men we cannot sit by and allow statements to appear in the papers when not only the character of His Majesty so and so is being affected, but our own political safety and our relations are being very gravely affected, and that is why we claim to intervene and it is because we know where the shoe pinches, and we know the danger to ourselves that we are claiming the right to put a certificate into Court and to take the place of the monarch who has been defamed and to discharge before the Court the burden of proving that that particular monarch has been defamed. On these grounds, Sir, I support the amendment.

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah (Central Provinces: Muhammadan): I rise to oppose the amendment which has been moved by the Honourable the Foreign Secretary, and after what I have heard just now from my Honourable friend, Sir Lancelot Graham, I particularly oppose it. The object of the amendment is to dispense with the necessity of proving that the accused, by publishing a certain article held to be defamatory, intended to prejudice the existence of friendly relations between the British Government and the foreign State concerned. When a prosecution is instituted by the Government of India, it will carry with it the presumption that the accused had such an intention.

It will often be difficult to decide beforehand how far criticism of a particular measure will be treated as fair and reasonable, and at what stage the author of such an article will be considered to have overstepped the proper limits making the article defamatory and punishable under clause 2. The amendment if embodied in the Act will place a great handicap on the accused inasmuch as the presumption of the guilty intention on his part will always weigh heavily against him and he will be unable to rebut it to the satisfaction of the Court, and prove that, in fact, he had no such intention. Just now my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham has said that all evidence on that point would be shut out. That will be very unjust, and I do not think it will be a fair trial at all if the Government of India are to be the sole judge as to whether there has been anything which is likely to prejudice the existence of friendly relations. In the circumstances it is very desirable that the point should be examined also by the Court for otherwise there will be nothing in the case except that there was an article, that it was defamatory and that it was published by a certain person. In order to decide whether a man has been really guilty or not, it is always necessary to ascertain exactly what his intention was when he committed the act. Any presumption of guilty intention on his part will be practically to prejudge the case against him, and it will place him in an exceedingly unfavourable position from the very commencement of the trial.

The offence constituted by clause 2 of the Bill is new in our legal system. Such offences have been and will be few and far between. It would therefore be undesirable to frame the law in such a manner as to give an impression that the object of the Government is not so much to punish the offenders as to stifle the public voice. Indians, whether Hindus or Muslims, have connections with their brethren in the adjacent countries, and they feel for their co-religionists or for their countrymen if they are subjected to harsh, unjust or discriminatory treatment in foreign States. It is for this reason that the Bill has been considered by a large section of the people as a piece of unwelcome legislation, and it is very necessary that the Government should proceed with great caution if they really have any regard for the feelings of the people of this country. The Honourable the Foreign Secretary has given an assurance in his speech that religious controversies will not come under the purview of this Bill. That is all right. But I would like to point out that there is no clause in the Bill itself to this effect. Religious and political questions often overlap each other and they become intermixed when controversies arise. Much depends on the point of view from which a particular question is looked at. A man with a genuine grievance may go to the Press to enlist public sympathy and support and he may even make a public disclosure of the conduct or policy of the foreign Ruler in regard to a matter of public interest and importance. The author of the article may do all this with howsoever an innocent intention, yet motives of mischief will be attributed to him if at his trial there is the legal presumption against him. He will be greatly handicapped.

Sir Lancelot Graham: There is no legal presumption under the section.

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: It was just now said by my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham that the point whether the accused intended in fact to prejudice the existence of friendly relations or not between the British Government and the foreign State will not be a question for the Court to decide. There will be the presumption against him.

Sir Lancelot Graham: No, there is no presumption against him, because he is not being tried for that. He is being tried only for libel, and libel as laid down in the Penal Code.

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: As I pointed out in my speech at Simla in September last, if the Ruler of a foreign State proclaims himself as the Caliph of the Muslims, an Indian Muslim may subject this action of the Ruler to severe criticism. He may even point out defects in his character which in his opinion unfit him for that high and exalted office. It will not be denied that the author of the article had not the remotest intention of prejudicing the friendly relations between the British Government and that Ruler. In my opinion, in such a case proof of mischievous intention on his part is absolutely necessary before he can be held guilty of an offence which he never dreamt of.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Does it not come within the purview of religious criticism if a man proclaims himself as Khalifa?

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: It is not excluded anywhere in the Bill. There is no clause showing what cases will be exempted and form exceptions. To presume that he intended mischief involving international trouble will be to confuse all the boundaries of crime. Surely you must draw a line where mischief began; and to presume, that because he published an article, he intended mischief of an international character is, I think, going too far, and indeed such a presumption is not justified. There are several shrines at Meshed which are held in great reverence, and visited by thousands of people from this country. Suppose they are touched under a wave of reform, or their wakfs are confiscated, or improper exactions are levied from the pilgrims. Do the Government of India expect that the Indian Muslim shall remain quiet and not agitate about it? And if they do agitate, because there is no clause in the Bill to the effect that anything will form an exception, it will be said that his intention was simply to bring the relations of the Government of India with the foreign State to a breaking point. That is at least what I understand from the wording of the Bill. It has been drafted with great care but it does not satisfy me. I have done judicial work for many years and, for that reason, I read it with great care. I found certain things wanting. No term has been defined in the Bill. The Bill is an extraordinary piece of legislation, and consequently people are very suspicious about its effects. For this reason it was vehemently opposed at Simla. Clause 2 is the only operative clause in it, and it was slightly modified by the Select Committee. The proposed amendment will take away the only relieving feature of the Bill; and if passed, the legislation will be held to be very arbitrary and perhaps even one-sided, because, whenever a prosecution is instituted, it will be sure that there will be a conviction. When there is an article and it is held to be defamatory and it has been published the case will be sent to Court only to fix the identity of the author. Other matters such as a guilty and mischievous intention on the part of the man need not be proved because they are already presumed against him from the very beginning.

Sir Lancelot Graham: It is not so.

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: It is a piece of unusual legislation and it is necessary that the burden of proof on the prosecution which is the only safeguard should not be removed from the Bill especially when people are very suspicious about it. I would therefore recommend that it should be worded in such a manner as to inspire confidence in the minds of the public, and used only with the greatest caution.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I find there is some misapprehension with regard to the scope of the Bill. What does Sir Evelyn Howell's amendment mean? For the sake of brevity I will use the expression "foreign Ruler" to include all the categories in the amendment. All that the amendment means is this: as soon as a defamatory article or a defamatory speech is published or made against a foreign Ruler, instead of compelling that foreign Ruler to come and lodge an information, the Governor General in Council may lodge the information: with this proviso, that the Governor General in Council should be of the opinion that such defamation is likely to prejudice friendly relations. That is all that the amendment means. Therefore it will be a simple case of defamation, and the three elements of defamation will have to be proved in Court. The three elements as Honourable Members are aware, are first, imputation, second, publication of the imputation, and third, wrongful intention or wrongful knowledge. These elements will have to be proved in order that you can get a conviction for defamation. You must prove that something defamatory has been imputed. You must prove that that has been published and you must also prove that that was done with wrongful intention or wrongful knowledge

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: Will all those exceptions apply here also? If the writer says that the matter is true and that it was done in the public interest, would such a defence be admissible?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: All the exceptions come in: for instance an imputation may affect the character of a person. If it be true or if it be bona fide criticism or in the public interest that the criticism was made, all these defences will be available to the accused. In order to be defamation it must be defamation within the meaning of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, taking all the exceptions of section 499. All that the amendment says is this: do not compel a foreign Ruler to come and lodge a complaint in British Indian Courts. That is all; and as a safeguard there is a proviso that the Governor General in Council will not lodge a prosecution unless he is of opinion that such defamation is likely to prejudice the relations between the two countries.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Who is to be the judge?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The Governor General in Council. And that is the law in England also. That is what I want to point out. It is implicit in the defamation of a foreign Ruler that friendly relations will be disturbed. I wish to read one passage from Lord George Gordon's case, who defamed the Queen of France and the French Ambassador. The learned Judge, addressing the accused said:

"It was highly necessary that the governing powers of this country (that is, England) should take upon themselves the prosecution of so daring an offender. Other nations (who do not know how much the greatest of all blessings, Liberty, and particularly, the Liberty of the Press may be perverted in the hands of wicked men), could hardly be induced to believe that such daring and atrocious publications as yours could ever go forth into the world without the connivance of that State at least in which they are published."

Therefore it comes to this: that whenever there is defamation of a foreign Ruler, the implication is that the State in which that publication is made is conniving at that defamation. That is the implication and it is upon this principle that the law has been stated in Russell in these terms: (I desire Honourable Members' attention to the wording.)

"Upon the ground that malicious and scurrilous reflections upon foreign sovereigns or their representatives may tend to involve this country in disputes, animosities and warfare, it has been held that publications tending to degrade and defame such persons are indictable."

The whole point of the indictment is that the publication has a tendency to disturb peaceful relations. Disturbance of peaceful relations is not an ingredient in the offence. The offence is the offence of defamation as defined in section 499 of the Indian Penal Code. All that Sir Evelyn Howell's amendment is seeking to do is this: that instead of compelling a foreign Ruler to come and lodge his complaint, you authorise the Governor General in Council to lodge the complaint, provided the Governor General in Council is satisfied that that particular defamation has a tendency to disturb peaceful relations. That is all: nothing else. Therefore, the alarm which has been expressed in this House over this innocuous Bill is difficult for me to understand. There is nothing alarming in it; nothing dangerous in it. If, as my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin, asked yesterday, some foreign Ruler on account of his policy towards religious institutions, be criticised in this country, then will the person making that criticism be liable under this Act? It all depends on whether it amounts to defamation or not. If it be bona fide criticism in the interests of the Muslim community as a whole, then certainly that writer or speaker will come under the protection of the Exceptions to section 499: it will not be defamation. But if it is defamation, then the Governor General in Council has still to consider its probable effect. It is not every petty defamation on which the Governor General in Council will take action: but if it be defamation of such a character that it is likely to disturb friendly relations, it is only in such cases the Governor General in Council will authorise prosecution. That is all the amendment says. Why there should be this alarm I cannot make out. We are bringing the law into line with the English law. In the English law all that you need say is that there is defamation of a foreign Ruler, and it is implicit in such defamation, that friendly relations would be disturbed. As I have said it is not every defamation by an obscure publicist which will come under the mischief of this section because in every case the Governor General in Council will

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi (Burma: Non-European): In England who decides this point?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: It is the Executive Government; and if my friend Mr. Munshi were to look up the form of indictment, he will find that there is only one averment in the indictment, that the publication is defamatory of the foreign Ruler; that is all. Who decides that? Whether it is defamatory or not will of course be decided by the Court; but whether to launch the prosecution or not is in the discretion of the Executive Government. In England it is in the discretion of the Executive Government when the Attorney General should lodge the information, and it will be in the discretion of the Executive Government here when to launch a prosecution. Once the prosecution is launched, you will have to prove your case up to the hilt. You will have to prove wrongful intention and knowledge; you will have to prove imputation and you will have to prove publication Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: What can the defence be in such a case?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The defence in such a case may well be it is bona fide criticism; it may well be that it is true; justification may be a defence; the defence may well be that the criticism was made in the interests of the community. There may be hundred defences. All the defences which are now available to a person prosecuted for defamation will be available to the person who will be prosecuted under this Act. Therefore, I submit that we are doing nothing new and nothing dreadful; and the House need not be alarmed at this simple Sir Abdur Rahim: Supposing the publication was made not with intention to prejudice foreign relations, but in good faith.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If there be good faith it may not be defamation: Exception 3 of section 499, or Exception 9 will protect the writer

Sir Abdur Rahim: That comes in as an element of the offence.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: This is an element in the offence of defamation. As I said, there are three elements in the offence: there must be first of all imputation; there must be publication; there must be wrongful intention or wrongful knowledge that by such imputation the reputation of the person defamed will suffer.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Then this should be left to the Court to decide.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Of course, it will be left to the Court to decide. What does Sir Evelyn Howell's amendment say? It says:

"2. Where an offence falling under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code is committed against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India. . . .",

Now, when is an offender liable? When you have proved against that person that he has published a defamatory imputation against a foreign Ruler with guilty knowledge or guilty intention that by such imputation his reputation will suffer

Sir Abdur Rahim: Then both the elements come in?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Not both the elements, but all the three elements come in; the element of imputation, the element of publication and the element of wrongful intention or knowledge on the part of the person defaming. All these three elements must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court.

You may say, if you authorise the Governor General in Council, who is not primarily the aggrieved person, to launch a prosecution, then a prosecution may be light-heartedly undertaken against any newspaper against whom the Government may have a grudge. I can well understand that, and therefore the safeguard has been provided that no prosecution will be launched against any person publishing a defamatory statement against a foreign Ruler unless the Governor General in Council is satisfied that by that publication the friendly relation between India and the Foreign State is prejudiced.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Then the whole case is open, I take it, in the Court?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: This opinion of the Governor General in Council only removes a bar. As soon as the Governor General in Council comes to the conclusion that a certain publication is prejudicial to friendly relations between India and a foreign State, then the bar which is there, that is to say, the bar to a person not aggrieved going to Court will be removed, and a prosecution will be launched by the Governor General in Council. Once the prosecution is launched, they will have to prove every element which constitutes the offence of the defamation Sir Abdur Rahim: Including the statement whether it is likely to be prejudicial or not.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: That is not an element in the offence of defamation. That is the whole difference. Sir, I do not understand why my friend Sir Abdur Rahim does not see this point. In the offence of defamation that is not Sir Abdur Rahim: That only makes our position stronger.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Stronger or weaker, I am explaining the position. The opinion of the Governor General in Council merely removes the bar to a person not aggrieved going to a Court, and that is a safeguard. And then, once the bar is removed, it is a plain sailing case of defamation; if there is a good defence like bona fide criticism, justification, public interest

Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: Will it be open to the defence to say that he did not intend to prejudice the relations between India and the foreign Ruler?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: That is not in issue at all. The only issues in the case will be these—is this statement defamatory to X—the Ruler of a foreign State? That is issue No. 1; issue No. 2 did the accused person publish that defamatory statement; and issue No. 3 will be, did the accused person publish that statement with intention to lower X in the estimation of the public or did he have knowledge that such statement was likely to lower X in the estimation of the public? These will be the three issues, and as regards the mutual relations, that is quite outside the scope of the Court.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Mr. President, as I have understood the Honourable the Law Member, the Government of India only wish to make it easier by this Bill for a foreign Ruler to have a remedy for defamation, and instead of making it obligatory on a foreign Ruler to file a complaint in the ordinary course, the Government of India would act as the agency for a foreign Ruler to file complaints for defamation. Well, if that is so, may I inquire of the Honourable the Law Member, so far as he is concerned, whether he has any objection to the amendment of clause 2 by the deletion of the words "and in the opinion of the Governor General in Council the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State may thereby be prejudiced"?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Not in the least. That is for the protection of the accused.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: May I inquire of Sir Lancelot Graham whether he has any objection to the deletion of these words?

Sir Lancelot Graham: I think, Sir, that question should be addressed to the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Before I ask the Foreign Secretary, may I inquire whether Sir Lancelot Graham has any objection to the deletion of these words from clause 2?

Sir Lancelot Graham: Personally, Sir, I shall have no objection.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Then may I inquire of the Honourable the Foreign Secretary whether he has any objection to these words being deleted from clause 2?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I must be guided by the advice of legal experts.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Personally, I have no objection, but it is a safeguard for the protection of the accused.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: If the Opposition does not want to have this safeguard for the protection of the accused, as the Law Member described it, would the Government of India have any objection to the deletion of these words from clause 2? I have not been able to catch Sir Evelyn Howell's reply.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): They are agreeable. What are the words you want to delete?

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi:

"And in the opinion of the Governor General in Council the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State may thereby be prejudiced."

Sir Evelyn Howell: Did my friend not catch what I said? I said that in the matter of the wording of the clause, I am necessarily guided by the opinion of the Honourable the Law Member.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: That is merely for the protection of the accused. We are assuming a power, that is to say, to launch a prosecution for somebody else. Now, it is in the interest of the subject that there should be some safeguard, that we may not prosecute arbitrarily; we must come to the opinion that a certain writing is prejudicial to friendly relation.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): No arguments can be advanced. The Honourable Member can either answer the question that has been asked, or refuse to do so. The question which has been asked is whether Government are prepared to agree to the deletion of certain words, and the Honourable Member can say in reply whether he agrees or does not agree.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I have objection, Sir, because those words are in the interest of the accused person.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: If we assume that the Opposition Benches are of the same view which I hold that this part of the clause should be deleted, would the Government of India agree to delete. . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member is keeping on asking the same question over and over again. The Honourable Member has got replies from three Members of the Treasury Benches. Will the Honourable Member proceed with his observations on the assumption that the Government are not prepared to agree to the omission of those words.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Mr. President, in view of this last reply, I must press the contention that the existence of this particular part of the clause is objectionable, and if the Opposition Benches are anxious that this particular part should be deleted from the clause, why should the Government of India be so anxious to protect the accused?

Mr. President: I should like to ask the Honourable Member how long he is likely to take.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Another 20 minutes, Sir.

Mr. President: The House will now adjourn till 2-20 p.m.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch Till Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Mr. President, in the course of the debate this morning, before we adjourned for Lunch, it was contended by the Honourable the Law Member and by my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham that the object of the Government of India, in attempting to enact this Bill, is to afford facility to certain foreign Rulers to file a complaint for defamation, pure and simple, an offence punishable under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code, and to create an agency for filing and prosecuting such complaints on behalf of certain foreign Rulers in a Court in British India: and it was further strenuously contended that once the complaint is filed by an officer authorised by the Governor General in Council, it will be purely a question of whether an offence has or has not been committed under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code. My Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham says "Yes". But in spite of that we have been faced with another amazing aspect of the Government's position when the Law Member said that the object of retaining those words, the deletion of which I suggest, is to protect the accused, and that these words have been inserted in the interest of the accused. I do not know if the Honourable the Law Member will persevere in this contention after further reflection, but if that is the only object, then I think there should be no difficulty on the part of Government to agree to the omission of that part of the clause. I will proceed to show to the House how the insertion of these words, or the deletion of these words, will react on the accused. If the object of the Government of India was only to enable a complaint to be filed and prosecuted without the foreign Ruler being present, that object could have been achieved by the addition of a further proviso to section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code. My Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham has had wide and varied experience in the Legislative Department; and if that was the only object of the Government of India, he would have drafted and placed before this House a Bill to enlarge this proviso to section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code; but he has not done so because that was not the object. But whatever the object of the Government of India may be, we have got to discuss this measure in the light of the effect it is likely to have on the interests of the accused for whom the Honourable the Law Member has expressed so much solicitude. (Laughter and Cheers.)

It has been made clear by Sir Lancelot Graham and also by the Honourable the Law Member that the Court which proceeds to deal with this complaint shall presume that the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State might thereby be prejudiced. Government are asking the Court to make an irrebuttable presumption.

Sir Lancelot Graham: No.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I repeat that by this clause as it is worded in my Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell's amendment the Court is bound to presume that that particular publication is likely to prejudice the relations of His Majesty's Government with the foreign Government. Sir Lancelot Graham shakes his head and says it is not so. I will now refer him to another amendment tabled by the Foreign Secretary, amendment No. 22: It reads as follows:

"That in clause 3, as renumbered, for the words 'in respect of which any person is punishable under section 2' the words 'which is defamatory of a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or of any member of the family or of any Minister of such Ruler and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State' be substituted."

I do not know if Sir Lancelot Graham still adheres to his contention that this factor will not be brought before the Court. Now, Sir, if the Court has got to presume—it is an irrebuttable presumption—that the accused has already committed an act, the effect of which is to tend to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of a Foreign State, then a very important question arises, what happens to the Exceptions to section 499 of the Indian Penal Code? I will ask the House to bear in mind clearly that by this enactment the Court is definitely bound down to this irrebuttable presumption. Now, let us examine the exceptions and see how they affect the interests of the accused. I do not propose to take the House through all the exceptions. I shall take only three exceptions and confine my observations to them. The first Exception to section 499 of the Indian Penal Code reads as follows:

"It is not defamation to impute anything which is true concerning any person, if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made or published. Whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact."

Now, I ask the House to imagine the position of the unfortunate accused. If the accused pleads that it is for the public good, the Court has to decide as a question of fact whether that particular publication is or is not for the public good. How is the Court going to decide this question of fact when it is also bound to presume, a presumption which is irrebuttable, that the publication tends to create unfriendly relations between the two Governments? It would be very difficult for the counsel appearing for the accused to contend, that although the publication may strain the relations between the two Governments and lead to war between the two countries, it is for the public good. I do hope that my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham will give further reflection to this aspect of the matter. I now come to the third Exception; it reads as follows:

"It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of any person touching any public question, and respecting his character, so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further."

Now as regards the question of "good faith", it will be very difficult for the accused to contend successfully that the expression was in good faith when the irrebuttable presumption is that he has expressed and published something with intent to create unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Foreign State concerned.

Then we come to the last Exception—the 10th Exception, which reads as follows:

"It is not defamation to convey a caution, in good faith, to one person against another, provided that such caution be intended for the good of the person to whom it is conveyed, or of some person in whom that person is interested, or for the public good."

Now some of my Honourable Muslim friends sitting on my right have expressed grave apprehensions that occasions may arise when Muslims in this country may have to sound a note of warning to the Muslim population in this country and also to the Muslim population in a neighbouring State that a particular action taken or contemplated by a foreign Ruler offends or would offend the tenets of Islam or the best interests of Islam. Such opinion of caution would be for the public good so far as Islam is concerned, but how can the accused successfully seek the protection of this exception, if the court is bound to hold as an irrebuttable presumption, that although it is for the public good of Islam and of Mussalmans, nevertheless it tends to create unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of the foreign Ruler. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. President, this Bill does create a new offence, and it is idle to pretend otherwise. If it is purely a question of making it simple for the foreign Ruler to file a complaint for defamation pure and simple, then there is no necessity for these words in clause 2. The simplest course would be to enlarge the proviso to section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But it will be contended that it cannot be done this session. Even if that is so, there is no difficulty in the way of the Government of India agreeing to delete these particular words from clause 2; and I have the authority of my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, the Leader of the Independent Party, to inform the Government of India that if they would agree to delete these particular words from clause 2, which I have already read out to the House, then the Independent Party would have no objection to clause 2 being passed after such deletion. Now, Sir, if the Opposition in this House is concerned over this Bill, because serious restrictions are sought to be imposed on the liberty of the Press and on the liberty of the subject, and if the Opposition would not only welcome but desires that these words should be omitted from clause 2, then surely it is not for the Government of India to persist in their present attitude. (Hear, hear.) I think, Sir, the Opposition in this House, which consists of a number of lawyers drawn practically from every province, can be trusted to safeguard the interests of the accused more than the Treasury Benches. Then, Sir, if it is not a new offence, why is there a new punishment?

In the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee, clause 4 provides as follows:

"The provisions of sections 99 A to 99 G of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and of sections 27-B to 27-D of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall apply in the case of any book, newspaper or other document containing matter in respect of which any person is punishable under section 2, in like manner as they apply in the case of a book, newspaper or document containing seditious matter within the meaning of those sections."

I submit, Sir, that the insertion of this clause creates an additional punishment and imposes additional penalties for this offence; and there can be no doubt that this Bill creates a new offence and provides for a new punishment. Here is the acid test by which the Government of India will be judged, namely, their attitude towards my suggestion which has the support of the Opposition Benches and more particularly of the Independent Party, that these particular words should be deleted and the offence should be kept purely and simply an offence of defamation under section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, with the punishment provided in Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code; and there should be no other ingredient or punishment or penalties in this Bill. (Applause.)

Mr. Muhammad Azhar Ali (Lucknow and Fyzabad Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in this discussion not only religious matters are involved but political matters as well. It is to be remembered that Muslim interests, in so far as the declaration of the Khalifa or likewise is concerned, are bound to be involved in this discussion; and it has been shown that if any Ruler of a foreign State declares himself to be the Khalifa, or if any matter of a religious shrine arises in any of the foreign countries, then both on religious and political grounds the Mussalmans of India are bound to write something or to speak something or to hold meetings. So I do not see where is the reason why Government do not insert any exception in the present Bill for those matters, just as exceptions and explanations are inserted in section 499 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I see at any rate no force in the argument advanced by the Government that section 499—exceptions will be quite enough for those purposes; and I am bound to state that only political questions have necessitated the enactment which is at present before us. The affairs in the Hejaz and other Muslim countries have in fact been the cause of bringing in this Bill before the Legislature. Sir, we also find that the Government of India are very solicitous for saving the thin skin of foreign people, but they are quite oblivious of the fact that the thin skin of their own subjects is being affected. Sir, the money that will be spent out of the Indian exchequer on the prosecution of Indian themselves for the sake of the relations with the foreigners, will not be in any way compensated by the foreign Rulers. My submission is where is the necessity in these days of retrenchment for the undertaking of such expensive obligations by our Government for the sake of foreigners? Are not the Government aware that such litigation might involve the expenditure of hundreds and thousands of rupees of Government money? Government should not think that people will not defend themselves or newspapers will not come forward to save their own honour if they write something about foreign Rulers. I do not think that the question of friendly relations is so much involved in this Bill as is the question of suppression and gagging of the Press. Sir, the change that we find in the present Bill before us and in the present clause is not only of words. The change of words from "a member" to "any member" has made the scope of the section rather wider. At the same time, the word "intent" was formerly in the clause but now it has been removed and the word "prejudice" alone has been kept in, besides other minor changes, and the way in which the whole clause has been put, shows that from the very beginning the Bill was not very considerably drafted. Sir, the Government of India have been given wide powers under this Bill, and although one cannot say that they will be misused, there is at least a likelihood of their being misused. The Magistrates at present, when they receive any case from the District Magistrate or from the High Court, consider themselves in their heart of hearts to be bound to presume against the accused, and the presumption there is that that is the intention of the Government. So, when this thing goes from the Governor General in Council, the Magistrates, though they may be quite honest people, will pay more attention to such presumptions against the accused. With these remarks, Sir, I oppose the motion.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Mr. President, if I may be permitted by the House, I wish to move the following amendment:

"That the words 'and, in the opinion of the Governor General in Council, the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State may thereby be prejudiced' be omitted."

Mr. Munshi has given reasons in support of this amendment and if I may be permitted

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order. order. The Honourable Member has already spoken. He now wishes to move an amendment. The Chair has no objection to his doing so if the House is agreeable. I take it that the House agrees to allow the Honourable Member to move his amendment. (Voices: "Yes.") The Honourable Member may move it.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I move the amendment that I have already read out to the House.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, on behalf of Government I accept the amendment.

Mr. President: It is on that assumption that I am proceeding. The House would not have been unanimous if Government had objected to the amendment. The amendment to the amendment is now before the House.

(No Member got up to speak.)

Mr. President: The question is that the following words be omitted from the amendment moved by Sir Evelyn Howell:

"and, in the opinion of the Governor General in Council, the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State may thereby be prejudiced."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Sir Evelyn Howell's amendment, as amended, is now before the House.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, my amendment may also be allowed.

Mr. President: It will come in due course.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Robilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it is too late in the day for me to rise to associate myself with the observations made by the Leader of the Independent Party in regard to the objection that had been made by him to this amendment of the Government. We are glad that the Government have agreed to delete those words which the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party put before the House. By so doing, I am glad that the Government have agreed to omit the passage which the Honourable gentlemen on this side of the House thought to be not in the interests of the accused. With these few words, I resume my seat.

Mr. President: The question is that for clause 2 the following be substituted:

2. Where an offence falling under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code is committed against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or against any member of the family or against any Minister of such Ruler, the Governor General in Council may make, or authorise any person to make, a complaint in writing of such offence, and, notwithstanding anything contained in section 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, any Court competent in other respects to take cognizance of such offence may take cognizance thereof on such complaint."

Sir Abdur Rahim: May I rise to a point of order. There is an amendment standing in the name of Mr. Maswood Ahmad for omitting the words "or against a member of the family".

Mr. President: Those amendments will follow. The Chair intends to explain the procedure which it proposes to adopt after this amendment has been disposed of.

The question is that the amendment which I have just read be adopted.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The next amendment stands in the name of Mr. Anklesaria.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria (Bombay Northern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not want to move my amendment.†

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): That brings the question of the various amendments which appear on the Order Paper. When this clause was being debated, the Chair recognised that if the amendment was carried, it might prejudice the moving of certain amendments of which notice had been given to the original clause.

The Chair came to the conclusion that it would not be fair to disallow all those amendments on the ground that the original clause had been rejected by the House, and another substituted for it. The Chair decided that all amendments which are relevant to the wording of the amended clause should be allowed to be moved. Following that decision, the Chair proposes to call upon all those Honourable Members who have given notice of amendments for alteration of words which are common to both clauses.

The first amendment that stands on the Order Paper is that from Mr. Maswood Ahmad who proposes that 'In clause 2 the words 'or against a member of the family' be omitted.' Does the Honourable Member wish to move it?

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: No, I do not want to move that amendment.

Sir, I beg to move the following amendment:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill as amended for the words 'any member of the family or against any', the words 'the consort or the son or the principal' be substituted."

In my opinion the scope of clause 2 has not been so much narrowed down as we would have expected it to have been. Rather the scope of the Bill has been widened by the Select Committee, as the Bill stands especially after the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell. When the Bill was introduced, there was absolutely no idea of protecting the Members of the family of a Ruler. It cannot be denied that since the Simla Session when the Bill was introduced by my Honourable friend Sir Evelyn Howell, nothing new has developed. Since then no prosecution has been made, nothing has appeared in the Press about any State or any Ruler or any member of the family or any Minister. Amongst the opinions received, there is no mention of the members of the family, because this question was not before us at that time. When this was the situation, there was no justification for the Select Committee to add this word in this Bill. My second point is this, the words make the scope of the Bill very wide. Cousins up to eighth or ninth degree can be members of a family. My third point is that it will be very difficult for any Secretary of Government to certify who is a member of the family of a Ruler or who is not and it is very difficult for any office to keep a list of the members of the family of any Ruler.

†"That for clause 2 the following be substituted:

"2. Whoever commits any offence punishable under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code against a Ruler of a State outside or adjoining India or against a member of the family or against a Minister of such Ruler, with intent to endanger the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State or whereby the maintenance of such relations is likely to be endangered shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description which may extend to two years or with fine or with both."

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: What about consorts? There may be more than one in an Eastern country.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Mr. President, consorts cannot be more than one. There are many objections to leaving in the word "Minister" without any qualifying words before it. In view of these facts, I move my amendment. I appeal to the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill to consider these points and to accept my amendment. I appeal to the representatives of the public that, if we cannot save ourselves the stigma of passing such a drastic measure, we should try to decrease its hardship as much as we can. The amended clause would read:

"Where an offence falling under Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code is committed against a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or against the consort or the son or the principal Minister of such Ruler....."

Before finishing my speech I want to say that we are very sorry that some irresponsible papers in India should have written irresponsible articles against the Rulers of the neighbouring States which we do not appreciate but rather condemn. We have every sympathy with those States, and we do not want to create any trouble in those States. We want to live in friendly relations with Persia, Afghanistan and other neighbouring States, and we will be very glad to see these countries prosperous. With these words, I move my amendment.

Sir Evelyn Howell: On behalf of Government, I accept the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill as amended, for the words 'any member of the family or against any', the words 'the consort or the son or the principal' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, I beg to move:

"That after clause 2 the following Explanation be added:

'Explanation :—

For the purposes of this Act, Aden is not included in India'."

As Honourable Members are aware when the Honourable the Foreign Secretary was moving his Bill for consideration in his speech, he mentioned the States adjoining India and he gave a list of those States, but he did not mention any State which adjoins Aden. This was practically ignored in the Committee and that was the only thing which was not taken into consideration. Therefore I move this amendment.

Sir Evelyn Howell: On behalf of Government, I accept the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That after clause 2 the following Explanation be added:

'Explanation :—

For the purposes of this Act, Aden is not included in India'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 3 stand part of the Bill.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, I beg to move:

"That clause 3 be omitted and clauses 4 and 5 be renumbered as clauses 3 and 4, respectively."

Sir, there are two parts of clause 3 in the Bill as reported by the Select Committee. The first part of it lays down that no court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First class shall proceed with the trial of any offence under clause 2, and the second part 3 P.M. that no court shall proceed to the trial of any such offence except on complaint made by or under authority from the Governor General in Council. I submit that the first part of this clause has become superfluous, because that is already provided for in dealing with the offence of defamation, in which it is already provided in the Criminal Procedure Code that no court inferior to the status named shall try the offence of defamation. That part of the section therefore is otiose and may be removed.

With regard to the second part, if you will turn to clause 2 as amended, you will see that the Governor General may make or authorise any person to make a complaint in writing of such offence notwithstanding anything provided in section 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that amply provides for the object which it was intended to secure in the form of the Bill as approved by the Select Committee. The net result is that the whole clause may drop out as not required in the Bill.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): On a point of order; if we accept this amendment, then all the amendments to clause 3 will fall?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Of course; if the clause is omitted, how can the amendments stand? You cannot amend an omitted clause. If no Honourable member wishes to address the House on this amendment, I shall put the question. The question is:

"That clause 3 be omitted and clauses 4 and 5 be renumbered as clauses 3 and 4 respectively."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 4 stand part of the Bill as clause 3.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, I rise to move the amendment which stands in my name and which runs as follows:

"That in clause 3, as re-numbered, for the words 'in respect of which any person is punishable under section 2' the words 'which is defamatory of a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India, or of any member of the family or of any Minister of such Ruler and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State' be substituted."

The original intention as regards this amendment . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Will it not be better if the Honourable Member moves this amendment on the same lines as amended clause 2? I will allow him, if he so desires some time to frame an amendment in view of the amended clause 2.

Sir Lancelot Graham: I do not really see any trouble in it, Sir. If these words "tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State" remain, it is certainly in the interests of the publishers of these papers that they should remain. These are proceedings which will eventually come before the High Court and have nothing to do with prosecution for defamation under 499; they are proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Code which begin with section 99A.

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member wishes to adhere to the wording he will explain why he wishes to do so.

Sir Lancelot Graham: The position is slightly complicated; but really we ought to move this amendment in the interests of publishers of papers; we do not wish to have these papers confiscated merely because they contain a libel.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member can move the amendment and explain why, while in clause 2 the words "any member of the family" and "Minister" have been modified, they should stand in their original form in this clause. The Honourable Member can move the amendment and explain that position and the Honourable Member Sir Lancelot Graham can, when he gets his chance, further supplement that explanation.

Sir Evelyn Howell: I move the amendment in the form in which it stands and when the further amendments which Mr. Maswood Ahmad and others have proposed in the matter come to be moved, we propose on behalf of the Government to accept them.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Sir, the consequential amendment here will also have to be made, that the words "any member of the family or against any" be omitted, and the words "the consort or son or the principal" be substituted. With your permission, Sir, I move this amendment to the amendment.

Mr. President: I allow the Honourable Member to do so. Both the amendments are now before the House.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Mr. President, the object of the Opposition will not be served if an attempt is made to retain these particular words and the principle underlying them in any part of the Bill. We have, I take it by common consent in the House, deleted from clause 2 all reference to foreign relations; and I do object to these words being retained in any part of the Bill, because they would cause serious prejudice to the accused; and our object will not be fully served if this clause 3 as framed by the Foreign Secretary is retained in the Bill. Apart from that I hope Government will be consistent in their attitude with regard to the subsequent clauses as they have consented to amend clause 2 in the manner desired by the Opposition Benches. Furthermore, Sir, I oppose this clause entirely, because the position of Government is that they are only making the offence of defamation punishable as such, by making it simpler for a foreign Ruler or his consort or his principal Minister to file a complaint through the Government of India under the procedure laid down in clause 2 of this Bill. Why then provide for further penalties? The accused in a case where the complaint is launched on behalf of a foreign Ruler should have the same rights and should be subjected to the same punishment or penalties as he would on a complaint of defamation filed by an ordinary individual; and if Government insist on introducing these further penalties in the Bill they would be attempting to put a foreign Ruler or his consort or his Minister in a higher position in a case of defamation than an ordinary British subject in this country. (Applause.)

Sir Lancelot Graham: May I understand the Honourable Member to make an amendment? Would he please read out the words of his amendment?

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I oppose the whole clause, Sir.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, in view of the fact that clause 2 has been substantially amended, the last words in the proposed amendment, "tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State" should be omitted.

Sir Lancelot Graham: On behalf of Government, I am authorised to say that we accept the amendment. If Honourable Members want to take out those words we have no objection. But we do not agree to the whole clause going out. If Honourable Members want to move that the words "and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State" should be omitted, we do not object. If the House is happier by that amendment being made, we have no objection, Sir.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I move that amendment, Sir.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): It appears to the Chair that a substantial change has taken place in the Bill, and instead of trying to amend clauses on the floor of the House the best plan would be that the Chair should postpone the consideration of this Bill till tomorrow. In the meantime those Honourable Members who are taking an active interest in the re-drafting of these clauses should meet Members of Government and bring before the House considered clauses tomorrow. In the meantime, I can call upon the Honourable Sir George Rainy to move his motion for the consideration of the Sugar Protection Bill. I think that will save the time of the House. I take it that the House agrees to this procedure. (Several Honourable Members from all sides of the House: "Yes, Yes.") Very well, then the further consideration of this Bill is postponed till tomorrow.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I move that the Bill to provide for the fostering and development of the sugar industry in British India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration. I have been waiting from day to day and wondering when the opportunity would come for me to move this motion, but until about five minutes ago it did not occur to me as possible that this Bill would be taken up this afternoon.

[Sir George Rainy.]

I propose to speak briefly on this motion, Sir, because notices of a number of amendments have been given by Honourable Members. They are all on ancillary points and do not affect the general principle of the Bill, and, when they are moved, I shall have an opportunity of speaking on them at length. At this stage, in moving for the consideration of the Bill as reported by the Select Committee, it will, I think, suffice if I endeavour to explain to the House the changes in the Bill as introduced which have actually been made by the Select Committee. In the first place, certain amendments have been made in the Preamble and in clause 3. As the House will remember, the Tariff Board originally proposed that a protective duty of Rs. 7-4-0 a cwt. should be imposed for 7 years and that thereafter for a further period of 8 years, making 15 years in all, the duty should be one rupee less, that is to say, Rs. 6-4-0 a cwt. The Government of India did not see their way to accept the recommendation of the Tariff Board as it stood, because of the practical difficulty they felt in determining, six years in advance, the rate of duty which would be appropriate and sufficient to give protection from the year 1938 onwards. They therefore limited the proposals in the Bill to the imposition of the duty of Rs. 7-4-0 a cwt. for the first seven years, but provided for a statutory inquiry before the expiry of that period, in order that at the proper time the rate of duty should be ascertained. The general feeling in the Select Committee was, I think, that something more than that was necessary. The Committee was not completely unanimous, but there were a considerable number of Members who felt that it was desirable to give the industry an assurance of protection for a longer period than seven years, and after a considerable amount of discussion, the plan embodied in the Bill, as now reported by the Select Committee was adopted. What we have done is this. We have included in the Preamble of the Bill a declaration that the sugar industry would be protected up to the 31st day of March, 1946. The words are, "Whereas it is expedient".—here I omit certain words—"to provide for the fostering and development of the sugar industry for a period ending with the 31st day of March, 1946 by determining the extent of the protection to be conferred up to the 31st day of March, 1938 and by making provision for the determination of the extent of the protection to be conferred for the remainder of the period". The amendment in clause 3 amounts to this, that instead of merely providing that an inquiry should be held, a completely open inquiry as to whether protection is still necessary or not, the Bill now provides that the object of the inquiry shall be to ascertain if the protection to the sugar industry during the period from 31st March, 1938 to the 31st day of March, 1946, should be continued to the extent conferred by this Act or to a greater or lesser extent; that is to say, in the inquiry of 1937 the Tariff Board will not have to consider whether protection is needed or not, but it merely will have to decide what is the amount of the protection required. That is the first important change made by the Select Committee in the Bill.

The second change to which I should like to refer is the new clause 4. It was felt by the Members of the Select Committee that, in order to provide against the risk of sugar being imported into India at prices which would impair the protection intended to be given, the Governor General in Council should have powers to impose additional duties. The reason why a clause of this kind did not find a place in the Bill as introduced was mainly this. I have always felt that this power of imposing by executive action additional duties is a power which it is difficult to exercise wisely, and which, on the whole, as a Member of Government I would rather be without. Therefore, I have never cared to put forward a demand before the House that the executive Government should be invested with those powers. But if the feeling in the House generally is that it is desirable that the Government should have these powers—and that was clearly the feeling in the Select Committee—then the Government are ready to accede to the general wish, but they prefer that the power should be conferred upon them by the House rather than that they should come to the House and themselves ask for it. In the report of the Select Committee there is a sentence which says:

“We consider that whenever the Governor General in Council exercises the power conferred by this clause, he should, as soon as possible thereafter, give the Legislature an opportunity to consider his action.”

That is entirely in accordance with the Government view of what is right and proper, and on the single occasion on which we have exercised such a power, that is the procedure which we have followed, and I have not the least doubt that that will be the practice which will invariably be followed.

Another small change made is this. In the interests of the growers of sugar-cane, power should be given to require sugar factories—that is what the Tariff Board thought— to post notices specifying such matters in connection with the rates being paid at the factories for sugar-cane as may be considered necessary. For that reason, the Select Committee have inserted a clause giving the Local Governments power to make rules to give effect to this recommendation. Government have always felt some little doubt as to the effectiveness of this measure, but they also felt that this was not a matter in which they should oppose their own view to the view of the members of the Select Committee because they recognise how important it is that, if the industry is to be protected, such steps as are practicable should be taken to ensure that the cultivator receives a fair price for his sugar-cane.

These are the only changes in the Bill to which I think I need refer. But there is another paragraph of the report of the Select Committee on which I might say something. The Committee considered at some length the question of the provision of funds for research. The Tariff Board's recommendation was that a sum of Rs. 10 lakhs a year should be placed at the disposal of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research, and the Select Committee considered whether statutory provision ought to be made for making such a grant. In view however of the many difficulties involved in making a statutory provision of this nature, they preferred to recommend that the Government should guarantee the grant to the Council annually of sufficient funds, to the extent recommended by the Tariff Board, to enable the Council to carry out all schemes of research which have been or may be finally approved. I understand that the present position is this. The Imperial Council of Agricultural Research are in a position, from funds already at their disposal, to finance the schemes to which they are already committed. The figure of Rs. 10 lakhs a year is not one which can be immediately attained, but only by a series of stages, and it is not until some time after the schemes have begun to be initiated that the maximum figure is reached. But although the Council of Agricultural Research have sufficient funds at their disposal to carry on up till the 31st March, 1933, I gather they would have to curtail their operations to some extent if further funds were not placed at their disposal then. What I should like to say on behalf of the Government is this. They attach very great importance in connection with sugar to adequate facilities for research as a means of developing the industry. They entirely agree with the view expressed by the Select Committee that without such measures the whole purpose of the protection scheme is likely to be delayed if not defeated, and they anticipate that it will be possible next year and in future years to make provision which will enable the Council to carry out the approved schemes. That is certainly their intention. Naturally, of course, an absolutely binding pledge cannot be given because nobody knows what the financial situation is going to be, but sugar research is one of the things on which Government would be very reluctant to curtail expenditure, because they agree with the Select Committee that, if we are to protect the industry at all, it is very important that the research side should be fully developed. I thought it right to explain the attitude of the Government on this important matter.

That, Sir, I think concludes all that I need say in moving this motion, and for that reason I will bring my remarks to an end.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): I rise to support the motion moved by my Honourable friend the Leader of the House. Sir, for many, many years he will be remembered as a great protagonist of protection. As President of the Indian Tariff Board, he inaugurated a report whereby protection was given to steel, and he is ending his career by giving protection to sugar. I do not know whether the successor of my Honourable friend—we understand Sir Joseph Bhore is going to be his successor—will be allowed to introduce a number of protective schemes for Indian industries, as was the good luck of my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy. That has yet to be seen, but there have been ominous clouds.

The Consultative Committee, where I know for a fact that the Indian industries and Indian commerce were not represented, have come to a decision

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): Why was not the representative there?

Mr. B. Das: My Honourable friend Mr. Joshi knows why the representative of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry was not there. . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. The Chair overlooked the fact that there is an amendment for postponement, which must take precedence.

Mr. E. F. Sykes (Bombay: European): Sir, I move that the consideration of the Bill be postponed to the September Session.

As there is no need for preliminaries in a matter of this kind, I shall proceed straight with the reasons why I want this Bill to be postponed to the September Session. One is the very familiar argument that Government are bringing forward important legislation at the far end of the session before a tired and depleted House.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I should like to point out that I introduced this Bill at the beginning of the session.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: Sir, I will not argue with the Honourable the Leader of the House. I will alter my expression and say "continuing legislation".

This legislation, as indicated by the Honourable the Leader of the House, was initiated somewhat early in the session. The report of the Tariff Board, on which this Bill is based, was published about the time of the Budget last year. Session after session passed and no Bill was brought forward. On the 30th January the Government Resolution was issued and on the 3rd February the Bill was introduced and on the 4th February notice was given that on the 6th the Bill would be referred to a Select Committee. A good many Members attend this House at considerable inconvenience to themselves and have to make their arrangements to attend to their own affairs as best they can. Some of us had already fixed up our business for that day which we were unable to postpone and were not able to be present. I think, Sir, you will see that the opportunities for discussion of this Bill previous to this occasion were very small. In the case of a Bill which dealt with steel or galvanised wire or other factory product, this objection may not have much force because we would be dealing with industries that are moderately well organised and which have their regular organs of expression. This Bill, as you are aware, deals with the sugar industry, of which I may say the greater part consists of cane growers and gur makers. As everybody knows, there is no organisation whatever covering the whole of these two groups. Among cane growers there are one or two local associations, but of gur makers I have never heard of any association, although the gur industry deals with about 3 million tons. Now, Sir, can you imagine that it will be possible for anybody to collect the views of the gur makers between the 30th January and the 6th February? Indeed, Sir, I may ask whether it would be possible to collect it between the 30th January and the 30th of March. I myself have made some small effort in this direction. I have endeavoured to ascertain their opinion. I may say, with extraordinarily small success, and I advance this for the consideration of the House as the principal reason why the Bill should be postponed to the Simla Session. During the session Members of this House who naturally have opportunities for familiarising themselves with the Bill and the views of the industry are not in a position to move about to ascertain the opinion in the country. Between now and the September Session they will have these opportunities, and I am quite sure that every one will endeavour to ascertain how the Bill is viewed in the country and bring those opinions back to the House, if the Honourable the Leader of the House will allow it to be once more brought before this Assembly.

These are considerations extraneous to the substance of the Bill, but if the House will bear with me for a short time, I will go into the details of the Bill, and the House will find that there are matters in the Bill itself which call for very much greater consideration than they have had so far. The first occasion I came to this House was the occasion when the first Protection Bill was introduced, that is in June 1924. I have since seen all the protection Bills that have been brought forward, and I have studied them with special diligence. The earlier reports of the Tariff Board were of great interest to us. The subject was new to us and we took a great deal of trouble to understand the aims of the Tariff Board and the policy of the Government which was founded on it. There is one feature in this Bill which distinguishes it from all the other Bills that have been brought forward to protect industry in this country. It all the other Bills the fair selling price has been ascertained by reference to actual conditions and the amount of protection has been determined accordingly and in subsequent Bills,—I refer particularly to the steel industry,—when it has been found that improvements in management or changes in price of materials have made it possible to manufacture the article at lesser cost, the protection granted has been correspondingly reduced. In fact I have heard one frivolous person remark that when we have finished with the steel industry, we should have trained it to live on a straw a day. That merely shows that the Tariff Board in those days were very anxious that no expense should be caused to the consumer in excess of what was necessary to give the required protection to the industry. Sir, you will have noticed in this Bill and in the report on which this Bill is founded that the fair selling price of refined sugar is determined not by the costs which are demonstrably being incurred by the industry, at the present time but on a purely hypothetical basis. You will have noticed that in the chapter dealing with the fair selling price, the report first of all proceeds to ascertain the fair selling price of cane and they do so by an elaborate detail of costs. Those Members of this House who are familiar with agricultural costs will I think agree with me that this method is full of pitfalls. Only the other day I was reading the Report of the Central Cotton Committee, and found that the latter have been very anxious to ascertain the cost of production of different cottons in different areas but in their report they stated that they did not consider it possible to ascertain the cost of production of cotton separately from the other costs of those crops which would usually be cultivated in the same rotation with them.

Nevertheless the Tariff Board proceeded with the estimation of the details of cost and arrived at the figure of 8 annas per maund as the fair selling price of sugar cane, and from this they formally determined the fair selling price of manufactured sugar. But this inquiry was made I think in the year 1929, and in those two years the most prodigious changes have come over not only industry but agriculture; in fact the changes in agriculture have been more cataclysmic. As a consequence, what was considered to be a disastrous price for gur, namely, Rs. 5 per maund, would now be considered a very excellent one; and gur has been quoted during the last two months in Delhi at Rs. 3-4-0 a maund. In the previous year I think the price was rather lower, and no one concerned with the industry has the least hope that in the immediate future we are likely to see any higher price. This price of Rs. 3/4 in Delhi for gur has this interest that, calculating in the manner adopted by the Tariff Board and which I have no quarrel with, it corresponds exactly to a price of 5 annas for cane delivered at the factory; and I have ascertained by inquiry from the Government, made two months ago in this House, that at the present time milling cane is delivered at factories at prices varying from 4 to 6 annas or, if we like to take a mean, we will say 5 annas. Now, Sir, one would expect that, being in possession of these factors, when the Government knew that since the Tariff Board reported such a great change came over the situation, the Government would consider that it was necessary for them to revise their figures and, in calculating the fair selling price of refined sugar, to adopt prices for delivery at the factory more or less corresponding to those which are obtaining and have obtained for considerable periods. But the figure that is given here in the Schedule—Rs. 7-4-0 per cwt.—is the same figure that on this hypothetical basis of 8 annas per maund for factory delivery of cane was arrived at by the Tariff Board. Now what the Tariff Board say is that you get 9 per cent. of sugar on cane. Those who have taken the trouble to study the subject will then see that, according to the Tariff Board's calculations, a reduction of price of 3 annas in cane will correspond to a reduction in price of refined sugar of Rs. 2-1-0; that is, assuming the manufacturing costs remain what they were estimated to be by the Tariff Board, which is a question for separate examination; and Rs. 2-1-0 per maund is as near as possible to Rs. 2-12-0 per cwt., so that this protection of Rs. 7-4-0 per cwt. is in excess by Rs. 2-12-0; and a Tariff Board of the days when the Honourable the Leader of the House presided over it would I am quite sure have said that the protection that was necessary for refined sugar at the present time was no more than Rs. 4-8-0.

Now, this is a matter of very considerable importance. It is very well-known that the high duty on sugar has raised the price so much that in combination with the great reduction in the resources of the people of the country it has reduced the consumption of sugar by a very large percentage. I am not in possession of the latest figures; no doubt the Honourable the Commerce Member would be able to supply them if necessary, but I hope my friends will at least admit that the consumption of sugar has fallen by something like 50 per cent. in the last two years. Now, Sir, the consumption of sugar is a very important factor in the health of the nation, and anything that tends to reduce it is to be looked at with very great jealousy. If the protection that is necessary for the refined sugar industry is only Rs. 4-8-0, then money is being put into the pockets of one section of the population and taken out of the pockets of another section of the population, to the detriment of their health. I would suggest therefore to the House that the amount of protection necessary for the sugar-producing industry has been greatly over-estimated and requires revision.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair, which was taken by Sir Abdur Rahim.)

Nor can it be said that any harm whatever would come to the industry from the postponement of this Bill, because in the Budget of 1931-32 provision was made for a duty of Rs. 7-4-0 per cwt., and the surcharge of 25 per cent. in the Supplementary Finance Bill of November 1931 applied also to sugar, so that at the present time the industry is getting a bigger protection than it will get when this Bill becomes operative by the removal of the surcharge. There are other matters for estimation in the Tariff Board's Report which will also call for attention. If you look at the calculations of the protection required at the end of the period of production, you will see that they only provide for an increase in recovery of sugar from 9 per cent. to 9-4 per cent. And yet they are estimating for an efficiency equal to that at present obtainable in Java, which is 85 per cent. So that this low percentage of recovery presupposes a low percentage of sugar in the cane. Yet the Tariff Board in another portion of the book quotes the Coimbatore cane No. 213 at a very high figure. I may say that this particular cane is one of the most widely spread of all modern canes in the country, and I have no doubt that with the assistance of the research work that is carried on at Coimbatore, Shah-jehanpore and Karnal and other places, the sugar content of all the canes will correspond to that and enable the calculation for the fair selling price at the end of the period of protection to be based on an extraction of over 11 per cent. This, of course, is no place to deal with details of these figures. What I wish to indicate at the present moment is that it is not in one respect only that the estimates of the Tariff Board require to be revised but in several.

Now, Sir, there is another reason why the postponement of this Bill is desirable. The Tariff Board frequently makes it perfectly clear that the gur maker is the principal object of their solicitude. Nevertheless I have failed to find anywhere, either in the Tariff Board's recommendations or in the Bill, any provision whatever for him except in so far as the high duties now proposed will keep out low grade sugar with which gur can be imitated or prepared. The argument that is commonly used that this Bill is of great benefit to the gur maker is the Tariff Board's own argument. They say that it is necessary to find a fresh outlet for cane, and that this outlet will be found in the refined sugar factories. Now, Sir, as you will have noticed in reading the Tariff Board's report, the sugar industry is a very greatly expanding one. The House will have seen that I have very carefully left all my figures outside the House because this is not an occasion for giving figures in detail. But by the kindness of the Department of Education, Health and Lands, I have been able to see the comparative figures of several years, showing the development of the improved canes in the United Provinces, from which I found that the cultivation of improved sugar-cane in some years has gone up by 100,000 acres, in others by 200,000 acres, and once, I believe, by half a million. The Honourable the Finance Member in his Budget gave us his estimates of the possible expansion of the sugar manufacturing industry. He estimated that the new factories would be capable of producing 60,000 tons per annum. But, Sir, what is 60,000 tons compared to the enormous amount that can be produced by the cane growers in India? The Tariff Board says that the improved cane will produce not less than 50 per cent. more per acre than the unimproved canes. The actual figure that I took from the last report showed that the ratio was 100 to 189. As a consequence, this 60,000 tons required for the new factories annually can be provided by the conversion from country cane to improved cane of 70,000 acres. It is quite evident that the gur industry will have to go on competing with this which it has always done. Nothing that there is in this Bill will affect the price by one anna.

Now, Sir, there are other dangers in this Bill. The price which will be obtainable under the protection levied by this Bill will be very remunerative and there will be a great stimulus to the extension of the factories, and the situation which we shall have will be very similar to that we had in the cement industry as recorded in the Tariff Board's Report.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

I do not say that the Tariff Board was responsible for this state of affairs because if natural forces have had been allowed to their way they could foresee what would be the consequence. But the consequence now is that the cement industry is controlled by a combine which, in effect, has throttled the industry. Instead of having enormous quantities of cement available at low prices; we have a small quantity of cement available at high prices. I will merely give one figure. The price of cement in India is exactly double of what it is in England. That, Sir, is the result of protecting a highly organised industry.

Now, Sir, my time is up. I hope I have said enough to the House to convince it of the necessity of giving the Government time to reconsider this Bill, especially in the matter of the amount of the protection given to the sugar manufacturing industry, so that in September they may bring in a Bill which is more in accordance with the facts as they are known to everybody.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): May I ask the Honourable gentleman, if the House does not meet in September, what happens then?

Mr. President: Order, order. Amendment moved:

"That the consideration of the Bill be postponed to the September Session."

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

UNSATISFACTORY REPLY OF THE LEADER OF THE HOUSE IN REGARD TO THE EXPEDITING OF THE REFORMS WITH MAHATMA GANDHI IN JAIL.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): It is now
4 P. M. time to take up the motion for adjournment. Before I call upon the Honourable Member, Sirdar Harbans Singh, to move his motion the Chair wishes to point out that the House has definitely decided to restrict it to only one issue, namely, to censure Government for the unsatisfactory reply of the Honourable the Leader of the House in expediting reforms with Mahatma Gandhi in jail. That being so the Chair wishes to inform Honourable Members that in addressing the House they will have to restrict themselves to this one issue only.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar (East Punjab: Sikh): Sir, I move that the House do now adjourn. Yesterday, Mr. President, we got a reply from the Honourable the Leader of the House in answer to a question that efforts are being made to expedite the progress of the reforms. That reply indicated that the Government are trying to force the reforms on India with the leaders of the Congress in jail. We believed all along from the statement of the Ministers of the Crown as well as Members of the Government of India, that all sections of Indian opinion would be duly consulted before the next constitution is put into force. But since the second Round Table Conference has ended and the present policy of repression in India has continued, we now hear that reforms will be expedited with all speed. We have heard on the authority of that great statesman of the Empire, whose authority on imperial affairs is unchallenged, General Smuts, that as far as India is concerned, Mahatma Gandhi is counted with, and that the Mahatma is the only person—General Smuts says from his own experience—who can deliver the goods and that Government will be well advised to do nothing of a decisive nature without first settling about the question of reforms with him, as the representative of that great organisation, the Congress. The decision of forcing the issue with the leaders of the Congress in jail appears to be that India should have the minimum of reforms which Britain would like to grant.

(At this stage, Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon was seen reading a newspaper in the Chamber.)

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. Honourable Members cannot be allowed to read newspapers in the Chamber.

Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): It is only in connection with yesterday's questions.

Mr. President: Newspapers should not be read on any account.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: Then when the Congress comes outside the jail and the reforms do not work well, there will be another long period for the Government to continue their supremacy without handing over responsibility to Indians. The view on this side of the House and the view in the country has always been that no reforms can ever be workable or acceptable to the country without all the parties being agreeable to them and the Congress as the main and the most important factor in the political situation of the country, as the political organisation with the widest following, should be consulted before reforms are inaugurated. We desire to impress on the Government that the decision they have taken to bring the reforms into action with the leaders of the Congress in the jails is most ill-advised and most unfortunate and most unwelcome to the country at this time. In such circumstances, neither the reforms will be acceptable to the majority of our countrymen nor when put into force will they work. We have seen a statement published in the Advance of Calcutta, from the same place from which my Honourable friend Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy comes, the statement issued by Mr. Benthall. My Honourable friend Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy must be acquainted with that circular. But I do not desire to depart from the main issue before the House and would not like to be taken back from that. We have seen from the statements in the Press and from different sources that at the Round Table Conference, certain parties decided along with the Government that the reforms must be expedited with all speed. As a result of those negotiations behind the doors of the Conference, it appears to us that this decision has been taken as a result of a conspiracy or intrigue, so that India should not have responsibility up to that degree which public opinion in India and the leaders of political thought demand. With the Congress leaders in jail, the British Government thought that they could give any sort of constitution they liked, and according to Mr. Benthall, all the minorities entered into a pact which the European Association after consulting legal advisers of the Crown and the India Office and the Foreign Office have thought fit to advocate. With these few remarks, I propose to leave the further discussion of the motion in the hands of my friends. Since the luncheon interval, I have been actually having a temperature. I therefore crave the indulgence of the House to conclude my remarks by saying that I commend my motion for the acceptance of the House.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, at the time when Mahatma Gandhi was arrested, most of us held that there was a certain conspiracy going on in England and in India. My Honourable friend Mr. Neogy, the other day, read out a passage from the speech of Mr. Winston Churchill, which showed that Mahatma Gandhi would not be allowed to remain free in India, but would be arrested as soon as he landed and that deep conspiracy was revealed when somehow Mr. Benthall's statement to the Associated Chambers of Commerce was published

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Does my Honourable friend intend to say that I made that statement in exactly those words, or is that his inference from the statement?

Mr. B. Das: That is my inference and the inference of the country. Now, what does Mr. Benthall's statement

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair has informed Honourable Members that the question of Mr. Benthall's circular on which Mr. Lalchand Navalrai's question was based could have been discussed today; but the House deliberately decided to restrict itself to the one issue, namely, that Government are expediting constitutional reforms and keeping Mahatma Gandhi in jail; and the Honourable Member will have to restrict himself to that one issue only.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Was it not inadvertently decided?

Mr. B. Das: I only refer to that statement in so far as it affects Mahatma Gandhi. I shall allude to the statement of Mr. Benthall where he refers to Mahatma Gandhi and how the conspiracy was hatched to arrest Mahatma Gandhi, and how representative Europeans were a party along with the Government and the die-hards in England to the arrest of Mahatma Gandhi. The particular passage I was going to refer to is that Mahatma Gandhi came back empty-handed to India. That was the report, the accredited report, of the representative of the European Chambers. That means that he knew a plot was hatched in London. The Secretary of State was a party to it; the die-hards, like Mr. Churchill and others, were parties to it; and my European friends here and their representatives at London were parties to it. Why was Mahatma Gandhi arrested? I have heard it said outside this House and also in the Press that if Mahatma Gandhi had been allowed his freedom, the Government could not have maintained peace and order. Before Mahatma Gandhi was arrested, there was the arrest of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru; there was also the arrest of the Frontier Gandhi, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. Had Mahatma Gandhi been allowed to proceed to Delhi to meet His Excellency the Viceroy, the heavens would not have fallen, nor would the earth have sunk into oblivion. But there was that conspiracy behind. They did not allow Mahatma Gandhi to meet His Excellency the Viceroy and to have a heart to heart talk with him. It has been suggested in the Press and outside, that Mahatma Gandhi might have carried on his negotiations as he did carry them on with His Excellency Lord Irwin, for two months, and that in the meantime the whole country would have been in flames. But with Jawaharlal Nehru arrested and the movement of the no-tax campaign completely under control of the United Provinces Government and with Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan arrested and the movement in the Frontier Province completely under control, those who plead that the Mahatma's freedom would have brought more trouble in the country simply bring out that plea only to defend themselves. Everybody knows that the country wants the expediting of these reforms; but with Mahatma Gandhi in jail nobody can say that the reforms could be expedited; and although the Churchills and the British Press gave us that impression, the particular passage in this statement of Mr. Benthall which was published in the Press shows that there was a conspiracy in England not to allow the reforms to be expedited; and there is a particular passage—I am not quoting anything lest it might be misconstrued—where Mr. Benthall says that there might be a land slide in the Government in England; in five year's time a Labour Government might come into power and so whatever there may be, let Mahatma Gandhi be arrested and everything that the die-hards in England and the European interests in India want about safeguarding and commercial discrimination and all that, let it be legislated so that the reforms could be postponed and the die-hards can have it all their own way. When Mahatma Gandhi went to the Round Table Conference as the sole delegate of the Congress, I know the British Press and the Press which is controlled by my Honourable friend the Leader of the European Group, my friend Mr. Arthur Moore, hailed it as a God-send, and in that statement it appears that the Congress delegation was described as “the most improbable people” and Mr. Benthall and his party could not understand how these most improbable people went to confer at the Round Table Conference to settle India's future. Another thing. My Honourable friend Mr. Moore will speak a few minutes hence, and I would like him to reply on behalf of his great community who live in India, though only for business reasons, about the particular reference to Mahatma Gandhi, when it talks of the “constructive vacuity of Gandhi's mind”. We know Mahatma Gandhi is a great saint; he is a prophet; he is a superman who is respected throughout the world. That the commercial representative of the European community should characterise his mind as “the constructive vacuity of Gandhi's mind”, what does that reveal? It reveals the fact that there was a deep-laid conspiracy, not only in India but also in England, and that everything was a mere show got up to entrap Mahatma Gandhi. Mahatma Gandhi was trapped there and he was not allowed to contribute constructively for the reforms in India, to bring peace between England and India, and when he landed in India, what happened? He sent a telegram to the Viceroy, the Treasury Bench advised His Excellency the Governor General not to allow Mahatma Gandhi to see His Excellency; and they arrested him and gave him enforced rest at Yerrowada jail; and with what purpose? With the purpose that has been revealed in the Indian Press by the publication of this document in the Advance, and actually revealed by the British die-hards. As one belonging to the commercial community, I find a serious charge is laid that “Mahatma Gandhi and the Federation of Indian Chambers were all combined and allied but they got nothing out of the Round Table Conference”. Commercial representatives have their respect for Mahatma Gandhi, but that they were offensively and defensively allied against the British commercial community, against the British Government and against the Government of India is a serious charge. I say it is a lie. It is a falsehood that has been mentioned in that particular document, if it is supposed to be true and came from Mr. Benthall. My Honourable friend the Leader of the House will reply. I appeal to him whether he wants peace and good will between England and India, whether he wants expediting the reforms that will bring peace between England and India, that will bring peaceful times to many of his officers who are spending harrowing days out in the districts; and whether he wants that British trade should again revive in India. Everything can be revived if it is done through friendship; but these Ordinances which have been forced on the heels of Mr. Gandhi's arrest will not bring peace to India. Only Mahatma Gandhi's release and Mahatma Gandhi's participation in the constitution and the expediting of that constitution will bring everlasting peace between England and India.

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): Sir, I very much doubt if many Members of the Opposition, when they arrived in this House this morning, had the slightest idea that they would find themselves during the afternoon engaged in trying to censure Government for their earnestness in hastening on the reforms, and I cannot help thinking that the date the 1st of April must have something to do with the fact that we find ourselves in this position. But, Sir, I understood from the Mover of this motion and also from my friend Mr. B. Das that the reason why it is sought to censure Government on this head is in some way due to this alleged circular of Mr. Benthall, and because it discloses some deep conspiracy which is alternately represented as a conspiracy to hasten the reforms and to hasten to torpedo the reforms.—I am not quite sure which. (An Honourable Member: "Both.") But, Sir, as regards Mr. Benthall himself, with your permission, I am in a position to be able to tell the House that, although this circular, as it has been described, has appeared in the Press, it was privately sent out by the Royalist Association to its members . . .

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Can that circular be discussed now, Sir?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): I was just going to interrupt the Honourable Member. The Honourable Member cannot go into the question of Mr. Benthall's circular in the manner he is doing.

Mr. Arthur Moore: I have no desire to go into it any further than to deal with the arguments that my friend Mr. B. Das put forward. May I do that, Sir?

Mr. President: Yes, but it depends upon how the Honourable Member does it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Arthur Moore: I confess, Sir, that the whole operation seems to me exceedingly difficult and that I have like Agag to walk very delicately. However, Sir, I will get down to Mr. Das's allegation that the Government are to be censured because Mr. Benthall's circular proves that there was a deep laid conspiracy hatched in London, and to which I understood him to say the Members of this Group were also privy, to go back on the whole of the Conference scheme. Now it is quite clear that Mr. Benthall does say in effect that there was something of an attempt in that direction

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Did not the Honourable Member when he began his speech call it "alleged circular", and now he calls it Mr. Benthall's circular.

Mr. Arthur Moore: I don't understand the Honourable Member's point, Sir.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: In the earlier portion of your speech you described it as the alleged circular of Mr. Benthall, and now you admit it is Mr. Benthall's circular.

Mr. Arthur Moore: I was endeavouring to explain my point, but the Honourable the President did not consider that I was in order. May I say briefly, Sir, that I am authorised to state that Mr. Benthall says that the views attributed to him are accurate in substance and in no sense secret, being his personal impressions of the events of last November before the Government finally decided on its present clear-cut policy. Now, the real point it seems to me has been entirely overlooked by Honourable Members opposite. If they were to study the document in question, they would see . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The document is not before the House on the present motion. I should like to make it quite clear again that the motion before the House is to censure Government for expediting reforms in the absence of Mahatma Gandhi whom they have put in jail. That is the only issue.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): On a point of order, Sir, I should like to know whether in this discussion, especially because of the difficulties that have been raised, the following observation of Mr. Benthall's circular is relevant to the debate, namely, expediting the reforms in the absence of Mahatma Gandhi . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): That is what the Chair has repeatedly pointed out. There is no point of order involved in it at all. The reason why this censure motion is brought forward is this. The Government of India have put Mahatma Gandhi in jail and are hurrying with the reforms. That is the only issue. The Chair allowed the House to choose between Sardar Harbans Singh's adjournment motion and that of Mr. Sitaramaraju. If they had accepted the latter, they could have gone into the whole question of Mr. Benthall's circular, but the House deliberately decided otherwise, and they have now to restrict themselves to what they themselves chose.

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): May I know, Sir, in support of our argument that the reforms are being expedited in the absence of Mahatma Gandhi who is put in jail, if we cannot quote certain passages from Mr. Benthall's circular?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): These are all statements which the Honourable Member can bring forward. Mr. Benthall's circular can be brought in only very incidentally, because that is not the subject before the House. The subject before the House is the action of the Government of India.

Mr. Arthur Moore: May I say, Sir, that on the present motion before the House, in my view Mr. Das has succeeded in doing a very grave injustice to Mr. Benthall. What I wish to ask is whether it is in order that he should be able to do that, whereas it is not open to these Benches to attempt to put that right.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member may put any construction he likes upon the speech which Mr. B. Das made, but the Chair has been very attentive and it has pulled up Honourable Members when it thought that they were exceeding the limits which the House has placed upon itself. Honourable Members very often overlook the fact that each Member of the House is entitled to rise to a point of order if he feels that any Member is exceeding the limits placed on the discussion. The Chair must again say that Mr. Benthall's circular cannot come on the scene at all. The real accused, if I may use that expression, are the Government of India.

Mr. B. Das: I think my Honourable friend Mr. Moore ought to have done the rope walking I did.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member (Mr. Arthur Moore) wish to proceed?

Mr. Arthur Moore: No, Sir.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Sir, I am not a Congressman. I never was a Congressman. If I have even an agreement with all the views held by the Congress, I assure you, Mr. President, I would have that much honesty to keep away from this House (An Honourable Member: "What is the dishonesty?") I would have had that much honesty to stay away from this House, because I would have had to non-co-operate and I would have been in jail.

Mr. President: Please go on.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: I do really think, Sir, if the future of India is to be satisfactorily solved and the constitution is to be worked, then all parties in the country should be given a fair opportunity to participate in the discharge of the duties set before us. Then only any satisfactory constitution can be brought into being. In view of the statement made some time ago by the Honourable the Leader of the House when we moved a comprehensive Resolution in this House on the necessity for the co-operation of all parties, he said that it was preposterous that the Government did not do their best to bring all parties together to work for the progress of constitutional reform. Now, matters have been disclosed which arouse a grave suspicion whether Government have really done their best to bring it about. For that reason I am in sympathy with this motion. If for no other. After hearing the answer given by the Leader of the House to the supplementary questions put by my Honourable friends here, I am forcibly reminded of the saying of a great Englishman of letters that the preacher of yesterday is the subject of to-day's sermon.

Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon: I want to oppose the motion of my Honourable friend Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar. I do not know what he means. Up till now, what I understood was that, so long as Mahatma Gandhi is in jail, further reforms should not be expedited. Sir, if that is so, I do not know when Mahatma Gandhi wishes to come out from jail. . . .

Mr. B. Das: What my Honourable friend said was that without the release of Mahatma Gandhi full reforms cannot be brought about.

Set Haji Abdoola Haroon: Please let me finish. The meaning is this, that until Mahatma Gandhi comes out from jail. . . . (At this stage there were several interruptions). Let me be allowed to speak according to my own views. I do not know when Mahatma Gandhi wishes to come out from jail. (Laughter.) Last year after the so-called Gandhi-Irwin pact was achieved, Mahatma Gandhi went to England, and after his return he sent a telegram to His Excellency and wanted to discuss some other matters than the R. T. C. My impression is that Mahatma Gandhi did not agree with His Excellency and he sent a notice that unless His Excellency heard him on the subject of the no-rent campaign and other things, he would start civil disobedience; that was an ultimatum he sent. My opinion is that at that moment the Government took the only action that could be taken by any Government in its position. Besides, I do not know what is the policy of my friends on this side of the House, whether they want reforms or not. If tomorrow the Government come forward and say, "Here you are", they will say, "We do not want to go on". I think at that time also Members from this side of the House will jump upon the Government and say, "You are wrong".

I draw the attention of the House to the fact that there are many other sects and communities who want immediately and at once responsible Government for India, and if you pass this motion, you will be doing great injustice to the many other communities who want reforms for their country. I do not want to go into Mr. Benthall's letter, but if somebody objects, the passage objected to may be taken out if the Chair considers that it is objectionable and must be taken out of the proceedings of this House. I have seen a statement from the Hindu Sabha or somebody else, which some Honourable Members of this House have signed. I am told that there is a conspiracy between the so-called nationalists and the Prime Minister. I do not know how far that is correct. Mr. B. Das spoke about the Federation of Indian Chambers and Mahatma Gandhi. I am associated with some of the mercantile bodies in Karachi. To-day I declare on the floor of this House with pain, that in 1930 when this civil disobedience started, the word of Mahatma Gandhi was immediately approved by the different mercantile bodies. They were always rightly or wrongly supporting whatever Mahatma Gandhi said. (Mr. B. Das: "Not always.") It was my experience; your experience might be different. My Honourable friend Mr. Sitaramaraju said that opportunity should be given to all the parties to sit in the R. T. C. and prepare a constitution for India. I think nobody will oppose that proposal in this House, but I do not know whether the party, who have started something ruinous to the country, will desire to come out and sit with others and decide the thing. With these few words, I oppose the motion.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Although I rise to support this adjournment motion, in my heart of hearts I rather feel sympathy for the occupants of the Treasury Bench. They really are not guilty. Everybody knows that they are merely the agents of the Great Moghul who reigns at Whitehall. But all Moghuls were not tyrannical. There was Akbar the Great among them and in the same way there were very good Secretaries of State like Mr. Montagu, Mr. Penn and Lord Morley and some others. But there have been frequent changes in the occupants of the Whitehall throne and sometimes we have a very sympathetic Secretary of State and at other times an unsympathetic or apathetic to the interests of India. We are very grateful to the great Emperor Akbar, for he treated Hindus and Moslems equally and the Government have shown their appreciation by naming one of the roads after him and they have shown their good sense by locating the House of the President on that road in order to awaken him to his duty to give equitable treatment to the different communities and parties in this House. It is well known that Akbar was a very impartial and very fair-minded sovereign.

We cannot censure in this House the Secretary of State; but we have his agents here, the occupants of the Treasury Bench, who will have to hear all the severe things that will be said from this side of the House. (An Honourable Member: "Who is Akbar on the Treasury Bench?") Akbar ought to be in Whitehall. It is a pity he is not there at present. My friend Mr. Raju has just now told the House that he was never a member of the Congress, and holding similar views I have to say the same thing. The non-Brahmins of Bombay did not accept the lead of the Congress and that of Mahatma Gandhi. When he started the non-co-operation agitation in 1921 we not only remained outside the movement but with the assistance of the Maharajas of Kolhapur and Gwalior, we organised a great demonstration in Poona to welcome His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and thus showed that the Mahratta of the Presidency were quite loyal and were not at all affected by the non-co-operation doctrine preached in those days. This was done at that time because of the trust we had in the intentions of Government. Distrust had not taken its place then. But during the last ten years events have been taking place one after another which have been gradually undermining the faith in the good intentions of Government, and I am sorry to say that one proof after another is being furnished to help that undermining process. When Congress boycotted the Simon Commission, the non-Brahmins of Bombay and Madras did not join in the boycott, and when the Round Table Conference was announced and Mahatma Gandhi and the Congress people preached non-co-operation with it, we did not follow that advice, but accepted the invitation and went there because we felt that the intentions of the Government were very fair and that India was to get some real advance in freedom. The first Round Table Conference came to very fair conclusions and we were under the impression that everything would be all right in the second Round Table Conference. But things were changing. There was revolution in England. The occupant at Whitehall was displaced by another gentleman and the whole outlook in England had completely changed. The Government of India as the agents of the occupant of the throne at Whitehall had also to change their views. While sweet words were being exchanged at the Round Table and assurances were repeated from Government members of good will and service to India, the Conservative politicians, who had obtained a dominating voice in the Cabinet, were hatching a plot to annihilate the Congress. Some astute men had a vague idea that something bad was to happen. But I must confess that I was not gifted with that power. When I heard the speech of Mr. Churchill in the House of Commons, I thought that the bitterness in the speech was due to his disappointment. He wanted to smash the whole Round Table Conference and was working in that direction. But the Conference was not only not smashed, but the Prime Minister by his announcement had produced an effect, that the efforts of the Conference were successful. Mr. Churchill I thought was surely disappointed in his tactics and therefore he had been using the bitter words to exhibit the innermost motives of his mind. But future occurrences have now shown to me that there was a deep laid plot to suppress the Congress movement, and although the Prime Minister and others were hearing very patiently and talking very glibly about justice to India, there were communications with their agents in Delhi to take severe steps for the suppression of the Congress movement. On my way to Bombay, I promised my friends in England that I would take to the work of educating my people about the good intentions of Britain and to prepare them for the acceptance of the reforms that would come. But as soon as I saw that the Government were bent upon suppressing the Congress movement and were catching hold of any excuse to justify their actions, my eyes began slowly to open, and now this Benthall letter that has been lately published in the papers completes the disillusionment of my mind. All the important leaders of the Congress, including Mahatma Gandhi, are now in jail, and Government are at the same time hurrying up with the work of the various Committees. Up to this time the Franchise Committee has made some good progress I must admit, and I expect something will come out of it. But franchise is a very minor subject; whether 10 per cent. of the population gets the right to vote, or only 3 per cent. enjoys it as at present, does not matter very much. (Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: "Does it not matter very much?") It has its importance in the case of the voters themselves or the candidates who have to solicit the vote of a very much larger number or a comparatively smaller number. The principal thing is that of the future constitution. I have grave doubts whether the constitution that is going to be evolved will be acceptable to the nation and will satisfy the ambitions of the leaders. The Government of India may evolve a constitution and may get an Act passed by Parliament. But it will be very difficult to get the reforms worked. You can take a horse to water; but you cannot make it drink. So if the leaders of the people are not satisfied with the reforms if they believe that they are not getting the substance of freedom but only a semblance and a shadow, no one will be satisfied and it will be very difficult to work the constitution.

Sir, the dyarchical form of Government was accepted in 1920 by some of the leaders of the people, although Congress was against it, because it was a genuine attempt at democratization and people had then faith in the good intentions of Government. But as I have just said, times have changed; trust has been undermined, and it will be very difficult to find worthy people to work the new reforms. This is not at all the time for the introduction and successful working of a new constitution when there is now an Ordinance raj, when nobody is feeling confident, when Mahatma Gandhi and other popular leaders are confined in jail, when some leaders now working on the various Committees are rather nervous, and do not know where they stand, and when the European and other Groups are striving their best to whittle down the reforms as much as possible.

Mr. Arthur Moore: May I say, Sir, that that is quite incorrect?

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Well, that is my view,—and I am liable to err. Therefore, Sir, I think I ought to condemn this action of the Government in hurrying on with the reforms under these circumstances when there is nobody prepared to accept and work them.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, I have delayed rising for some time in the hope that I might hear from some of the Opposition speakers some considered expression of the reasons which in their opinion justify this motion, but from the speeches made so far I have got very little material indeed. There seemed to be a constant tendency for speakers to get away to comparatively minor points and to divert attention from the main issue, which as you, Mr. President, have repeatedly reminded the House, is the only issue before us. Sir, the motion proposes to censure the Government of India for expediting the progress of the reforms, with Mr. Gandhi in jail. I find that even at this stage of the debate it becomes necessary for me to state what I understand to be in the minds of Honourable Members opposite rather than to refer directly to anything they have actually said. I understand, however, the feeling expressed by Sirdar Harbans Singh, namely, that it is useless to proceed with the constitutional discussions if the Congress are left out, that they form so considerable a section of Indian opinion that without their participation the constitutional discussions can lead to nothing. This is a point of view which the Government of India fully appreciate, and they have shown by their actions in the past how full they did appreciate the importance of securing, if it could be done, that all parties of India should join in trying to reach a settlement. What else did the Gandhi-Irwin Pact mean but that, and as one of the Members of the Government of India responsible for the Delhi Pact, I am entitled to claim that we took great risks in order to bring the Congress in. What followed? It was made clear in the Resolution of the Government of India, which was published last January, that the Government of India almost from the first found great difficulty in carrying on on the lines agreed upon. In their determination to assist towards a peaceful solution of constitutional problems, the Government of India showed deliberate forbearance towards Congress activities and refrained from denouncing the Delhi Pact although justification for such a course was afforded on many occasions. They persisted in their endeavours, and when difficulties arose about Mr. Gandhi's attendance at the Round Table Conference, they spared no efforts to reach a modus vivendi. Of that also I can speak from personal knowledge. Then came the Conference and the anxious months during which the situation in the United Provinces and in the North-West Frontier Province was steadily deteriorating from day to day; and at last the moment came when the Government of India felt that they could not, if they were to discharge their responsibilities at all, refrain from taking the action which the situation demanded. Sir, I have never been a party to a decision which in one sense I regretted so much, but I have also never been a party to a decision about which I was so certain that we were taking the only possible course which our duty to India demanded. (Hear, hear.) And when it is now suggested—on the strength of a document which I understand does represent what has been said by Mr. Benthall—that the Government of India were forced into their action by anything that passed outside India or by any alleged plot or conspiracy, that to me seems purely grotesque, remembering as I do all our efforts during these anxious months, and remembering the reluctance we in the Government of India felt—and the reluctance constantly felt and expressed by His Majesty's Government—to taking any action which could endanger a peaceful settlement. But the situation became so grave that it looked as if a week's further delay might have precipitated an appalling catastrophe, in which ultimately all parts of the country might be involved. That is what I have to say on that point, Sir, and I desire to make it clear on behalf of the Government of India that we repudiate altogether any allegation that our action in attempting to put down the pernicious activities of the Congress movement was influenced in any way by anything that passed in London.

Now, Sir, since the Government of India were compelled to take action against the Congress, what was to be their future line of policy?

5 P.M. I do not know whether it is seriously suggested on the other side that since the Government of India felt constrained to take the action which they did take, they ought then to have abandoned any attempt to push on with the reforms and to have made their policy a policy of repression. If that is their view, it does not seem to me to be shared by a great many people outside this House. It is not shared by the Members of the Consultative Committee, who have emphasised the desirability that His Majesty's Government should decide with the least possible delay certain questions in order that progress may be expedited, and it is not shared by the members of the Muslim Conference at Lahore; and it is not shared by anyone with whom I have talked. I think Members generally and the country generally understand what the dual policy of the Government of India is. It was clearly stated in the Resolution of the Government of India to which I have already referred:

"While they will take every measure that is necessary for the suppression of a lawless movement and for the protection of public and private liberty, they will also spare no effort to bring to completion the policy of His Majesty's Government."

And if I may quote one more sentence from the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of this session, he said:

"Our difficulties must and shall be surmounted and my Government are determined to allow no subversive or revolutionary activities to prevent us from achieving this great purpose for which many of us have worked for long years."

These are the two aspects of the policy. It is our business, it is our duty, to put down a movement which must result, if left unchecked, in the destruction of all orderly government. On the other hand, it is equally and even more our duty to show that we and His Majesty's Government mean business and that we are anxious to get on with the reforms. Surely what has taken place during the last few months in connection with these various Committees does show a very real intention of doing our best to expedite matters.

Now, Sir, before I sit down there is only one other matter to which I wish to refer very briefly. I presume it is suggested that the proper course for Government to take now is to release Mr. Gandhi and the other Congress leaders forthwith in an effort to bring about conciliation and peace. But what has happened in the last three months to encourage the view that the action would, in fact, lead to a peaceful settlement?

On the other hand, we can reasonably say that it would lead to nothing except the immediate revival of all those activities which brought India very nearly to the brink of a catastrophe. And if Honourable Members opposite think that this is the right course to follow, I think it is incumbent upon them to show in what respects circumstances have changed since Government were reluctantly compelled to take the course of action which they did take at the end of last December and towards the beginning of January. I can only give my own opinion, Sir, and it is this, that I can find no reason at present for believing that the weapon of civil disobedience, that most pernicious and appalling weapon, would be abandoned, and in that case the only result would be that we should be landed back in a condition far worse than that in which we were last year and all the confidence in the policy of Government would be completely destroyed.

One last word, Sir, before I sit down. This may be the last occasion on which I shall address this House on this very important and difficult subject. I do not know whether I have spoken more warmly than I ought to do, but I can assure the House that the only warmth that is in my mind and heart is the warmth of a very sincere desire for the future welfare of India and a determination that, if I can, I will not be a party to any action which in my view would seriously injure her future. (Applause.)

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the House concluded his observations with a very touching remark, namely, that this is his last speech on a controversial issue and that he had nothing else but the welfare of India at heart. Sir, we on this side of the House are quite willing and equally sincere in our willingness to admit that he has the welfare of India at heart. (Hear, hear.) I would exonerate the Honourable the Leader of the House from any initial responsibility for the imprisonment of Mahatma Gandhi. Sir, I would even go a step further and say that had the spirit that animates the Honourable the Leader of the House animated Whitehall, Mahatma Gandhi would not have been in prison but would have been working with the Lothian mission, of which he was a member originally, wandering in the country, examining witnesses and miles and miles of people from long distances would have come to have his darshan. Unfortunately, the Honourable the Leader of the House is a leader of a House which is not a sovereign Parliament and a Member of an Executive Council which has been described, and correctly described, by the late Lord Curzon as "a subordinate branch of the Imperial Administration". Sir, I wish that Whitehall and Sir Samuel Hoare had been animated by the same spirit that has animated throughout the Honourable the Leader of the House. We hold him responsible for one thing, and we are proud to hold him responsible for that, namely, for bringing about the Gandhi-Irwin Pact. What the Honourable the Leader of the House brought about last year or brought about before last year, has now been broken by the circular of Mr. Benthall which has raised this discussion of our objection to the expedition of the reforms. This has happened as a result of the General Election. That is the whole issue.

Mr. Arthur Moore: May I ask, Sir, whether the Honourable Member is in order in raising this point if no answer is permitted?

Mr. President. (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member (Mr. Ranga Iyer) will abstain from drawing his extracts from Mr. Benthall's circular. The Honourable Member has seen that the Honourable Mr. Jadhav and the Honourable the Leader of the House have dealt with the issue that is before the House at considerable length without bringing in the circular of Mr. Benthall.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I am not bringing it in either. I was suggesting that the root of this expedition of the reforms is in the Benthall circular, though we do not want the authority of the Benthall circular because there is some higher authority than that, namely, the Statesman of Calcutta. There is some higher authority still, namely, Winston Churchill; there are still higher authorities, namely, the Tory Press and Sir Samuel Hoare. I was saying that there are higher authorities than Mr. Benthall himself because the internal evidence in an important circular by a less important personality does not trouble me at all. I am concerned with the expedition of the reforms and the expedition of the reforms arose from the General Election. The whole spirit has changed after Sir Samuel Hoare replaced Mr. Wedgwood Benn

Mr. Arthur Moore. May I ask, Sir, again whether the Honourable Member is entitled to elaborate the same point as my friend Mr. Das when it is not permissible to point out that Mr. Benthall is bringing a charge against certain Conservative members of the Government after the election of having attempted to do something which he tried to prevent them from doing.

Mr. President: (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): If the Honourable Member does not mention anything about Mr. Benthall's circular he is entitled to say that there has been a change in the Government of Britain to which several other references have also been made, and that the reason why Mahatma Gandhi was in jail and the reforms were being expedited was the Parliamentary election and the change of Government in Britain. I do not see how that can be out of order.

Mr. Arthur Moore: May I point out that Members are referring to the circular, without apparently reading it, and they should not draw any conclusions. If they would read it, they would find that the circular points out that this movement did not succeed. There was an attempt to produce this change of policy in the Government after the elections, but no such change eventually came about, as they reverted to their former policy of the Labour Government.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member can deal with the British policy and the policy of the Government of India.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I was just saying what the Honourable gentlemen said. I was not going to take my stand on a circular to which reference has been made and in this case, it was meant obviously, as he himself pointed out, for the first of April. (Laughter.) I was replying to the observations which the Honourable the Leader of the House, a more important personality than any other personality in this country, made in this debate. The Honourable the Leader of the House said that he was anxious, his Government were anxious to get on with the reforms. I do not for a moment question the anxiety of the Government to get on with the reforms, but we are anxious that we should get on with not mere reforms, but reforms that have to be worked. Can any reforms in this country work unless you have the bulk of public opinion with you? If the Government do not want to carry the public opinion with them, they can afford to follow the present policy of repression cum reforms. The Honourable the Leader of the House asked, what do the Opposition want? Should we have indulged in naked and unashamed repression? Nobody wanted them to indulge in undiluted repression, but everybody wanted them to follow the policy of unmitigated reforms. Once you dilute the wine of reforms with the water of repression, once you dilute reforms in such a manner as they are diluted by the Ordinances, the country will not see the reforms but only the Ordinances. I would invite the Honourable the Leader of the House to take up any Indian morning newspaper and also the streamer headlines in that newspaper even under the Ordinances, and what will he find? He will find that the country is not interested in reforms but repression. You cannot under the blight and blast of repression build up reforms. Reforms cannot grow in an atmosphere like that. That is why we say, do not expedite reforms until you create the atmosphere necessary for the reforms. That atmosphere is now lacking, and why is it lacking? It is lacking because, as Sir John Maynard, a great Englishman who has known this country, has observed, Mahatma Gandhi, on his return to this country, asked for an interview and that interview was unwisely not granted. I say that the Honourable the Leader of the House was not responsible for the refusal of that interview, which was dictated from Whitehall. If there had been Mr. Benn as the Secretary of State for India, the interview would have been granted. The spirit in Whitehall changed. This is not the place for me to disclose

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I must intervene now. I must challenge the statement of my Honourable friend that any action taken at that time was dictated from Whitehall.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: The Leader of the House is perfectly entitled to challenge my statement, but he cannot challenge the impression that I gathered when I was in London. He cannot challenge the impression that I formed after my long conversations with Mr. Benn and other Cabinet Ministers which was contained in a statement that I made on landing in India, that Mahatma Gandhi would be imprisoned but that he would be released to enable him to be present at the Second Round Table Conference, a statement which was contradicted by the Sunday Times of London, but a statement which subsequently turned out to be true, (Hear, hear.) I am therefore suggesting that the socialist mentality which was in Whitehall is not the Conservative mentality which is in Whitehall today. I wish Government had not declined the interview to Mahatma Gandhi, holding the opinion that Government themselves hold about him. What did the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy himself state in his letter to Mahatma Gandhi? There is internal evidence in that letter that the Viceroy appreciated the attitude that Mahatma Gandhi took up in London, and what did Mahatma Gandhi himself say in his reply to the Viceroy? I should not like to take up the time of the House by reading that portion of the letter. There is plenty of evidence in that letter that Mahatma Gandhi was willing to co-operate with the Government and enquire alike into the Frontier and the United Provinces situation, and if he found that the Congress was wrong, he said in his letter to the Viceroy, "I will give the right lead to the Congress". Here is a leader of a people, a great man who was once admitted to the Viceregal Palace in loin cloth, who was entertained in London and respected at the St. James's Palace and on his return to India when he asked for an interview, he is told off

An Honourable Member: Under a threat.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: My Honourable friend says, "under a threat". This is exactly what Mahatma Gandhi wrote, and if there is a single threat in this letter, I will apologise to the Honourable Member. Mahatma Gandhi wrote:

"If it is not yet too late, I would ask His Excellency to reconsider his decision and see me as a friend without imposing any conditions whatsoever as to the scope or subject of discussion and I, on my part, can promise that I would study with an open mind all the facts that he might put before me. I would unhesitatingly and willingly go to the respective provinces and with the aid of the authorities study both sides of the question and if I came to the conclusion after such study that the people were wrong and that the Working Committee including myself were misled as to the correct position and that the Government were right I should have no hesitation whatsoever in making that open confession and guiding the Congress accordingly."

Such is the undertaking from Mahatma Gandhi to the Viceroy of India. Instead of seizing that opportunity, instead of trying to create an atmosphere of good will, dictated by Whitehall, by the new defiant spirit that is in Whitehall, which is not different from the spirit of Mr. Churchill himself, here is Mahatma Gandhi, a leader of a people, worshipped by the people, a leader with a following the like of which the world has not yet seen, here is a leader who is told off and then locked up in prison. I want the Honourable the Leader of the House to recommend to the Government of India to revise their attitude, send for Mahatma Gandhi and create the status quo ante internment and carry on important conversations. However, it must be borne in mind most clearly that in an atmosphere like this, by expediting the reforms, you may be able to have another election next year, but that election will be boycotted much more strenuously than the last election was boycotted. It is not the hurry or the haste or the waste of reforms that we want. It is the settlement of the Indian question that we demand. It has been recognised that Mahatma Gandhi is the Right Wing leader of the Congress, not the Left Wing leader and therefore I would once again tell the Government not to follow the policy of rallying the moderates, harrying the extremists and rushing the reforms. (Applause.)

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions; Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am opposed to this motion for adjournment because my angle of vision is quite different from that of many others. The time has not come for Mahatma Gandhi to be sent for for any settlement. I agree with my friend Haji Abdoola Haroon that any Government would have done the same thing that this Government has been doing. I ask my friends on this side, do they seriously expect that a powerful Government will concede any substantial powers with this little sacrifice and suffering that the nation has undergone yet? I say you are wrong. I say the time will come later on to move a motion like this, and it will then be acclaimed by the Government Benches; but the time has not come yet. The nation must show and prove its mettle. Instead of moving these motions, I think we should wait and wait till the real time comes, when the nation will prove that they have not been crumpled up under the repression.

An Honourable Member: India is not one nation at all.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: My Honourable friend may shout that India is not one nation, and my friend Haji Abdoola Haroon was saying that his community was anxious to help the Government to any extent. I say there are many amongst the Hindus as well who are anxious to help Government; he need not think that loyalty is a monopoly for his community; I know of the minorities pact and the selfish motives actuating them; and their anxiety to fish in troubled waters; I can assure Government that there are people even amongst the Hindus who will be glad to co-operate with Government. But that is not my point. There will of course be such men in any nation in the world.

An Honourable Member: Question.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: As regards Mahatma Gandhi himself, the esteemed Leader of the House said that Government reached the limit and they had to take steps. What was the limit? He particularly mentioned two provinces, the Frontier Province and the United Provinces. In the Frontier Province Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan was arrested. Why? Because he refused to go to a dinner or tea party or to attend a durbar. And the situation in a nutshell, as regards the United Provinces, was this: negotiations were going on; Mahatma Gandhi was coming from England but Government took the pretext that all the rents about which negotiations were going on between the Congress Party and the Government for the year must be paid before the end of the month. If the rents were paid, then there remained nothing for these people to negotiate about. Men like Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru tried their best; when the Provincial Conference was forbidden in Agra, he agreed himself to postpone it and announced that he was anxious to go and meet Mahatma Gandhi and take his advice. The General Secretary of the All-India Congress Committee, Mr. Jawahar Lal, was arrested and my Honourable friend the Leader of the House tells us that these are the occasions when the limit was reached and the Government could not wait for a few hours, when Mahatma Gandhi on bended knees wanted to see His Excellency the Viceroy only to discuss—he did not make it a point that the Ordinances must be suspended; he merely wanted to discuss them,—but that was also denied.

I now come back to the point. I for one do not really believe that we will gain anything unless the fight goes on to a finish. And here I differ very much from my old friend of the Congress, Mr. Ranga Iyer. He thinks that Mahatma Gandhi, if he was free, would be roaming with Lord Lothian to settle these terms. The difference is that, what Mahatma Gandhi wants is the freedom of the country, which in other words is full Dominion Status, and not tinkering with this reform or that reform, for which my moderate friends in the Round Table Conference are so anxious. That is the fundamental difference between the Congress and the so-called co-operators and moderates and liberals. I think, on second consideration, my friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, who knows the Congress as much as anybody else knows it will see that until Government yield and come to a reasonable frame of mind, this fight will go on. As a matter of fact when the Irwin-Gandhi pact came about, the Labour Government in England felt that India had proved her mettle, that India had become a nation and the time had come for a real concession, for real Dominion Status.

Now, as has been said, after this new election a reactionary House of Commons think they can merely tinker with the little reforms. Some of our friends are very anxious to have provincial autonomy. Do they know what is provincial autonomy without responsibility in the centre? I have consulted with some Ministers, both Hindus and Muslims, of my province, who say that in the provincial exchequer there is no money. They were anxious to do something for their people. Free primary education is an essential thing for the country, which question had been raised decades before by you, Sir, and persistently pressed by the late Mr. Gokhale all his life. But even this elementary thing we have not been able to get out of the Government all these years. What is this provincial autonomy? It may be that some of our friends are very anxious to sit in the place of the European bureaucrats as Ministers and draw Rs. 5,000 a month, but how does it affect the interest of the people at large? But what will happen without responsibility in the centre? Without real control in the central finance, what is provincial autonomy? I know in my province of Bengal we get 10 or 11 crores, while our people pay 40 crores. The balance goes to the Central Exchequer, and Minister after Minister was most anxious to do some good for the people. They are loyalists and co-operators, but they say, those who have real experience admit, that there is nothing in this provincial autonomy with empty exchequers. Possibly it may help some of those friends here to get big positions, but for the nation it means nothing. The other day I was speaking about the question of unemployment. We were fighting, my friend, Mr. B. Das, will be fighting with the capitalists, but there is no national dividend to be divided; we will all be fighting and as long as this fighting goes on it is certain that the Britishers will rule over this country. Why should they yield? When the real time comes, and when we will all unite in our self-sacrifice and suffering, then we will prove our worth that we are a real nation, and then the time will come for Mahatma Gandhi to come and settle. Sir, I am against such motions.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is that the question be now put.

APPENDIX.*

Translation of the speech delivered in Marathi on the 19th March, 1932, in the Legislative Assembly, by Mr. N. R. Gunjal, M. L. A.

Mr. N. R. Gunjal (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I rise to oppose the Demand in respect of the Home Department. During the last two years, I find that the administration of the Home Department of the Government of India is not being run satisfactorily. The Home Department is responsible for the proper administration of law and order, but recently the people of India have come to know the unsatisfactory administration of the Home Department in respect of preserving law and order in India. Government are ruling India, not by ordinary laws, but by Ordinances the application of which has been bad. Respectable men and women have been sent to jail, useful associations have been declared unlawful, and processions and things of that kind have been dispersed. Sir, I warn the Home Department against all these abuses of the law.

His Excellency Lord Irwin, the ex-Viceroy of India, having noticed all these abuses of law by his own officers, and having gauged the depth of public feeling in India, called Mahatma Gandhi for consultation and entered with him into a pact, now known as "Gandhi-Irwin Pact". This pact of His Excellency Lord Irwin as well as his good qualities of heart were much appreciated by the general public. In view of the conciliatory policy of the Government, Mahatma Gandhi agreed to go to London and represent the Congress view at the Round Table Conference there. But no sooner he came back to India, the Home Department issued orders to arrest him and put him under lock and key. The mischief caused by the Home Department does not end there. They issued orders for the arrest of revered and renowned leaders like Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Subhash Chandra Bose, Vallabhbhai Patel, Vithalbhai Patel, Bhopatkar, Karandikar, Gokhle, Masurkar Maharaj and several others. Sir, all these go to show that there is somewhere something wrong with the administration of the Home Department. We, on this side, Sir, feel that it is a zooloomi administration and that all demands for the Home Department should be cut down, as the Department has failed entirely to preserve the necessary peace and order in the land, according to the country's desire.

The superior European officials are not permanent residents of India, but we, Indians, are the permanent residents here. This fact must not be forgotten. The Europeans, who eat the salt of India, are now persecuting Indians. This attitude of the Government is a sign of their downfall. It should be remembered that no Government who ruled Delhi enjoyed the throne for a long time, while persecuting their subjects. Look at the ancient history of the Delhi Empire? Government should pay heed to the events of history. Bhagwan Shri Krishna has said in the Gita:

"Adhi jate budhi ani mag jate raiya".—"The man loses his reason first, then his Kingdom."

The Kauravas, who were at one time ruling Delhi lost their kingdom because they perpetrated several crimes, inflicted zulum on the subjects, and persecuted and prosecuted sages and saints and convicted men of light and leading. There is another example of Ravana. During the reign of Ravana, several atrocities took place with the result that there appeared on earth the incarnation of Rama to destroy Ravana.

At present, Ordinance Raj is going on, and Government are persecuting several sages and saints,—men like Masurkar Maharaj and Panchgonkar Maharaj, who is called Ramdas—and the younger generation for nothing. What does this indicate? It appears that the talents and reasons of the officials of the Home Department of the Government of India have deserted them and if the Home Department carry on administration without tact, skill and talents, Government will have to suffer consequences and will repent for all such acts.

The bureaucracy should remember that in case we get the powers in our hands we will not fail to retaliate against these bad acts of the Government. The British promises of peace and protection, mercy and safety, have now broken down; and it should be remembered that the time is not far off, when such repressions will lead to revolution. With these words, I support the motion to refuse the entire Demand* in respect of the Home Department, on account of its utter failure to preserve law and order in the country by their mishandling of the present political situation.

* "That a sum not exceeding Rs. 5,48,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st March, 1933, in respect of 'Home Department'."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 2nd April, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock. Mr. President in the Chair.

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Perhaps it may be for the convenience of the House if I make a brief statement about the state of Government business and the probable date on which the session can be terminated. Government have examined the state of business carefully, and they feel that unless something can be done to lighten the programme, it looks as if the greater part of the next week will be occupied in the discussion of the various Bills and Resolutions. In view of that fact, they have come to the conclusion that it is desirable to postpone further consideration of the Bill for the protection of the sugar industry until the September session. That is a Bill on which there are a number of amendments, the discussion of which might take up several hours of the time of the House. Therefore, I should like to say that we shall be ready to accept the motion which has been already moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Sykes that the further consideration of the Bill be postponed until the September session. Ordinarily there would be very strong objections to following this course in the case of any Bill designed for the protection of an industry because the industry would in ordinary circumstances be deprived of the protection which it was proposed to give it. But in this case the duty which will be in force for the next twelve months is 25 per cent. higher owing to the surcharge than the duty proposed to be fixed by the Bill, and therefore the sugar industry will not in any way be prejudiced by the postponement of the Bill. If that is done, Government hope that it will be possible to finish the programme of work by Wednesday, the 6th. I should like to take this opportunity to mention that on Tuesday, the 5th of April, a statement will be made on behalf of the Education, Health and Lands Department as to the result of the work of the recent mission to South Africa, and as I understand there is a general feeling that the House would like to have an opportunity of discussing this statement, Government propose to put down a purely formal motion that the statement made may be taken into consideration so that Members may have an opportunity of expressing their views after they have heard the statement. Finally, Honourable Members are aware that there is on the paper a motion by my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, that the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act for certain purposes be referred to a Select Committee. The House is also aware that yesterday two further Bills have been introduced, also arising, as this Bill arose, out of the recommendations of the Haj Committee. It would obviously be convenient if these two Bills could be referred to the same Select Committee that will consider the first Bill, and therefore if the House think that that is a reasonable course—and I shall be glad to discuss with Party Leaders during the course of the day to ascertain their views on the point—in that case motions would be put down to refer these two Bills also to the same Select Committee. I hope that what I have said will satisfy the House that it is the desire of the Government to meet the convenience of Members and to do what lies in their power to expedite the business so that the session may not be unduly prolonged.

[Sir George Rainy.]

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

SUBSIDY PAID FOR THE MAIL MOTOR SERVICE BETWEEN SALEM AND ARTHUR.

Mr. T. Ryan (Director General, Posts and Telegraphs): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 748 asked by Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury on the 14th March, 1932.

(a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) The arrangements made by the Superintendent were of a temporary nature in order to avoid break-down in the transport of mails, and Government are satisfied that such action in special circumstances is justifiable.

(d) Strictly speaking the authority of the Postmaster-General was necessary, though it was not obtained by the Superintendent; but for the reason explained in the reply to part (c) above Government do not consider that this case necessitates any action against that officer.

PAY OF DUTRIES AND 10 PER CENT. CUT IN THEIR PAY.

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig (Home Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to parts (a) and (d) of starred question No. 375 asked by Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury on the 16th February, 1932.

With reference to the reply given to starred question No. 375 on the 16th February 1932, I have to say that there are 404 Record Sorters and Dutries employed in the Government of India Secretariat and its attached and subordinate offices. Of these 27 are in receipt of pay of over Rs. 40 a month.

OLD RECORD SORTERS, JEMADARS AND PEONS RETAINED IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 748 asked by Mr. Muhammad Anwer-ul-Azim on the 9th March, 1932.

(a) Yes; there are eight in all.

(b) There is no compulsory age or service limit for retirement in their case. Fitness for the work of their grade is the sole criterion for their retention.

APPOINTMENT OF MUHAMMADANS IN THE RAILWAY AUDIT SERVICES.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred questions Nos. 219 and 220 asked by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin on the 23rd March, 1932

219. (a) The number of men holding permanent (including provisional) appointments in each grade of the Railway Audit Service is as follows:

(i) Assistant Audit Officers	17
(ii) Senior Auditors	58
(iii) Junior Auditors	46
(iv) Clerks :

Details of the distribution of posts as between permanent and temporary and grades I and II are not immediately available. Total number of clerks in service on 31st December 1931, was 393.

(b).

(i) above	Nil
(ii) above	3
(iii) above	2
(iv) above	43

220. (a) The proportion of recruitment of minority communities is being strictly adhered to both for probationary auditors and for clerks. Similarly on reduction of posts the prescribed ratio has been observed in discharging staff.

(b) No, because when posts are being reduced and staff retrenched no supernumerary appointments can possibly be made.

APPOINTMENT OF SIKHS IN THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 723 asked by Sardar Sant Singh on the 9th March, 1932.

(a) None.

(b) Appointments to posts of Accountants are made chiefly by promotion from clerks who have qualified by passing the Subordinate Accounts Service Examination, and occasionally by direct recruitment. In the office of the Auditor General, none of the Sikh clerks is qualified for such promotion. In the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, there is one junior Sikh clerk who has now passed the Subordinate Accounts Service examination and his claim for promotion will be considered in his turn.

(c) The total strength is 102. The elements of Hindus, Muhammadans and Sikhs and the province they belong to are given below:

	Hindus.	Muhamadans.	Sikhs.	Total.
Bengal	48	48
Punjab	15	2	6	23
Delhi	2	13	..	15
Madras	9	9
United Provinces	2	..	2
	74	17	6	97

DISPOSAL OF APPEALS BY THE INSPECTING OFFICER, MILITARY LANDS AND CANTONMENTS, NORTHERN COMMAND.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to parts (b) to (f) of starred question No. 859 asked by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin on the 18th March, 1932.

(b) The General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Northern Command, himself passes orders on appeals.

(c) Yes.

(d) The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative and the answer to the second part in the affirmative.

(e) No.

(f) Does not arise.

SCHOOLS FOR CHILDREN OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES AT GORAKHPUR.

Mr. P. R. Rau (Financial Commissioner, Railways): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 115 asked by Mr. N. R. Gunjal on the 4th March, 1932.

(a) Yes.

(b) (i) to (iv). At Gorakhpur the Bengal and North-Western Railway administration have provided two schools for the children of their Indian employees; one is a Boys' school teaching up to the 6th Anglo-Vernacular Class and the other a Girls' Kindergarten school. These two schools were provided for the benefit of staff living near the Locomotive Workshops which are at some distance from the city in which numerous scholastic institutions are available for children of other railway staff. The number of children of Indian employees attending these two schools is 220.

(v) Yes.

(vi) The Bengal and North Western Railway contribute Rs. 100 per mensem to the Boys' school and Girls' school, and Rs. 225 per mensem to the Railway school at Gorakhpur for the children of European and Anglo-Indian employees. The Railway also contributes Rs. 200 per mensem to schools in the city which are attended by children of Indian employees.

(vii) Yes.

(c) It is understood that Railway schools have been provided where the lack of educational facilities has made this necessary.

(d) Does not arise.

HEAD DRAFTSMAN, LOCO. HEADQUARTERS OFFICE, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 236 asked by Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla on the 23rd March, 1932.

(a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) It is a fact that he was previously a tracer and then a photographer in the Publicity Branch of the Headquarters office. It is, however, not a fact that he has never worked on the boards. He does so now when urgency demands and checks the major portion of work done by the staff employed under him.

(c) Does not arise.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) BILL—contd.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the motion that the Bill to provide for the fostering and development of the sugar industry in British India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration, and the amendment of Mr. Sykes that the consideration of the Bill be postponed to the September Session.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Although the Leader of the House in his statement about the work before the House has said that he would be quite willing to postpone the debate on the Sugar Industry (Protection) Bill, we on this side of the House are in no mood to postpone the passing of this Bill till the next session. I do not know if my Honourable friend, Mr. Sykes, was of that opinion. Had his desire been to postpone the debate till the next session, he would not have discussed the whole aspect of the Sugar Industry (Protection) Bill and gone into it in such great detail, as he did yesterday. By going in detail into the interests of the agriculturists and other interests, he showed that he had in his mind that his motion would not be accepted by this House. One point to which I want to draw the attention of the Leader of the House regarding the motion of my friend, Mr. Sykes, is that the next sugar season will commence somewhere in September next, and those who want to avail themselves of the sugar crop of 1933 must order their machinery and plant in 1932 by September next. The Bill is not controversial at all and although there are certain amendments placed before the House to enlarge the scope of the Bill, to give more protection to the agricultural interests and also to safeguard the financial interests of the Government of India, there is nothing controversial in the Bill which will necessitate the postponement of the consideration of this Bill till the next session. Of course, I understand the situation; the Government are pressed for time, and the House is anxious to adjourn. But the sugar interest in the country will be put to a disadvantage. Another thing about this amendment is this. The motion is that the Bill should be postponed to the September session. Suppose the Government holds a session in June. Will this not be brought up then? There is a provision that if the report of a Select Committee is not taken into consideration within six months, it gets lost. What will happen then? So much about the amendment of my friend, Mr. Sykes. I do not know whether I shall be in order in making observations on the main motion at this stage.

Mr. President: You can do so at this stage.

Mr. B. Das: Thank you, Sir. I was observing yesterday that I wholeheartedly support the motion before the House, that the Bill to protect the sugar industry should be taken into consideration, and it will be ungraceful on the part of this House to postpone it to another session because we will not hear the sweet melodious voice of my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy then. This is the last protection Bill which he has introduced into the House and he had advocated it so well in the excellent speech that he made yesterday. It will be graceful to see him complete his work before he leaves the shores of India and when he does so, he will remember that he has supplied more sweets to the people of India by giving protection to sugar. My Honourable friend the Leader of the House pointed out that the Select Committee has amended clause 2 of the Bill so that not only shall protection be given to the sugar industry up to the 31st day of March, 1938, but it also proposes that an inquiry should be instituted to extend the scheme of protection up to the 31st day of March, 1946. I was one of those who differed in the Select Committee and was against that amendment. It means that the present House has no confidence in the Legislature that will come up in 1938. I consider the protection scheme is such that in seven years any sugar factory that will be installed in India will not only derive large benefit but will recover even the total capital invested on the plant. I do not exactly agree with my friend Mr. Sykes' analysis of the amount of protection given to the sugar industry stating that it is excess protection. I think the amount is already a little in excess, than is necessary. While this advantage is given to the sugar industry, why is it that this Legislature should tie the hands of those who will be Members of this House in 1938 and that will be a different House. It will be a completely popular House. Why should we be suspicious of the popular House in 1938 and tie their hands? That is the amendment introduced in the Select Committee, and I want the clause to stand as it was in the original Bill.

The Tariff Board in its recommendations has two interests in mind, not only to see India self-supporting regarding its sugar requirements, but it also wanted that the interests of the agriculturists should be borne in mind. I feel sorry that my Honourable colleagues in the Select Committee did not look into that aspect of the question. Because of that, Mr. Mitra and I were forced to append separate minutes of dissent drawing the attention of the House to the fact that the provisions of the Bill do not completely safeguard the interests of the agriculturists, and with that end in view there are certain amendments which I hope the House will consider and the House will approve. We had ample opportunity to discuss that aspect of the question with Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya, the Vice-President of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research, and the recommendation of the Tariff Board was that Rs. ten lakhs per annum would be provided to that Council so that they could carry out researches on sugarcane produced in different provinces. My Honourable friend the Leader of the House pleaded financial difficulties yesterday and Government was not in a mood in the Select Committee to concede Rs. 10 lakhs per annum from the date this Bill is enacted into an Act, but in the minute of dissent my friend Mr. Mitra and I have suggested that there should be a cess duty on sugar on the output basis. There are cotton cess duties, lac cess and tea cess. Why should there not be a cess on sugar factories on the production basis? Let this 10 lakhs be realised from the sugar manufacturers and let it be spent for the benefit of the agriculturist class. I am glad that my Honourable friend Sir Fazl-i-Husain is here. At present the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research spends all its money in Madras and in Bombay. The Bombay Government is very rich. It has got its cane farm at Manjeri over which it spends huge sums of money. (An Honourable Member: "The Madras Government is not rich".) The Madras Government derive the highest revenue among the Provincial Governments. It is the only solvent Government. Most of the money is spent on the experimental farm at Coimbatore and in the Bombay Presidency. I do not think that the Tariff Board intended that all the money should be spent on the provinces of Bombay and Madras. Bengal, Orissa and other provinces should also be looked after. Everybody knows that the U. P. has got large cane growing areas, so have Madras and Bombay. I suggest that this ten lakhs of rupees should be realised by cess duty from the sugar manufacturers and it should be spent on provinces on a population basis by starting cane farms, and these cane farms should be started in every division of the province, so that the poorest agriculturist should have access to these experimental cane farms. Everybody knows, the climate of Bengal and of Orissa is quite different from the climate of Bihar or that of the United Provinces. The rainfall, the humidity, the soil, etc., differ and sugar-cane does not grow in that richness and abundance as in the dry climate of the United Provinces. So to-day the policy of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research has been to place the rich provinces in this respect all along in a favourable position, i.e., Bombay, the United Provinces and Madras enjoy most favoured treatment whereas in equity the funds should be primarily spent on areas where there are no sugar-cane farms at present, and my suggestion is that in every three or four districts there should be a Government experimental farm created out of these 10 lakhs of rupees that will be allotted for the development of sugar-cane farms. Of course the Tariff Board recommended, and the Agricultural Council approved of it, that part of this money should be spent on a sugar research institute. That does not help the poor man and that does not help the agriculturist at all. That helps the sugar manufacturers of the country, and for that why should there not be another cess besides this 10 lakhs of rupees which they will contribute for the benefit of the agriculturist?

Then there is the other interest which has been brought up before the House always that any protective scheme that is introduced for the benefit of industries should conduce to the interests of India as a whole also. In the Select Committee that aspect of the question was discussed, but somehow Members could not come to an agreement although the particular amendment that I have sent in for licensing each sugar company in the interests of India was even drafted with the help of the Government draftsman, Mr. Mitchell. I do hope that the House will accept my amendment when it will be moved in order that the greatest rivals in the sugar industry of India at present, who are the Japanese and the Dutch people, who at present produce sugar at a cost of less than Rs. 4 a cwt. and bring it down to the Indian coasts, and then we buy sugar at Rs. 12 a cwt., may not reap an undue advantage; and if this protective tariff goes against the Dutch producers, then they will probably dismantle their sugar factories in Java and install them in the U. P. and other sugar-producing zones and thus defeat the purpose of this protective measure. Therefore in that amendment which I wish to move later on I have suggested that the Government should introduce a system of licenses whereby they will control licensees as to their country of origin and as to whether they have Indian interests primarily at heart.

Sir, one thing that is now apparent is the diminishing returns of the Government's customs receipts owing to these protective measures. At present sugar is bringing into the coffers of my Honourable friend the Finance Member Rs. 11 crores. As time will go on, India will produce all this sugar and the customs revenue will go down by 11 crores. Then how does this Government or its successor hope to carry on? So a system of taxation ought to be devised with the assistance of the profits which this or any other industry receiving protection derives and the Government must get a share of that. In the past the Government have had recourse to levying an excise duty, and there is an actual rumour in the country that Government are thinking seriously of levying an excise duty on the cotton mill products. Sir, for 20 years or more we resisted the underlying policy of Government levying an excise duty on cotton yarn and cotton piecegoods, which had been imposed at the instance of Lancashire, and we did not like any invidious taxation, a sort of poll tax or jhijhia on everybody, on every consumer. If excise duties are to be again imposed by the Government, the best method is—I know the Government are not getting sufficient income-tax out of the investors' class, who are deriving large profits, and the Government and the industry must share the profits to a certain extent

Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Your proposal would only apply to the case of the sugar industry and not to any other kind of industry?

Mr. B. Das: To every industry that gets Government protection. Therefore I have tabled an amendment which I hope Honourable Members have read, that after two years, every sugar factory must prepare balance sheets, a profit and loss account, and must submit it to the Government, and if a particular industry makes a profit of more than 6 per cent., the surplus profit will be shared by the Government and the investors, and I ask the Government to share the surplus profits to the extent that they have given the protection to that particular industry. Thereby the investors will pay and not the consumer, because at present it is the hard lot of the consumer, the poorer classes especially, that they always pay more and the richer classes escape scot free; and if Government and the House accept my suggestion, it is the investors' class that will pay. Now my friend, Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon, interrupted me. Surely he knows there are sugar factories in India that are driving 20 to 30 per cent. profits, and from reference in the address of His Excellency the Viceroy to this Assembly one can gather that already 18 factories are going to be installed. My friends of the capitalist class are shy of investing their money unless they derive fat dividends. The consumer is already paying high prices on sugar. Why should the consumer pay more, as will happen if the Government decide to put an excise duty on sugar on the production basis? So let it come out of the surplus profits. Thereby Government should get an adequate share of the profits.

Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon: Only from the sugar or also from any other industry receiving protection?

Mr. B. Das: I have in mind every protective industry. Sir, these are some of the observations I have to make at this stage and I support the notion of my Honourable friend, the Leader of the House.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. Ordinarily the procedure adopted by the Chair is that when a dilatory amendment is proposed as in this case, the original motion and the amendment are both allowed to be discussed together, so that it would be open to every Honourable Member to give reasons why he opposes the amendment and wishes the House to pass the original motion. On the present occasion the Leader of the House has explained his position, that he is willing to accept the dilatory motion in order to expedite the business before the House. The House is entitled to decide, apart from the question of expediting the work before the Assembly, whether they wish to discuss this in full in all its aspects. If there is a general feeling in the House that the suggestion of the Leader of the House should be accepted then the best course would be to deal in the first instance with the amendment only. I should like to know what the general feeling in the House is in that respect. (Some Honourable Members: "No postponement," "No postponement"; Some other Honourable Members: "Postpone," "Postpone.")

(At this stage Mr. Arthur Moore rose to his feet.)

Mr. President: Do you wish to say anything on this aspect of the question, Mr. Moore?

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): I was desiring, Sir, to say that we would like to see your suggestion adopted that we should immediately decide the amendment before the House.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): As the view of the House is not clear, I should like to ascertain exactly what the feeling is. Will those Honourable Members who are in favour of postponing the discussion of the Bill till September please rise in their seats. (Some Members rose.) Those against this view will now rise in their seats. (Some Members rose.) As the division is about equal, I will allow both the original motion and the amendment to be discussed together.

Kunwar Raghubir Singh (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I wish to congratulate the Government in general and the Honourable the Leader of the House in particular for bringing this Bill before the House in the interests of the sugar industry in the country. Sir, the Government generally, as we know, are slow to proceed. When there was a question of putting a duty on the import of wheat, they did not agree to it, but when we defeated the Government, they were forced to levy that duty. So, Sir, as you have yourself said this amendment has been described as a dilatory motion and I wish to oppose it, because our country is essentially an agricultural country and the interests of the agriculturists should always be kept in view. When I oppose the amendment and support the original motion, it is on two grounds. In the first place, I support the original motion in the interests of the cultivator himself. Formerly, when protection was proposed, the burden of that protection used to fall on the poor people, but now the case is otherwise. In this connection, I would quote the example of steel, paper, cement and chuddar. The protection on these articles fell on the poor people, but this protection which has now been proposed will not fall on the poor people because they generally use gur and not white sugar. So, Sir, as I said the benefit of the protection will be for the cultivator and will not fall on the poor people. Secondly, my province, the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, is a large sugar-producing province. Half the area of the whole of India which is under sugar cultivation is in the United Provinces. So,

[Kunwar Raghubir Singh.]

Sir, if no protection is given as is proposed in the present Bill, the factories will be closed down and only gur will be produced. In that case the price of gur will fall very low and it will hit the cultivator. Cultivators are poor people and even by the fall in the price of gur they cannot be benefited because now there is a tendency to increase the cultivation of sugar-cane, as they think that there is some benefit in that. So, Sir, in the interests of the consumer also the protective duty will be beneficial. Sir, I said in the beginning that the Government are slow, they act like an elephant. The elephant does not move unless it is goaded. So, Sir, we have been seeing since last year that the Government do not move unless they are pressed to do so. I have read Persian literature, and they speak highly of the hilm and burdbari (patience) of the elephant. But in this case the slow moving is affecting the cultivators in the land and so I wanted to congratulate the Government for bringing this measure before the House. The sooner it is passed, the better it will be for the consumers and the cultivators of sugar. On these two grounds, I support the Bill and oppose the amendment of the Honourable Mr. Sykes.

Mr. G. Morgan (Bengal: European): Sir, I must say that I fail to see why there should be any postponement of this measure. If it is on the question of time, that is another matter; but from the point of view of expediency, I think the measure should be proceeded with. I do not think any point has been brought forward by my Honourable friend Mr. Sykes by which the postponement of this measure would do any good at all. If it is the question of reducing the rate of duty, I do not think that is a point which is in favour of the cane grower because if the duty is reduced, I take it, that the factories and the buyers of cane would naturally in the ordinary circumstances offer a lower price for the cane. Now, Sir, I do not intend to give up the Bill. The Tariff Board's report has definitely stated certain points with regard to the burden on the consumer and in their report on page 92 they say that:

"More sugar than gur is consumed in the town, more gur than sugar is consumed in the villages. The poor Agriculturist consumes very little sugar and the proportion of consumption of sugar to gur is far greater in the case of the well-to-do than of the poorer classes."

My Honourable friend who spoke last put the case forward that the burden will not fall on the consumer, and there is no doubt that the gain will accrue to agriculture. With regard to what my Honourable friend Mr. P. Das said about the cess on factories, he seems to forget that the factories only produce about 100,000 tons and they are expected to produce something like 200,000 tons before the end of 1932-33. The gur and other sugar makers, which does not include refined sugar, are expected to produce something like 3 million tons. Now, if you were only to put a cess on factories, you would be only penalising one side of the manufacture, whereas the benefit of the protection is given to all manufacturers, thereby benefiting the cane grower. With regard to research, the Select Committee went into that very thoroughly, and after a great deal of discussion and evidence taken, we came to the conclusion that it would be very much better not to put a statutory amount in the Bill, because we were perfectly convinced that that money was not required at the rate of ten lakhs here from the date of this Bill, but we were quite prepared to guarantee that the necessary funds would be forthcoming when they were required but that schemes should be put up so that the Legislature might have an opportunity of criticising the actual work proposed by the Agricultural Research Council. I think myself after what I have heard in the Select Committee that it is a very much better plan than a long statutory obligation on the exchequer to find ten lakhs a year and crediting that to the Agricultural Research which might lead that bureau to spend money in a way which was not at that time actually necessary or advisable. With regard to licenses, we all agree with what my Honourable friend Mr. Das said but when it came to the actual question of licenses we saw great difficulties in making those licenses effective. I do not really know how it can be done. If "A" was granted a license and he transferred his shares on blank transfer, I do not know how that is going to be traced, and I do not know whether there is any law in India at the present moment which insists that every share shall be made over to the actual person purchasing that share, and I think my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, might investigate that a little further. Although one has a feeling that something of that kind is necessary, and therefore this particular point was put in the Bill, it is very doubtful from a practical point of view whether the actual system of licenses would meet the point which we all want to meet. Sir, I have very little more to say, except to repeat that much as one would like to see the time of these debates minimised. There is no doubt that there has been a great deal of time during this session when we could have got through a Bill of this description very easily; not having quorums, having holidays and one thing or another curtailed the time, but I cannot see any reason why, when we are sitting here as a Legislature, a Bill of this description, which is in my opinion an urgent one owing to the position of the manufacturers, should be postponed till the September Session. People who have been expecting this Bill to be passed early this session have naturally laid their plans accordingly, knowing that the revenue duty is at the same rate as is suggested in the Bill, but the revenue duty.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): 25 per cent. more.

Mr. G. Morgan: With the surcharge, but the revenue duty unfortunately is for 12 months and therefore people who are going to invest money.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: May I intervene for one moment? What is for 12 months is the 25 per cent. surcharge, but the revenue duty, which is equal to the protective duty, is in force without limit of time.

Mr. G. Morgan: I misunderstood, but at the same time it can be changed for a year.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): This can also be changed.

Mr. G. Morgan: But with difficulty. This Bill provides for protection for a period of seven years, and holds out a protective duty for a further period, but it can be of a greater or less amount after due enquiry; that is to say it can be reduced almost to nil, or it can be raised as circumstances make it necessary. So that, I will only repeat that there is no case made out except purely and simply the question of time, which can be got over, and if Honourable Members will devote themselves to short speeches and definite points, there is no reason why this Bill should not be finished to-day if Honourable Members put their minds together. There is very little to discuss really. Some of the amendments should not take up very much time, and they are really only slight variations of the Bill which does not affect the principle of the Bill. I suggest Honourable Members should devote themselves whole-heartedly to getting this Bill passed to-day.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): I am glad that the discussion is proceeding just now. I quite realise that the Bill does not propose to increase the duty on sugar which already exists. But I feel that the problem of the development of industry in India is a very urgent one. The pressure on land in the country in most of the provinces is too heavy. We see a large number of people who do not get sufficient work and especially the agriculturists during many months of the year do not get work. It is therefore necessary that we should treat the problem of development of industries as a very urgent one. I am therefore glad that this Bill not only has been introduced but is being pushed on. In the case of sugar, the Bill will not only develop the industry, but also will provide work for agriculture. The Bill, if properly framed and amended will not only protect sugar but also sugar-cane agriculture. There are one or two points in the report of the Tariff Board with which I do not agree, although I am in favour of development of industries. I would like the development of industries put at the cost of people who can bear the burden of that development. I should like that the people who cannot bear the burden of the tariffs should not be asked to bear that burden. The method of development of industries should be such that the burden upon the poor people will not be heavy and it will fall upon those shoulders which are capable of bearing that burden. The Tariff Board suggests that in the case of sugar protection which they propose, the burden will not fall upon the poor people. They suggest that the burden may be borne by the rich and by the middle class people, because they suggest that the poor people eat more gur than sugar and in the case of the rich and the middle class people they eat more sugar and less gur. But, Sir the Tariff Board has forgotten one fact, and it is this, that in our country the number of rich people and the number of middle class people can be counted by a few hundreds and they are not as large as in other countries. The Tariff Board also suggests that as sugar is consumed proportionately more by the urban population and less by the rural population, the burden will fall upon the urban and therefore the middle classes and the rich people. Here again I feel that the Tariff Board has not taken note of the fact that in our country the proportion of the urban population is very small indeed as compared with the rural population. I therefore feel that although it is true that the rich and the middle class people proportionately consume more sugar than gur and the poor people consume more gur than sugar, still on the whole the burden of the sugar protection duty will fall more upon the poor people than upon the rich and middle class people. I therefore feel that the method of developing this industry proposed is not the right method.

Secondly, Mr. President, the Tariff Board has disposed of one suggestion unfavourably, and that is that the Government should take shares in these sugar factories. I myself feel that if an industry is to be developed by proper methods, the State must have control over the protected industries. Unless the State has control over the protected industries, the incidence of the burden will not be made to fall upon those shoulders which can bear that burden; and in order that the State should have control over the industry, it is a much better plan that Government should agree to subscribe to the capital of the sugar factories if they will not agree to establish sugar factories themselves. If they subscribe to the capital of the sugar factories, it is only then that they will be able to control the sugar factories much better. I therefore feel that if the sugar industry is to be developed in a proper manner, it is much better that the Government by some method should get control over the sugar industry. It is to keep control over the imports and exports of the industry generally, that industries have been developed very rapidly in Russia. There is no other method by which industries can be rapidly developed unless Government themselves undertake the work of developing these industries. Now the Russian method is so successful that other countries have begun to adopt their five-year and ten-year plans. But these plans can be made if Government have got control over these industries. In the case of tariffs the incidence of the taxation or the burden falls indefinitely. We do not know exactly how it falls, and we cannot make it fall upon those shoulders where we would like it to fall. That is the disadvantage of trying to develop industries by means of protective duties as has been suggested by the Tariff Board's report as regards sugar. I would have certainly preferred a subsidy to the sugar industry instead of tariffs. It is true that in the case of a subsidy you have to find money to give the subsidies. But even in the case of a tariff, the burden falls upon the people in the country. Similarly if it is proposed that the industries should be developed by subsidies, the burden will fall on the people. The only difference is this, that in the case of subsidies we can, by means of proper taxation, throw the burden upon people who can bear that burden. Secondly, there is an advantage in the case of subsidies, and that advantage is that in the case of tariffs, the poor people really do not know that it is they who pay for the protection, whereas in the case of subsidies everybody in the country knows that he is paying for the development of that industry. Sir, this knowledge is of great use because if people are paying for the protection of sugar and if they know that they are paying for the protection of sugar, interest in the industry will be developed in the manner in which people want it to be developed. That can be best done by subsidies, but unfortunately the Bill before us is proposing tariffs; and therefore it is much better that while dealing with the Tariff Bill we should propose conditions by which the people will be able to have control and the protection given to the industry will not be wasted. I would therefore like that, while we give protection to the industry, we should take care of the other interest involved in the industry and in the country, and in that protection should be properly protected. This Bill proposes that the protection should be given first for 7 years and then extended for another period. Now, during this period it is quite possible that the prices of sugar may go up tremendously, and in that case the consumer will have to make a great sacrifice. It is quite true that to-day the prices of sugar are very low but nobody knows what will happen within the next 15 years. The prices may go up, and in these circumstances people will have to suffer great hardships and they will be making sacrifices which may be unnecessary. Therefore in the case of any protection Bill like this, especially if the protection extends over a long period, Government must take power to control the prices. Unless Government take that power, the consumer is likely to suffer unnecessarily. It is true that if we want to give protection, somebody has to pay for that protection, but why should we pay for that protection if the protection becomes unnecessary? I therefore feel that in this Bill Government should have taken power to control the prices. Even in England recently when they proposed duties in order to stop abnormal importations into the country, the English Government has taken power to control the prices in that Bill. This Bill for the protection of sugar is equally a Bill which imposes very heavy duties on sugar. It is therefore right that the Government of India should keep control over the prices. I do not suggest that that control will be necessary to be exercised immediately, because to-day the prices of sugar are low. But within 15 years, a period might come when it will be necessary for Government to control the prices. I therefore feel that as the English Act provides for the control of Government over the prices, our Act also should provide for the control of Government over the prices.

Similarly, if we are giving protection to an industry for 15 years as we are proposing to do in the case of sugar, we should insist that our protection will not be wasted. We must therefore lay down a condition that the industry will not waste the resources which it will get during the year of protection. We should therefore insist that the industry should not give dividends beyond a certain limit during the period of protection, and if the industry makes profits beyond a certain limit these profits should be utilised for developing the strength and the position of the industry. We must take some power by which this can be done, and I am sure that when we go into the details of the Bill, I shall be able to show that this can be done. Similarly when we are protecting an industry, we are doing it in order that Indians should get the benefit of employment. We must therefore lay down a condition that if the industry is to be protected by the sacrifices of the people in this country, then that industry must provide employment for Indians. There are several conditions which I would therefore lay down in order that the industry should get protection and the industry should be developed in the interests of the country. But as I have an amendment on the paper, I do not wish to go into the details of this amendment. I will only say this, that we are all anxious that the industry should be developed in our country, and I am perhaps as anxious, if not more, for the development of industries in this country in the interest of labour; but I am equally anxious that the burden of the protection should fall upon shoulders that are able to bear that burden. I therefore hope that when the Bill is considered, proper conditions will be laid down.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I wish to make a very brief statement by way of a personal explanation. When I announced this morning that the Government would be prepared to accept the amendment, my statement was dictated solely by a desire to meet the convenience and wishes of the House, and to expedite the disposal of business. It appears from what has occurred since then that I did not succeed fully in meeting the wishes of the House, and also that the plan I proposed does not seem to be very successful in the way of expediting the disposal of business. That being so, the Government on the whole think it will be better to revert to their original course and

If I would ask is that when Honourable Members come to the amendments they will make their speeches as brief as is reasonably possible.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I am very glad to hear that the Honourable the Leader of the House has agreed that this Bill should go through now, and I beg to accord my support to him in the appeal he has made to the House that in the discussion of the amendments there should be as little time wasted as possible. We are all anxious, on this side of the House at any rate, that the Bill should be passed into law, because this House as well as the Indian public generally is committed to the policy of protection. We have to protect our industries if they are to grow at all. Even Mr. Joshi, I was glad to hear, is entirely for protection because he realises that, unless these nascent industries are protected, the interests of labour will also suffer at the same time. Therefore all that I wish to say is this: that we should see to it that the passage of the Bill through the House is expedited and that there be no unnecessary talk.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to associate myself with the observations of the Leader of the Independent Party. Our interest is certainly to pass this Bill as early as possible, so that the sugar industry may be protected, and so protecting the sugar industry may be one of the helpful factors in solving the growing problem of unemployment in the country and giving increased opportunities for labour.

Seth Haji Abdcola Haroon: Sir, I do not want to take up much of the time of the House, as has been suggested by the Honourable the Leader of the House and other Honourable Members; but I want to say a few words. In the observations of Mr. Das and Mr. Joshi before the House, there was some suggestion that there should be some control on the profits on sugar and so on; but I want to tell my Honourable friends that up till now there was no protection, and till now very little sugar was produced in India—only about 100,000 tons last year, and only 19 factories are working at present, and till the end of 1930 the sugar companies were suffering very heavily. Fortunately or unfortunately the Government, owing to their own requirements put on more duties from 1930, and on account of that they are making a little money at present, say 20 or 30 per cent. But I want to draw the attention of my Honourable friends to the fact that, since 1930, the Indian sugar manufacturer was able to sell his sugar at Rs. 11-12 if the Calcutta market was Rs. 11: so they got a little advantage out of the freight. But if you find this year's quotation, it is this: when imported sugar is selling at Rs. 11 at Calcutta, the Indian manufacturers are selling at Rs. 10 a maund in the interior, say in the United Provinces and Bihar; and I want to make it clear that in the next year, as my friend Mr. Das said, about 16 or 18 new factories have been ordered to be erected; and I am glad to inform the House that all these factories have been, to my information, ordered by Indians. Not a single factory has been ordered by foreigners or Europeans according to my information. I say let them be allowed to start manufacturing, and then all these ideas of control and license and taking the profits can be seen to afterwards. Let us see how they are spending in the next one or two years and then you have the right to do whatever you like; but at present, if you postpone the Bill, it will do great harm to the industry and to the country. With these few words I am opposing the postponement of the Bill.

Lala Hari Raj Swarup (United Provinces : Landholders): Sir, I am glad that the Leader of the House has said that he will proceed with the Bill just now and not postpone it till the Simla Session. From the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Sykes, yesterday I gathered that his idea was not only to postpone the Bill, but to shelve it for all time to come. The chief argument he advanced for postponing it was that sufficient time was not given to the consumers and to the growers of cane to discuss the various provisions of the Bill and the recommendations of the report. I may inform the House that the report was out as early as last year and that it has been before the country for over a year; the draft Bill was also presented before this House in the beginning of this session and the Select Committee's Report and the final Bill has been before this House for more than a month; and so under these circumstances there is no force in the argument for postponing this Bill.

As for the main provisions of the Bill I think it is entirely in the interests of the agriculturists that we should pass this Bill in this session. As was claimed by Mr. Morgan, if the sugar industry is not protected and an outlet is not found for surplus gur, it is quite certain that the price of gur, which is already low, will go down to less than a rupee per maund; and it will mean ruin for about 20 million persons who directly depend on the cultivation of cane. The Tariff Board also say that in the whole country about 3 million acres of land is under cane, and on account of the introduction of imported varieties of cane, the output is expected to be exceeded by 50 per cent.; and if no outlet is found for this fifty per cent., the result will be that there will be a depression in the market for gur; and so in order to ensure the safety of the cultivator, it is necessary that we should pass this Protection Bill just now. So I oppose the motion of Mr. Sykes for postponement.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I do not think it is necessary for me to reply to the debate.

Mr. President: The question is that the consideration of the Bill be postponed till the September session.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the fostering and development of the sugar industry in British India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

The question is that clause 2 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I move:

"That after clause 2 the following new clauses be inserted and the remaining clauses be re-numbered accordingly:

"3. Undertakings engaged in the manufacture of sugar shall submit to the Government of India, if already working not later than 30th April, and if to be established in future, before commencing work, a declaration whereby they pledge themselves to keep prices of the article during the period when such protective duties are in force at such figures as the Government of India may approve.

4. Notwithstanding the passing of this Act the protective duties shall not apply unless the condition laid down in section 3 and the following conditions are found by the Government of India to have been fulfilled :

Undertakings engaged in the manufacture of sugar shall submit to the Government of India not later than the 30th of April in the case of those already working and before commencing work in the case of those that may be established in the future, a declaration whereby they pledge themselves for the financial year during which the protective duties are in force :

- (a) not to pay any fee or equivalent sum to the Directors or management for the said financial year,
- (b) not to pay to shareholders and other participants with limited liability a greater sum by way of annual dividend than what they would get at 6 per cent. on the actual capital invested in the undertaking by the persons concerned,
- (c) to employ any further surplus in consolidating the position of the undertaking in the manner approved by the Government of India,
- (d) not to employ any one who is not an Indian except with the permission of the Government of India; and
- (e) to produce a certificate that the labour conditions in the undertaking are satisfactory from a committee of three persons appointed by the Government of India for that purpose.

5. If an undertaking manufacturing sugar fails to perform its duties under sections 3 and 4 within a fixed period the Governor General in Council may impose on those responsible to perform these duties the penalty of a daily fine not exceeding one thousand rupees."

Sir, the object of this amendment, as I explained in my previous speech, is to lay down certain conditions by which the consumer need not necessarily suffer and the industry may also develop in a proper manner. The first part of the amendment, therefore, proposes that the Government of India should have power to control the prices. I have stated in my previous speech that in the English Act, provision has been made giving power to Government to control prices under certain circumstances. The second part of my amendment provides that while the whole country will be making sacrifices by paying perhaps a hundred per cent. more price than the price which the consumer will pay, it is but proper that the Directors and management of sugar factories should also make sacrifices. Moreover, if the Directors are made to undergo some sacrifices, that will be a natural protection to the consumer, because in that case the Directors will not insist upon the protection being unnecessarily continued. If there is a danger of protection being continued, that danger will also exist in the case of the Directors. They will not get their fees during the period of protection, so that the Directors would like that the protection should cease as early as possible.

Then, Sir, I propose that although the shareholders need not be asked to make all the sacrifices during the period of the protection, still they should not be allowed to use the money which the country will place in the hands of the companies for their own benefit. I hold, Sir, that the surplus money that will remain with the companies should be utilised for strengthening the position of the industry by methods which the Government of India may prescribe.

Then, Sir, another clause proposes that the sugar factories which will receive protection by the sacrifices of the country should not employ non-Indians without the permission of the Government of India. I am not suggesting for a moment that no non-Indians should be employed at all, but what I say is that if non-Indians have to be employed at all in sugar factories, they should be employed with the permission of the Government of India.

Then, Sir, the last clause proposes that if the industry is to be protected, then all interests involved in that industry should be properly protected. I therefore propose that during the period of the protection, the company which is engaged in the manufacture of sugar should be asked to produce a certificate to prove that their labour conditions are fair and just. Mr. President, while going through the Report of the Tariff Board, I observed a few things which are very clear. The first thing which is quite obvious is that the wages in India in places which produce sugar are the lowest. The Indian sugar is produced with the lowest wages. That is one fact which has come out very clearly from the Report of the Tariff Board.

Then I see a paragraph in the Tariff Board's Report to the effect that the general labour conditions are fair. I should like to know from the Honourable the Leader of the House what inquiry the Tariff Board made about the labour conditions in the sugar factories before expressing that view; if they had made any inquiry, I should like to know the details. It is not quite right for the Tariff Board to give a general survey of the labour conditions unless they go into the details and place before us full details as to the hours of work adopted, the wages paid, the conditions of labour and such other things. I would therefore suggest to the Government of India that they should issue instructions to the Tariff Board when they undertake the inquiry suggested to make detailed inquiries about labour conditions in the industry.

Then, Sir, I would say only one word before I finish. I am not an expert draftsman. I have placed my views before the House. I quite realise that when a man who is not an expert draftsman drafts a long amendment like the one which I have proposed, there may be a few mistakes. I therefore suggest that the Honourable the Leader of the House and the House as a whole should consider my amendment on its merits instead of going into the technicalities and the small points contained in my amendment. If the principle of my amendment is approved, then certainly it is open to the Government expert draftsman to put my amendment in a proper form. I hope, Sir, the House will accept my amendment.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: I appreciate the high ideal that has actuated my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi to put forward this amendment, but I do not know how we can accept it. The difficulty is that there would be so many factories manufacturing sugar, and if one of the factories failed to comply with one of these requirements, it would mean that the whole of this protection would be withdrawn or should not be enforced. There is also a provision that you should employ no one who is not an Indian. I think it is correct to say that even in Soviet Russia they employ experts from America in order to train their men. There are so many impossibilities in this amendment that I think it will not be practicable to accept it, but I appreciate the high ideal that has actuated the Mover of the amendment.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): I appreciate only one principle underlying this long amendment, and that principle is that the surplus profit, that is, the profit over and above the bank rate of interest, should not go entirely into the pockets of the shareholders and into the pockets of the managing directors, but it ought to be divided proportionately between capitalists and those persons who helped to produce the profit, and with this principle I am in sympathy. But I cannot endorse the whole of the amendment as it is drafted. So, I beg to oppose this amendment in spite of my sympathy with one of the principle that underlies this Bill.

Mr. G. Morgan: Sir, I regret, however high the principle of this amendment is, that I must oppose it from a practical point of view. My Honourable friends, Mr. Mitra and Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, have stated the impracticability of applying these amendments to business concerns. The first difficulty would be that my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi wishes to assess all undertakings engaged in the manufacture of sugar. If he goes over all the undertakings which manufacture sugar in India, I do not know what amount the Finance Member would have to put down for administration. I think that would defeat the whole object that Mr. Joshi has in mind. Also when we come to the sub-clause of this amendment, which says not to pay anybody anything, it practically means this. It will defeat the whole object which he is anxious to secure. Capital will not come into concerns of this description. (Mr. N. M. Joshi: "I offer 6 per cent.") Treasury bills were offering $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., and why should I take the risk of the sugar market? When I can go to the Finance Member's office, or his treasuries, or whatever you may call it, and can get anything from $5\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. to $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. during the year, there is no risk whatever except the risk of India floating away, so why I should invest in sugar concerns? My Honourable friend I am afraid has not thought out in a practical way what this amendment really means, and I would appeal to him to withdraw it before further remarks are made on this subject.

Mr. K. P. Thampan (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I wish to associate myself with every word that Mr. Joshi has said in this connection and support his amendment very heartily. In the first place, the sugar industry is only a subsidiary industry. The primary industry is the cultivation of sugar-cane. If the sugar-cane is not cultivated, what will these factories do? They will have to pull down their plants and wind up. So, to keep these factories going you must have a steady and unfailing supply of sugar-cane for which you must ensure a fair price to sugar-cane cultivators. I take it that Mr. Joshi when he talked about regulating the prices, also intended that the prices of raw materials should be regulated and controlled by the Government of India. Mr. Morgan protested that if the dividend is limited to 6 per cent. no one would invest his capital in this industry. With regard to capital becoming shy how can we tax the consumer to enable these capitalists to find safe investments and get a high percentage of interest? The consumer is not interested at all as to who the industrialist is and whether he gets a fair return or not. The other points in the amendment are very reasonable. You will therefore be justified in taxing the consumer with a cent. per cent. duty only if the wider interests of the country are safeguarded. I have therefore no hesitation in supporting the amendment which Mr. Joshi has so ably moved.

Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon: I associate myself with what has fallen from my friends, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad and Mr. Morgan. My Honourable friend Mr. Thampan wants to fix the price of sugar-cane. I do not think that at this moment Government can do anything because there are several provinces, and if you go through the Report of the Tariff Board you will find that Bihar is producing cane at about 4 annas, whereas Bombay does so at 12 annas, and the United Provinces at six annas. And what rate can the Government of India fix? When sugar factories are established, I think it will be advisable for the Provincial Governments to do it, instead of the Government of India. I do not want to say much on this amendment, though I can say something. I oppose the amendment.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think the speeches to which we have listened will have convinced the Honourable the Mover that there is at any rate a considerable body of opinion in the House that is not inclined to accept his amendment.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: Because this is a capitalist House.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid the Government must associate themselves with that body of opinion. We all of us recognise that my Honourable friend has national interests very much at heart, and we appreciate the importance he attaches to doing what is possible for the various interests which may be adversely affected in a scheme of protection. But on this occasion he has asked the House in a single amendment to adopt so many different principles, some of which are highly controversial, and to apply a series of remedies, some of which are surrounded with very great practical difficulties in carrying them out, that I am afraid it is quite impossible for the Government to accept his amendment, and I must oppose it.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That after clause 2 the following new clauses be inserted and the remaining clauses be re-numbered accordingly:

3. Undertakings engaged in the manufacture of sugar shall submit to the Government of India, if already working not later than 30th April, and if to be established in future, before commencing work, a declaration whereby they pledge themselves to keep prices of the article during the period when such protective duties are in force at such figures as the Government of India may approve.

4. Notwithstanding the passing of this Act the protective duties shall not apply unless the condition laid down in section 3 and the following conditions are found by the Government of India to have been fulfilled:

Undertakings engaged in the manufacture of sugar shall submit to the Government of India not later than the 30th of April in the case of those already working and before commencing work in the case of those that may be established in the future, a declaration whereby they pledge themselves for the financial year during which the protective duties are in force:

- (a) not to pay any fee or equivalent sum to the Directors or management for the said financial year,
- (b) not to pay to shareholders and other participants with limited liability a greater sum by way of annual dividend than what they would get at 6 per cent. on the actual capital invested in the undertaking by the persons concerned,
- (c) to employ any further surplus in consolidating the position of the undertaking in the manner approved by the Government of India,
- (d) not to employ any one who is not an Indian except with the permission of the Government of India: and
- (e) to produce a certificate that the labour conditions in the undertaking are satisfactory from a committee of three persons appointed by the Government of India for that purpose.

5. If an undertaking manufacturing sugar fails to perform its duties under sections 3 and 4 within a fixed period the Governor General in Council may impose on those responsible to perform these duties the penalty of a daily fine not exceeding one thousand rupees."

The motion was negatived.

Clauses 3 and 4 were added to the Bill.

Mr. B. Das: I move:

"That after clause 4 the following new clause be inserted and the remaining clauses be re-numbered accordingly :—

'5 (1) In order to secure that sugar factories in British India shall be developed and controlled in the best interest of India, the Governor General in Council may, by Notification in the Gazette of India, make rules—

- (a) requiring that no person shall own a sugar factory without a licence in that behalf,
- (b) prescribing the qualifications of persons to whom such licences may be granted,
- (c) prescribing the duration and conditions of such licences,
- (d) determining the authority by whom such licences shall be granted, and
- (e) generally to carry out the purposes of this section.

(2) In making such rules the Governor General in Council may provide that a contravention thereof shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five thousand rupees on each occasion'."

I have already referred to the subject-matter of this clause in my speech this morning, and my Honourable friend Mr. Morgan also referred to it. I agree partly with my friend Mr. Morgan, that there are difficulties. The Government of India will have to administer this clause if it becomes law. I have little hand in regulating the action of the Government of India. I am not going to say how they will administer it. They administer so many Ordinances and so many enactments, and I do hope that they will so frame their rules and regulations as not to offend their conscience or the conscience of their friends. I do not want to discuss the subject-matter of the clause that has been very often discussed on the floor of the House, but I do not want persons outside the British Empire, who are making large sums of money by selling sugar to India, to come and install sugar factories in India and thereby take advantage of the protection scheme. I know what happened when we gave protection to the match industry. A Swedish match combine came and took advantage. Then we know that the Japanese have purchased some cotton mills in Bombay and they are taking advantage of the cotton mill protection. There is a strong rumour that the shoe making firm of Bata are trying to install factories in India, so that the shoe-makers and cobblers may be put out of their profession and vocation. It is time that as a nation we should try and regulate the special concessions to an industry; owing to the heavy protection to the industry, there is every likelihood of Javanese sugar factories being dismantled in Java and installed here. I understand and appreciate the difficulties, but it is time that the Government of India should make a start, and I think this is the right occasion to make the start.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: Sir, I rise to oppose this amendment. By introducing this amendment my friend Mr. Das is unconsciously giving a weapon into the hands of the Government whom I will not trust with it.

[Mr. K. P. Thampan.]

In Madras, the sugar industry is in the hands of a European company. I know the conditions prevailing in my part of the Presidency and if this amendment is adopted, the Madras Government is sure not to allow hereafter any Indian firm to start a sugar factory to compete with it. We remember, though it was long ago, what happened to the Swadeshi Steam Navigation Company in South India. The Madras Government did their level best at the instance of the Europeans to throttle it, with the result that the company collapsed after a short existence. Though industries are a transferred subject,—excuse my plain speaking,—the Ministers are much worse than the European Executive Councilors in this respect. If Mr. Das' intention is that hereafter no foreigner should be allowed to start sugar factories, and wishes to prevent foreign capital from being used, he should provide specifically for it in the amendment. That would be a better and more direct way of dealing with the subject. I have great objection to this clause being passed.

Lala Hari Raj Swarup: I have great pleasure in supporting the amendment moved by Mr. Das. The danger that Mr. Das apprehends is a very real one. There is a real danger that foreigners, especially from Java, would try to capture this new industry in this country. The Bombay Government the other day appointed a Committee to go into the sugar industry, especially with reference to the Deccan Canals, and the following remarks of that Committee are pertinent in this connection. The Committee says:

"In the meantime, and this warning has come from the Sugar Technologist himself, as well as from other sources, representatives of the Java sugar combines are scouring the country examining the possibilities in order to be ready at the critical moment to swoop down, secure the most suitable sugar factory sites and possibly corner the entire industry. Their financial resources appear to be unlimited. Their experience in the production of sugar cane and in the manufacture of white sugar and their hold on the white sugar market place them in a position to make it almost impossible for the Indian to compete with them for some years to come."

Some members of the Committee admit that the industry is in danger of being monopolised by foreigners and think that if the industry is to be saved for Indian interests immediate action by the Central Government is imperative. Sir, the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce issued a circular the other day in which they mentioned that Mr. Thomas Batty, the famous sugar manufacturer, is planning to build a huge factory near Calcutta in order to take advantage of the high tariff wall. We discussed this question in detail in the Select Committee also, but we found certain difficulties on account of which we could not incorporate this clause in the Bill because the whole principle of commercial discrimination is under discussion by the Round Table Conference and some of the members think that it would be better to await the decisions of that body. But I differ from that view and I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Das, that we should safeguard the Indian industries and the interests of Indians as against the inhabitants of other countries, and especially we have to safeguard ourselves against Java. Sir, with these words I support this amendment.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, though there may be some substance in my Honourable friend Mr. Thampan's apprehensions, yet I think I should support the amendment of my friend, Mr. Das. Sir, agriculture is a provincial transferred subject and mostly in the hands of Indian Ministers and we need not be so apprehensive that everything will be sacrificed in the interests of foreigners. But the Select Committee itself did not lose sight of the fact altogether and in paragraph 4 of their report they say :

"In view of fears which have been expressed that interests outside the British Empire might take advantage of the tariff wall to establish sugar factories in India to the disadvantage of Indian interests, we recommend that the Governor General in Council should watch any developments in this direction with a view to considering whether any action should be taken to prevent control of the industry or of any considerable part of it from falling into foreign hands."

So the Select Committee also provided against contingencies of which mention has been made by my friend, Mr. Hari Raj Swarup; and since the present Act covers a period of 7 years, if some such provision as that proposed by Mr. Das is accepted, that will also provide for some of the points raised in earlier amendments by my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, because in granting the license the Government might stipulate that the interests of the labourers should also be secured; and the Honourable the Leader of the House has said that as regards Mr. Joshi's amendment, had it not been a big omnibus amendment, he would perhaps think of accepting some of his suggestions.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, why does the Honourable Member ascribe that statement to me? I am quite unconscious of having said anything like it.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: So if this amendment be accepted, then there should be some provision to secure the interests of labour as well as general Indian interests, to a certain extent.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I should like to express my great indebtedness to Members of this House for the brevity with which they have given their views, and I shall certainly strive to imitate them. I think, Sir, the House will easily realize that Government do not find it possible to accept this amendment. As my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, has said, the matter was considered by the Select Committee and the view expressed by the majority is what Mr. Mitra read, namely:

"In view of fears which have been expressed that interests outside the British Empire might take advantage of the tariff wall to establish sugar factories in India to the disadvantage of Indian interests, we recommend that the Governor General in Council should watch any developments in this direction with a view to considering whether any action should be taken to prevent control of the industry or of any considerable part of it from falling into foreign hands."

That, Sir, the Government of India are quite prepared to do (Hear, hear); but I do not think it is desirable at this stage that Government should be given the extensive power which the amendment proposes to give them as regards the licensing of sugar factories, since the power sought to be given, especially by clause (c) prescribing the duration and conditions of the license, is a very extensive power indeed. Apart from that, the big question that my Honourable friend wishes to raise in order to prevent the control of the industry from passing into the hands of people outside the British Empire is a very big question which requires separate treatment, I think, if it is ever to be effectively handled. My Honourable friend referred to the match industry, but I should like to point out that that is rather a special case. That was a case in which a firm—a very remarkable firm—had acquired control over the match industry not in one country or even two or three countries, but in countries all over the world, and I am not aware of any thing similar to that in the sugar industry. And since the conditions in India are such as not to permit of the establishment in India, except possibly in a very few areas, of factories of a magnitude and scale comparable to the factories which exist in Java, it does not seem to me likely that any development in the direction apprehended could proceed otherwise than fairly slowly; that is to say, we should have warning, and I do not think that there is any danger that the development which is apprehended might take place so rapidly that there would be no time left to interfere. For these reasons, Sir, I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, in view of the controversial nature of the question, I beg for leave of the House to withdraw my motion.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.
Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 6 stand part of the Bill.

Mr. E. F. Sykes (Bombay: European): Sir, I shall take exactly two minutes over this amendment. Yesterday . . .

Mr. President: Please move your amendment first.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: Sir, I beg to move:

“That for clause 6 the following be substituted:

‘6. Whoever in buying sugarcane from a grower of sugarcane pays him a price which is less than eight annas per maund of 82 2/7th pounds avoirdupois shall be punishable by fine which may extend to two thousand rupees for each offence.’”

Yesterday, Sir, we saw that the Tariff Board had adopted fair selling prices, one for cane and one for sugar. They made ample provision that the manufacturer should get his fair selling price, but they made no provision for the grower of cane to get his fair selling price. This amendment I have moved is to fill up the gap in the logical sequence of the Bill. Sir, I move.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar (East Punjab: Sikh): Sir, I oppose the amendment notwithstanding the fact that I represent agricultural interests and not the manufacturers of sugar though I feel that the amendment has some force in principle. It is, however, very difficult to put it into practice. The Sugar Committee of 1920 suggested some two or three ways of dealing with it. One of them was that it should have some relation to the price of white sugar, and it is quite a sound principle that the price of sugarcane should be fixed in relation to the price of white sugar. If we fix the price of sugarcane as Mr. Sykes wants it, at annas eight per maund, and if tomorrow the price of white sugar falls, what has the manufacturer to do? At this time when we are giving protection as an incentive to the sugar industry and to increase cultivation on up-to-date methods of sugarcane, I do not think it would be advisable to fix the price at such a figure arbitrarily. If we do this, the result would be that the people who are now thinking of starting new factories will be prevented from doing so, thinking that it may not be a paying proposition if we fix it too high, because Java sugar at this time has not got enough market due to protection being granted in all countries. So, unless there is a large number of factories established, the demand for sugar-cane will not be great and the price will naturally fall. In Gorakhpur we find even at present, where there are many factories, that the price has actually gone up. The Tariff Board also found at many places the figure had gone up as high as 14 annas a maund due to local competition and therefore it would not be right for us to deprive the cultivator of the benefit of competition between the manufacturers and thus having a higher figure than even 8 annas a maund. It is more or less a local matter and the Local Governments are competent to deal with it. They can make inquiries into it according to the local areas where the sugar-cane is grown and where the factories are established so that the cultivators should have a fair price for the produce according to the demands and the supply in that particular area. I do not want to take up the time of the House and would content myself by saying that it is not proper to arbitrarily fix the figure at 8 annas but to leave it to the Local Governments to do what they think fit in the interests of the cultivator.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir I have very great sympathy with Mr. Sykes in his desire to fix the price level. But I can never imagine that the price level can ever be fixed by penal code. It is really one of those things which could be arranged by an economic measure. If we begin to apply the penal code to fix the price level or if we begin to apply the penal code to regulate the exchange and currency policy, then I am afraid we will not know where we are. What Mr. Sykes is aiming at is a thing which we all desire to have, but it should be achieved by an economic measure and not by penal action which he proposes.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I quite agree with what has fallen from all the Honourable Members who have spoken as to the importance of doing what is practicable to secure a fair price for the sugar-cane grower, but I also agree with the last two speakers that this House ought not to accept my Honourable friend's amendment, firstly, because it is impossible to fix a price which will fit the conditions of all the provinces in India, and, secondly, because the actual enforcement of whatever might be considered a fair price is essentially a local matter. If anything is to be done, I hold very strongly it would have to be done by local legislation and by the Local Governments, and I fear it is quite impracticable to achieve that end by any legislation adopted here.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That for clause 6 the following be substituted:

'6. Whoever in buying sugar-cane from a grower of sugar-cane pays him a price which is less than eight annas per maund of 82 $\frac{2}{7}$ th pounds avoirdupois shall be punishable by fine which may extend to two thousand rupees for each offence.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 6 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6 was added to the Bill.

The Schedule was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is :

"That the Preamble stand part of the Bill."

Mr. B. Das: I do not move my amendment.*

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I move that the Bill, as amended, be passed. I desire only to thank Honourable Members once again for the admirable brevity of their speeches.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I feel very happy that this Bill is being passed and that this is the last crowning glory to my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy. Sir, as I observed yesterday, he was the first to be instrumental over the protective measure for steel and, as things are happening at present, probably the Sugar Protection Act will be the last protective measure that will be passed on the floor of this House. It may be that his successors may not find opportunities to give protection owing to the variation in the Legislature and owing to the temperament of the new Legislature. Sir, as probably this is the last piece of legislation that my Honourable friend will bring to a completion in this House, I wish to take this opportunity of saying that I feel very grateful for the sympathetic attitude that he has always adopted in considering very difficult points that we have very often raised during the discussion on protective measures, especially in the case of those issues that raise complicated and complex problems both within and without the British Empire. He has invariably, in his usual humorous and learned way, tried to meet our points and tried to explain the difficulties of the Government. If rumour be true, Sir, my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy will represent India at the Ottawa Conference where some of the very problems that we have discussed under the various protective enactments that are the fruit of the hard labours of the Honourable the Leader of the House will be brought up. And I hope that my Honourable friend, even when he is separated from us by 10,000 miles, will bear in mind the effort that we made always to bring before him the view point of the public and the view point of the masses, and I hope he will then also keep the interests of India at heart.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Sir, in supporting the motion that the Bill be passed, I wish just to say a few words not on the subject of the Bill so much but as regards the Honourable the Commerce Member, who is the Leader of the House. Sir, I wish sincerely to express our very high appreciation of the manner in which he has discharged his duties, very onerous duties, in this Assembly. As the Leader of the House during the years that I have been associated with this Assembly, I have not noticed a single occasion on which he has not sought to meet our viewpoint and our convenience.

*"In the preamble to the Bill for the words and figures beginning with the word 'for a period ending with' and ending with the words 'for the remainder of the period' the following be substituted :

'by temporarily increasing the import duties leviable on sugar'."

1 P.M. The way he has met us and the pleasant relation which he has maintained with all sections of the House has left a very pleasant impression upon us all. I am sure when he leaves India, he will carry with him the cordial good wishes of all who have been associated with him in this House. I have seen him piloting a number of Bills in this Assembly, and as I am one of the confirmed protectionists, and as protection is the policy which has been deliberately adopted by the country, our special thanks are due to the Honourable Sir George Rainy for the excellent manner in which he has piloted not only this measure (Applause) but also other similar measures. He has shown great ability and skill not only as a Leader of the House, but as a responsible Member in charge of the Commerce Department, and we all hope that in his retirement he will find other means of occupying his valuable time and utilising the very valuable experience which he has gained in the interests of India. (Applause.)

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: My Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, the Chief Whip of my Party, when speaking on the merits of this question, rightly concluded by paying a rich tribute to the Honourable the Leader of the House who has been very kind in the lobby to us and not very cruel on the floor of the House. (Laughter.) Sir, as the Leader of the House, it has been our necessary duty to measure swords with him, and during the last five years, I can say without any fear of contradiction, that I attacked him sometimes with a rapier and sometimes with a bludgeon. I do not regret those attacks, and if he continues to be the Leader of the House, I promise to continue the same attacks which will be delivered in the same spirit; but when he leaves us, we feel that the parliamentary spirit that he has introduced in this House—and the opportunity for what he was pleased to describe as “genial parliamentary ferocities”, for which he too has been responsible by the consistent opposition that he put against us, even sometimes when the Government were in the wrong—we feel that the parliamentary spirit in which he has taught us how to oppose each other will stay behind. Sir, there were occasions when we rose to the heights of parliamentary fervour and he rescued us and his own side from falling into the depths of unparliamentary,—what shall I say,—disfavour. I do not want to praise the Honourable the Leader of the House on this occasion, for I am not concerned with his past any more than in politics one can ever be concerned with the past. So far as his future is concerned, even though we have not yet agreed with him on past occasions, the present is an indication that we will be very much in agreement with each other, for on the question of protection when I gently suggested this morning to him that we would rather pass this measure before we rise for lunch instead of postponing it to Simla, the Honourable the Leader of the House shook his head, thought about it and agreed with us. (Laughter.) That shows that when suggestions that are acceptable to both sides are made, both sides agree to meet each other. He helped this country in introducing protection for sugar and thereby concluded the first Chapter in the Book of Protection. Sir, you are aware that in the last century, the policy of Government was to commit this country to free trade because the British Government was committed to free trade. Curiously enough, it is a happy coincidence that the British people are fast committing themselves to tariffs, following in this particular instance the example set by the Government of India and the Honourable the Commerce Member. Sir, I congratulate him in conquering the hearts of his own people with the help of the opposition to the cause of tariff. (Hear, hear.) I think it will not be too much for me to say—all genuine praise is short—it will not be too much for me to say that from the Treasury Benches the Leader of the House has sometimes, as to-day, led us captive. (Cheers.)

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, I am glad to get this opportunity of speaking and I welcome this occasion of giving protection to this industry which we, zamindars in India, value a great deal. This Bill, I am sure, will improve the financial condition of a great number of people who are engaged in agriculture. Sugar is an industry which has been thrown into the background for a long time in the past, and this protection which is given by this measure will help in rebuilding that industry which we had in our heart a great deal. This Bill would serve as a real boon to the people of India, and on this occasion I must congratulate the Honourable the Leader of the House in bringing this measure so successfully to a conclusion. His genial spirit and his masterful mind is self-evident, according to an Indian proverb:

“Jadoo woh hai jo sur pay chhuh ke bolay”.

Now, Sir, when the praise has come from the Opposition Benches, there could not be more evident proof of the masterful manner in which he guided the destinies in this House. Of course praise from those people who always co-operated with him would not be of such value as praise from those people who sit in Opposition to him. I think it will be a great loss to the House and to the country and to the Government which he so faithfully served when we will find that his seat will not be occupied by him. It is a great conquest which he made in this House since he has been the Leader of the House, that practically on all the important questions in which Government felt very keenly, Government got their way, and a man can be judged always by the achievements which he has made and the net result can be judged by the results of the actions and the achievements which the Honourable Sir George has made in this House. With these words, I conclude.

Mr. G. Morgan: In supporting the third reading of this Bill, a great deal

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Of sugar to sugar the speeches.

Mr. G. Morgan: The speeches which I have listened to and which have been made from the other side of the House have certainly been sweet and justifiably so. On behalf of the European Group, I would like to say that we have all appreciated the Leadership of this House by my friend the Honourable Sir George Rainy. There is only one thing I am sorry for, as a fellow-Scotchman,—a “brother Scot” as we say. I am sorry if he is going back to a town called Auld Reekie which translated is Edinburgh. If he is going back there, he will have almost a daily regret—I know that town myself—that the sun has disappeared from the sky. I am quite certain there will be many days when he walks along Prince’s Street that he will say, “I should like to be back in New Delhi, even in April”.

Sir, I associate myself with all the remarks which have fallen from the previous speakers.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I am not sure that the position does not demand that I should ask one of my colleagues to introduce a Bill which might be called the Sir George Rainy (Prevention of Speeches) Protection Bill (Laughter); that, it seems to me, is perhaps the most urgent need of the moment. But, Sir, quite seriously, I am more grateful than I can say to my Honourable friends in all parts of the House for what they have said. No one knows better than myself how little deserved some of these things are. It is true it has been my aim and intention since I became Leader to try, whenever it was possible, to divine what was the general wish and view of the House and see how far I could go to meet it. I was trying it this morning, but I made a bad shot and I had to turn back on my tracks and try it the other way. What I do feel deeply is this, that the Members of this House have made it very plain to me that they do not demand from the Members of the Government perfect performance, but are quite content, where the will and spirit and intention is present, to accept a great deal less than perfect performance as service which they will accept and for which they are grateful. I cannot possibly say more, Sir, but I do assure the House that I very deeply feel the honour they have done me and I am more grateful than I can say.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill be passed.
The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the Bill to provide against the publication of statements likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of certain foreign States. The House was adjourned yesterday to enable Honourable Members to meet together and settle upon an agreed amendment. Will the Honourable Member the Foreign Secretary explain what has happened?

Sir Evelyn Howell (Foreign Secretary): Sir, I am afraid I cannot promise an agreed amendment, but I shall do my best to explain the position. Yesterday, Sir, with your permission, I moved an amendment which stood in my name as No. 22 on the printed paper, and I did so as a purely consequential amendment. The clause now re-numbered as 3 formed part of the original Bill, and it emerged from the Select Committee substantially unaltered. I did not therefore think it necessary to go into the merits of the clause at all, and I did not do so; but I moved the purely consequential amendment that in place of certain words certain other words should be substituted. If I have your permission, Sir, now I would like to move a revised amendment in place of that which stands as No. 22; the revised amendment runs as follows:

"That for clause 3 as re-numbered the following be substituted:

"The provisions of sections 99A to 99G of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and of sections 27B to 27D of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall apply in the case of any book, newspaper or other document containing matter which is derogatory of a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India or of the consort or son or principal Minister of such Ruler, and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State in like manner as they apply in the case of a book, newspaper or document containing seditious matter within the meaning of those sections."

That, Sir, is the revised amendment which I now desire to move. It is perhaps necessary for me, in view of what passed yesterday, when the clause as a whole was attacked by my friend, Mr. Munshi, to say a word or two about the clause as a whole, and then I shall give some explanation with regard to those words which figure again in this revised amendment, but were deleted by agreement from clause 2 of the Bill. The provisions of the sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure which have been quoted, and of the Indian Post Office Act are to the effect that the Governor General in Council or a Local Government can impound or confiscate seditious matter or prevent its transmission through the post. The person who feels himself aggrieved by any such order has the right to appeal against it and the appeal comes before the High Court. Firstly, with regard to the necessity for such a provision, I submit that this provision is really more important than the provision for prosecution on a charge of defamation. It seems to me absurd and illogical to authorise the Governor General in Council to launch a prosecution against an individual editor, a man who may perhaps be a very harmless person, and not at the same time authorise him to take steps for the prevention of the very real and very serious mischief which the actions of that person may have caused. The really essential thing is to prevent the dissemination of the libellous matter and that is what this clause enables him to do.

Now, as regards those words "and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State", we personally on the side of Government are not wedded to those words; and if the Opposition prefer to have them out, we are agreed to let them go; but I submit that it is really in the interests of the person concerned that they should stand. The reason why it is in his interest is very simple. If the Governor General in Council is informed of certain matter derogatory of a foreign Ruler having been disseminated, shall we say, in a newspaper article, he can authorise the prosecution of the responsible editor; and if those words are deleted, he can pass an order for the impounding or confiscation of the libellous matter. But should the Editor, supposing it to be his action by which it was disseminated as well as originally published, choose to maintain that the matter, though perhaps derogatory, did not prejudice friendly relations, he would have a second chance of getting his documents released again. That is the substance of the matter in a nut-shell.

Sir, I move.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member wishes to move, instead of the amendment appearing on the order paper, the following amendment:

"That for clause 3 as re-numbered the following be substituted:

"The provisions of sections 99A to 99G of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and of sections 27B to 27D of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall apply in the case of any book, newspaper or other document containing matter which is defamatory of a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India or of the consort or son or principal Minister of such Ruler, and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State in like manner as they apply in the case of a book, newspaper or document containing seditious matter within the meaning of those sections."

I take it that the House agrees to allow the Honourable Member to move the amendment. (No objection was taken.) The amendment is now before the House.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi (Burma: Non-European): Mr. President, clause 2 which was passed yesterday by consent has reduced the offence to a simple offence of defamation under section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, the only difference being that the foreign Ruler or his consort or principal Minister, instead of being forced to file and prosecute a complaint personally, will be allowed to do so through the Governor General in Council, authorising an officer to file and prosecute such complaint. Now, when Government accepted yesterday my suggestion to delete those particular words from clause 2, Government in effect agreed to confine the offence to one of defamation pure and simple, with the ingredients of defamation and with the punishment as provided by the existing Statute. Now we find that in the very same Act Government still desire to introduce in clause 3 a new ingredient with further penalties. The new ingredient which Government wish to retain in this Act is the offence of having published something which would tend to strain the relations between His Majesty's Government and a foreign State; and further more they wish to inflict a further penalty on anybody who may be in possession of a particular newspaper, book or document in which such matter is contained.

I contend, Sir, that if the object of the Government of India is only to facilitate the filing and prosecution of a complaint for defamation by a foreign Ruler, then the object has been served by clause 2 being passed in the form we have passed it. We objected yesterday to any question of foreign relations. That was abandoned yesterday by Government and any attempt now made to pass clause 3 will defeat the very purpose of the compromise arrived at yesterday. (Hear, hear.) I can understand the argument of the Government of India that a foreign Ruler should be placed in an equally strong position as a British subject is if he is defamed in British India. A British subject can file or prosecute a complaint, and now the foreign Ruler is allowed to do so through the Government of India. The accused, in a complaint filed by a British subject is liable to be dealt with under section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, and the punishment is prescribed in Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code; and there is no further penalty or punishment of any kind. Now, the Government of India want to go a step further and wish to place a foreign Ruler in a better and more privileged position than a British Indian complainant would be in a British Indian Court. To that principle I take strong exception. (Hear, hear.) If against any British Indian subject an offence is committed under Chapter XXI, he has the usual remedy which is restricted to Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code. The matter, however grossly defamatory it may be, whether it is published in a newspaper, book or document, cannot be forfeited or seized; and to this extent the Government of India wish to extend a further and additional privilege to a foreign Ruler who has been defamed. I, Sir, object to this clause as it has been worded. As a matter of fact, the clause in the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee also must now necessarily go in view of the amended clause 2 passed by the consent of all sections of the House yesterday. I therefore oppose this amendment, and move that clause 3 be omitted altogether, not only clause 3 as amended and moved by my friend the Foreign Secretary but also clause 4 as it has emerged from the Select Committee, because the object of the Government of India, as I understood it yesterday, has been served by a foreign Ruler being given sufficient facility to file and prosecute a complaint of defamation through the Government of India. I object to the introduction of any further ingredients on the imposition of any additional penalties into this Act or to the conferring of any special privileges on a foreign Ruler which any British Indian subject does not enjoy. (Applause.)

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member cannot move an amendment to this amendment. The Honourable Member is opposing this amendment. The question that clause 3 as re-numbered stand part of the Bill will arise later. At present the amendment moved by the Foreign Secretary is before the House, and the Chair takes it that the Honourable Member is opposing it.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Yes, Sir, I am opposing the whole clause.

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): I confess, Sir, I am greatly disappointed with my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi. He persists in attributing most satanic purposes to Government. We took great pains to explain yesterday in the debate on clause 2 that the words which he proposed to omit were really there in the interest of the accused. However, he refused to be satisfied and the words went out. Now, Sir, he says that is the reason why those words must be taken out of the re-numbered clause 3

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: No, no.

Sir Lancelot Graham: I have tried to follow

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I do not know how my Honourable friend has understood me. What I said was that the whole of clause 3 should go, and not that those particular words alone should go and that the rest of the clause should remain.

Sir Lancelot Graham: That makes my task easier. He says that you are now putting the foreign Ruler in a privileged position because you are allowing him to file a complaint by an agent. Now, Sir, let me tell him that is not the purpose of this Bill at all. It is the Government of India, having regard to their obligations and the need of maintaining peace with the neighbouring States, which requires this power to be exercised by itself as a principal—and not as an agent of a foreign power at all. It is the Government of India, in exercise of their obligations of maintaining peace, which requires this power of prosecuting libels on neighbouring potentates. That is the purpose of clause 2. It is merely as a corollary of that power that we require power to forfeit under sections of the Criminal Procedure Code and to stop in transit under sections of the Post Office Act. As my friend Sir Evelyn Howell pointed out, it is not enough to catch hold of and put into prison the man who emitted the poison. What you have got to do, so far as you possibly can is to run after the poison and collect it again before it runs through the veins of the country. That is the purpose of the Act, and that is the effect of the provision which will enable you to deal with books, newspapers, and so forth. Those are the articles, books, newspapers and other publications which contain the poison ready for dissemination throughout India, and likely to poison the relations of friendliness between India and neighbouring nations. It is that power which we require as a complement to our power to prosecute. If those words were struck out, the words "and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such States", the task of the Government would be made easier. We have thought it fair to retain this burden upon our shoulders. When we make this order for forfeiture or for stopping in transit, and particularly the order of forfeiture, there is the possibility of an appeal to the High Court, and then the question, whether the article has that tendency or not, will come up for consideration before the High Court. Obviously, Sir, the publisher

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Will it be after the trial for defamation or before it?

Sir Lancelot Graham: That is quite independent of the offence. You may take the sedition procedure under the Code of Criminal Procedure; it is exactly the same position as the sedition procedure. You may prosecute a man for sedition if you think it worth while. There is no obligation to prosecute for the offence, and the power is there under the Criminal Procedure Code to forfeit documents which are seditious, and there is an appeal against that. But it is quite independent. I trust I have made myself quite clear

Sir Abdur Rahim: There will be no trial before the forfeiture is ordered.

Sir Lancelot Graham: There need not be a trial but there may be a trial. You may want to act with promptitude, you may want to forfeit this document before you prosecute. Prosecutions take time; in the meantime the poison runs out into the country. We are not acting as the agent of foreign powers, and we require these powers as supplementary to the powers taken under clause 2. Therefore, Sir, I must press strongly for the acceptance of this amendment.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): In this country it is very well known that libellous matter in several cases has brought about bloodshed. It has been our experience in the last few years that whenever a libel has appeared in the Press or in a book, it has roused them to such anger that certain people committed murder. We had recent trials and recent cases. It is no secret. People in India are very sentimental, and when the libel exceeds the limit, people are enraged so much so that they do not care for their lives. The same feeling may be generated in the mind of a loyal subject of a foreign Sovereign, and it might tend to bloodshed by the subjects of those States who are residing in India. Before this evil spreads, before a libellous matter against a foreign Ruler has been published in the form of a book, or newspaper or sheet or in any other form, if it is forfeited, that will stop the worse calamity befalling. If a man feels aggrieved and says that it was not really a libellous matter and there was no justification for the Government forfeiting it, he can go to the court, and press that it should not have been done. I think this clause is essential for the purpose of keeping the peace and it is only a precautionary measure and this only gives power to stop the worst kind of evil befalling by its publication. I hope that this clause will find support and that my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi will not insist upon opposing it.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Mr. President, I regret that I cannot support clause 3 which is now sought to be amended because of some consequential changes which became necessary owing to the amendment of clause 2. On principle I do not think that we can really justify this clause. As has been pointed out by Mr. Munshi, the offence is now one of defamation pure and simple, the only difference being that in an ordinary case of defamation the person that is defamed has to appear before the court and lodge a complaint. Instead of that, having regard to the circumstances of a case of this nature, Government have undertaken to make the complaint by one of its own officers. But that is only a question of procedure, and it makes no difference as to the substance of the Bill; that is to say, the offence which is sought to be dealt with is one of defamation, although one consequence of such defamation may be to affect the relations of this Government with a Government outside India. The difficulty I am feeling is that before it has been proved that the matter contained in a newspaper article, or any speech, or publication is of libellous character or is defamatory, you want authority to forfeit those publications. It may be when the case is tried the accused may be in a position to prove that as a matter of fact there is nothing defamatory in the publication. But before he has had any chance of doing so, why should it be possible—that is what I understand from Sir Lancelot Graham—for the Government by clause 3 to stop circulation of any newspaper or publication which the Government disapproves of. That is a principle which it is difficult for any one to accept. Of course, if it were provided that after conviction has been obtained, after the writing in question has been found to be defamatory as alleged, then all copies of the newspapers or other publications containing that matter should be stopped from circulating,—one could easily understand that, and one could have no objection on principle to such a provision being inserted in this Bill. But if it be intended, as is apparently the scope of this clause, that even before there has been any trial, before there has been any finding by any court as to the character of the publication, the Government should have the power and authority to ask the postal and other authorities or agencies not to circulate the matter, then in that case it does seem difficult to justify. I know there is the case of seditious matter, but surely the case of seditious matters stands on a different footing. If sedition is spread in the country, then other people are affected, but that cannot be said with reference to a matter of a purely defamatory character, that is to say, matter which is defamatory of certain individuals, be they foreign potentates or their Ministers or sons or consorts. Seditious matter, if circulated, may create a lot of mischief, but I do not think the analogy applies to a case of this nature. On these grounds I am afraid I am not in a position to support this clause, and I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi that we ought to oppose it.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): I support the amendment moved by Sir Evelyn Howell. The amendment reduces the harm to a very great extent. There are two parts in the amendment. One is consequential. My amendment having been accepted by the House yesterday, the first part of this amendment is essential now. The second part gives a kind of further protection. The words are, "and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State". It means that the contents of the book or newspaper should not only be defamatory, but they should tend to prejudice the friendly relations also. Further, when any book or newspaper contains any article which may create unfriendly relations it should not be allowed to be circulated. The effect can only be checked by not allowing the book to be circulated. Further if this amended clause is passed, it will be quite possible for Government not to prosecute the person. The Government may decide only to forfeit the book and newspaper which contains such article. If this amended clause be deleted, then there will be no alternative for the Government but to prosecute the person who has written this book. If this amended clause is passed, it will be better than deleting this clause.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): With all respect to my esteemed friends Mr. Munshi and the leader of the Independent Party, Sir Abdur Rahim, I do not see any point in the objections which have been taken to this clause, especially in view of the amendment which has been tabled by Mr. Evelyn Howell. There is a two-fold object to be secured. One is to strike at the author of the defamation. The other is to strike at the document which contains the defamatory matter. The first is secured by clause 2, which was accepted by the House yesterday, and under which it will be open to the Governor General in Council to authorise the prosecution of a man who may be defaming a foreign Ruler or his consort or one of his principal Ministers. The other is secured by the present clause which authorises the confiscation of the defamatory article, and for this purpose provides that certain sections of the Criminal Procedure Code and of the Indian Post Office Act shall apply, as if the matter referred to in those sections included matter for which a prosecution might lie under clause 2 of this Bill. What is the purpose of the Bill? It is to secure the maintenance of friendly relations, rather the prevention of the rupture of friendly relations, between His Majesty's Government and the Government of a foreign Ruler. If that be so, then it will not do merely to proceed against the person who defames. You must also take adequate steps to stop the dissemination of the defamatory matter. Sir Abdur Rahim says that he can understand seizure or forfeiture of a document containing seditious libel, but not of a mere defamatory article. But, Sir, when the defamation is of a friendly Ruler across the border and its effect may be to create unfriendly relations, I submit it stands on the same footing as seditious libel. The object of preventing circulation of seditious libel is to secure peace in the country. The object of preventing the circulation of libel of a foreign Ruler is no less important,—to secure peaceful relations between this Government and the other country. So I do not think you can differentiate the one from the other, and say libel of a foreign Ruler is not such a serious mischief as libel directed against the Government of the country. Yesterday, the Assembly agreed to delete certain words from clause 2. I will not say whether those who supported the deletion were well advised in asking for it. In any case, whether those words are there or not, we can take it that Government will not take action under clause 2, and direct prosecution for defamation, unless they are satisfied that there is a real danger of friendly relations being disturbed as a consequence. If Government propose to take action under the clause now under discussion, i.e., under the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Post Office Act, we can take it equally that they will do so, only when they are satisfied that the result of not taking action would be to create unfriendly relations between the two States. From that point of view, for the sake of symmetry Government might well have left out the words which they now seek to put in in this amendment, and have accepted clause 3 in the form in which it stands in the Select Committee's report. But, Sir, the fact that they are suggesting this amendment shows, if anything, that they are very anxious that no reasonable grievance could be made whatsoever. Government, by the amendment they are proposing, are willingly offering to subject their action to scrutiny by the highest Court in the land. If you look at section 99 (d) of the Criminal Procedure Code, you will find that when an order of forfeiture is made under section 99 (a), a party who is dissatisfied with the order has the right to apply to the High Court, and when such an application is made, the whole question is before the High Court because the High Court will have to be satisfied that the matter in respect of which the order has been made is matter of the nature referred to in this amendment. In other words, the High Court will consider not merely whether the publication is defamatory of the foreign Ruler, but also whether it tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State. What further safeguard can you possibly or reasonably expect? Government might well have said that the question of friendly relations was a matter for the executive government but no; they themselves suggest that any party aggrieved may take the matter to the High Court and there challenge their action, not merely as to whether there has been defamation, but also whether it is likely to produce a certain effect such as is mentioned here. That being so, I do not see how we can take any exception at all to the amendment. You cannot oppose this clause, much less the clause in the form in which it is proposed to amend it, unless you accept this position, that you will allow all sorts of matter defamatory of foreign Rulers to fly about in the country without check, although that might involve the country in most serious consequences. I say, again, Government have gone a great way in meeting the wishes of the critics of the Bill, and unless we are to give the go-by to the Code of Criminal Procedure and to the Post Office Act, I do not see how on a reasonable and unbiased view of the matter any one can make any legitimate grievance of the attitude of the Government in this matter.

Mr. S. C. Sen (Bengal National Chamber of Commerce: Indian Commerce): Sir, I do not understand the position. Yesterday 3 P.M. I understood that the principle of the amendment of that section was conceded or accepted subject to the deletion of certain words, namely, the words regarding the effect of a defamatory article in prejudicing the friendly relations between the Government and a foreign power. That was the only objection yesterday, and in fact Mr. Munshi today also raised that objection, but when you pointed out, Sir, that that amounts to an amendment of the amendment, he changed his position and stated that his objection was to the whole section. If those words are taken out, probably Mr. Munshi will accept the amendment. But what are these words, what is the effect of these words? They simply mean that the Government can confiscate provided such defamatory articles containing the defamation also amount to creating a prejudice of the friendly relations between the two powers. That is all. But if you take out these words, what will be the effect? The effect will be that for mere defamation Government can confiscate.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I rise to make a personal explanation.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member (Mr. Sen) does not yield. The Honourable Member can make the personal explanation after Mr. Sen has finished.

Mr. S. C. Sen: Therefore, I do not understand the position which Mr. Munshi has taken up. If he is acting for the accused or for the benefit of the accused, is it to his interest that the only safeguard which the accused gets in keeping these words should be taken away? The matter can be taken to the High Court. If these words are taken away, what will the High Court have to decide? They will only decide whether the article or book contains a defamatory statement, merely defamatory; but if these words are kept in, then the High Court will have to find not only whether the words are defamatory, but whether the words have the effect of prejudicing the friendly relations between the Government and the foreign power. I put it to Mr. Munshi to consider which is the best thing for the interests of the accused. With these words, Sir, I support the amendment.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Sir, I rise to make a personal explanation. The Honourable Member who has just sat down, has I think, completely misunderstood what I said. I said that I objected to the whole of the clause because I object to the principle of forfeiture and seizure. There is no question of my accepting any part of the clause after leaving out these particular words. I object to the whole of the clause because I object to the principle of forfeiture and object to any additional penalty by way of forfeiture and seizure. But if that punishment has to be imposed, then the whole of the clause must stand including those particular words.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria (Bombay Northern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, one would have thought that the principle of prevention being better than punishment was universally accepted and that this House was the last place in which that principle would be called into question and that the Leader of the Independent Party would be the last person to question that principle. (Sir Abdur Rahim: "I have never questioned it.")

[Mr. N. N. Anklesaria.]

Sir, the present measure is not merely a matter of amending the Criminal Procedure Code. It involves the discharge of a very important international obligation which has become very pressing on this country on account of the recent events that have happened. So far as I was able to understand my Honourable friend, Mr. Munshi, in spite of his personal explanation today, I understood him to say yesterday that he wanted merely the deletion of those words which refer to the prejudicing of friendly relations. He however gets up today and says that he did not want only the deletion of those words, but he wants the deletion of the whole clause. Now, the effect of the deletion of the whole clause will be that the measure will be rendered almost nugatory, and it would be useless for the purpose for which it has been undertaken, namely, the prevention of any proceedings or of any acts of individuals in this country which would endanger our friendly relations with the neighbouring powers. Sir, it has been objected that confiscation without trial would be a punishment unheard of in any country of the world. I do admit that the forfeiture provided for by this Bill would be without trial in the first instance, but as my Honourable friend, Mr. Biswas, clearly pointed out, there are safeguards and very important safeguards against that power of the executive being in any way abused in section 99 (b), (c) and (d) of the Criminal Procedure Code. In fact any person who is aggrieved at the orders of the executive in the present connection could apply for redress to the High Court and the High Court can grant him a special Bench in order to decide the whole question. Now, I say what better safeguards could any individual possibly expect? I submit therefore that the opposition to the present amendment has no grounds to stand upon and I therefore support the motion.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to oppose the clause. I was rather surprised at the argument advanced by my friend, Mr. C. C. Biswas. I suppose he has never practised before a Magistrate as he has always practised before the High Court, but I would ask those people who have got experience of Magistrates to consider this fact that the Governor General in Council has declared in the case supposed that a certain document is of a libellous character and immediately after the Government have taken action to confiscate the whole thing. We know what the Magistrates are. The Magistrates, considering that the Government of India have already taken action by confiscation, will find it exceedingly hard, and will need very great courage—and they cannot be said to possess courage equivalent to that possessed by the High Court Judges,—to give a decree in favour of the accused. They will assume and take it for granted that the accused is guilty, or the Government of India would not have taken action and confiscated the whole thing.

The second point which I would like to draw attention to—and I am afraid my friend, Mr. Biswas, did not pay sufficient attention to it—is that according to the principles of jurisprudence, every person should be considered to be innocent unless his guilt is proved. Now, here without giving any opportunity for proof whether the statement is of a libellous character or not, action is taken at once and it is really left for the accused to prove before the High Court that the articles which he has written were not of a libellous character. Therefore, such action which is provided in this particular clause is against the principle of law, and I do not think it is justifiable to take any action unless the case is proved by law that the article is of a libellous character.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: That is the principle of section 99 A.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: It is just what I am objecting to, that libel should not be confused with sedition. Libel is one thing and sedition is another thing. I am sorry that my Honourable friend, who has been practising as a lawyer, confuses the two issues between libel and sedition, and that is really just the principle on which I am opposing this Bill; we started with libel and ended with sedition. The Government produced the whole Bill on the ground that they are only providing for libellous statement, but in fact they have gone much further. They are extending it to sedition and taking action accordingly.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: What about libels on the Prophet?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: My Honourable friend is asking what about libels on the Prophet? I am very sorry that he is comparing the foreign Ruler with the Prophet. I have no reply. On the ground that this section confuses the issue and widens its scope, I oppose it.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not agree with my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad when he says that Mr. Biswas, having practised in the High Courts and having no experience of mofussil courts, has confused himself about sections of the law which are acceptable and those sections which are not acceptable.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: He does not appreciate the mentality of the Magistrates who will try these cases; that is my point.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: When you legislate, it is not our business to look to the materials by which the law we enact here will be administered in the country. In fact if that principle were introduced in our legislation, I think we would have various types of legislation for various provinces and Magistrates. I do not know whether my Honourable friend, who held the office of a Magistrate, ever needed special legislation for himself, and I hope he was not one of the class to which he refers as giving wrong judgment.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I never tried any case. I was a briefless Magistrate.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: I was told that the Honourable Doctor practised in the University and not the profession of law. Whatever it may be, I think in my opinion this amendment seems to be a very reasonable one in view of the fact that you have accepted the principle of the Bill and you want to have legislation like this.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: We have not accepted the principle of the Bill.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Not having thrown out the Bill at the consideration stage, I cannot understand the position of my Honourable friend. If your position is that you will have some legislation of this type in order to see that friendly relations between neighbouring States is not disturbed, I think it is to our interest that the law on this point should be as clear as anything. Sir, as for the acceptance of the principles of the Bill, I am always against legislation which restricts human liberty and freedom of speech, but considering the higher interest of society, considering the present position of India, confronted as we are on our borders by savage tribes and barbarous races, where a single spark may ignite the inflammable material and cause immense mischief to this country, it is to our interest that these neighbours of ours on every side of India should not have reason to think that Government or the people governed by the Government are unfriendly towards them, and if that principle is accepted—of course I am not here saying that I do accept the principle—I think the best thing for us is to have an amendment like this.

An Honourable Member: I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That for clause 3 as re-numbered the following be substituted :

'The provisions of sections 99A to 99G of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and of sections 27B to 27D of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall apply in the case of any book, newspaper or other document containing matter which is defamatory of a Ruler of a State outside but adjoining India or of the consort or son or principal Minister of such Ruler and tends to prejudice the maintenance of friendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Government of such State in like manner as they apply in the case of a book, newspaper or document containing seditious matter within the meaning of those sections.'

The motion was adopted.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Sir, I beg to move that in clause 3 as re-numbered and amended by this House the following proviso be added:

"Provided that for the purposes of this section the said provision shall be construed as if for the words 'Local Government' wherever they occur, the words 'Governor General in Council' were substituted."

The reason why I move this amendment is that the power to prosecute is vested in the Governor General in Council, while under sections 99A to 99G of the Criminal Procedure Code the power to forfeit any seditious matter or any matter of that character which is circulated is vested in the Local Government. I submit that, having regard to the scope of this Bill, the proper authority to order confiscation of any defamatory matter which comes within the mischief of the Act should be the Governor General in Council. I understand that Government have no objection.

Sir Evelyn Howell: We have no objection, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 3, as re-numbered and amended stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3, as re-numbered and amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 4, as re-numbered, stand part of the Bill."

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 4 as renumbered for the words 'a member of the family or is a' the words 'the consort or son or principal' be substituted, and for the words 'member or' the words 'consort, son or principal' be substituted."

This is a consequential amendment and there is therefore no need to make a formal speech. Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 4 as re-numbered after the word 'offence' the words 'upon a complaint' be inserted."

The amendment is purely consequential. Clause 2 of the Bill as amended no longer specifies or defines any offence, and it is the section under which complaints have to be made. I therefore move this amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, the next amendment that I rise to move is:

"That in clause 4 as re-numbered, for the word and figure 'Section 4', the word and figure 'Section 3' be substituted."

This too is a purely consequential amendment and a mere matter of re-numbering.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 4, as re-numbered and amended, stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4, as re-numbered and amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, if my own feelings are any index to yours and those of the House at large, I may assume that your only wish is that I should not detain you one moment longer than is necessary. I can only say that I am exceedingly grateful to many Honourable Members on all sides of the House for the support that they have given to a Bill which is necessarily distasteful in some respects to everybody. I thank them both for their votes and for their abstinence, for their silence and for their speeches. Sir, I move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Mr. President, I cannot allow the Bill to go through the third reading without making certain observations. The Bill seeks to create machinery for punishing certain libellous or defamatory statements against foreign Rulers; and we have been deliberating over this Bill as legislators responsible for any legislation in this country. One of the Honourable Members of the Nationalist Party just now, in supporting the amended clause 3, urged as his main argument that India is surrounded by barbarous nations. I should like my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary to note that, and to tell us whether that is not defamatory of our neighbours. And yet it is mentality like this which is enlisted in support of this Bill.

Our anxiety, the anxiety of the Independent Party, throughout has been to see that the liberty of the Press is not unnecessarily curtailed. We have protested against the provisions of the Bill as it was originally introduced and which were of a far more sweeping character than the present provisions. It was due to our protests that the Bill was considerably modified and has been reduced to a case of defamation, pure and simple, with one exception and that a very important exception, the clause regarding forfeiture. In no case of defamation would any defamatory article or speech be ordered to be forfeited, unless the offence has been proved and unless it has been found by a court of justice that the publication in question is in fact defamatory. Therefore to that extent the Bill does exceed the limits of defamation. It is a great pity that in a matter of this importance communal questions or communal mentality should have come into prominence. I pointed out at the very beginning of the debate on this Bill that there was no question of any one community being more particularly interested or more particularly concerned than any other Indian community; and the least reflection will show that that is so in fact. It is wholly a measure against the liberty of the Press to comment on foreign affairs, and I for one am strongly of opinion that the Press should have the fullest liberty to comment on foreign affairs. That is the law of all civilised countries and that is the law which we on this side of the House, we at any rate of the Independent Party, want to see firmly established here. But we admit that if a Ruler is defamed or his principal Minister or his Ambassador, then in that case it is only fair that like an ordinary citizen of the country that Ruler should have the means of seeking remedy in our courts. To that extent we agreed; but when we found that the Bill as a matter of fact exceeded those limits, we felt bound to enter our protest. Our protest has been ineffective as we knew all along that it would be. That unfortunately is the position now; but we have considered it our duty nevertheless to enter our protest against it. I am perfectly willing to acknowledge the willingness shewn by my friend the Honourable the Foreign Secretary to reconsider the provisions of the original Bill and his readiness to make any concessions which he considered reasonable. I have no complaint to make against him; but we hold that, so far at least as one important provision of the Bill is concerned, he has not been properly advised; and that is the gist of our objection. We know it is not possible for us to do anything more in this matter, excepting lodge our protest.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, except on the question of opposing the circulation of this Bill, which was moved by my distinguished friend from Aligarh (Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad), and associating myself though rather late in the day with one or two observations of the Leader of the Independent Party, I have not had much of a say on this measure; and now that this Bill is travelling very fast into the Statute-book, it is just as well that I from this side of the House sound a note of warning to the Government. This is a Bill which, when it becomes an Act, must be administered with great caution for it involves the liberty of the Press. Sir, we have read in the Statement of Objects and Reasons that the Government have been trying to adhere as closely as possible to the common law of England; but England has responsible government. India is yet to have responsible government. We have always been unwilling on this side of the House to put extraordinary powers in the hands of the executive, and in the present case I call this piece of legislation rather extraordinary in the sense that it is not in the ordinary law of the land, and even in England, a self-governing country, this particular law has always been administered with caution. Sir, the Honourable the Foreign Secretary is no doubt aware of some of the most sensational writings against Queen Victoria's grandson indulged in by the late Mr. Stead, the Editor of the National Review, and the Editors of many other Reviews. Mr. Stead himself as the Editor of the Review of Reviews indulged in a series of sensational writings casting tremendous reflections on Queen Victoria's grandson 15 years before the war broke out between Great Britain and Germany. No action was taken, and today I am not willing to place that literature before the House lest I should take the time of this House. There was a good deal of sensation in Germany, and I believe the ex-Kaiser, the then Emperor of Germany, stated that such writings would bring about a war, but no action was taken against any English newspaper, review or magazine. Why? Because there is responsible government in England. Sir, somebody said that, "A subject nation has no politics", and we certainly have no foreign politics. That being the case, I would ask the Government, now that this Bill is going to be passed into law, to administer the law with great care and only in cases of proved necessity. Sir, we are however anxious, especially when times are bad and communal feelings are running high, that India must not become the base of operations for any kind of activity against any neighbouring nation or State which may happen to profess a religion entirely different to ours.

Sir, my friend Mr. Amar Nath Dutt appears to have trodden on the corns of the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party when he used an expression "barbarous nations". He did not individualise a single nation. Between India and the Frontier there is China—a congeries of nations—where there is the barbarism of war. A nation which wages war is necessarily barbarous; when nations indulge in a war they become barbarous. As they are for the time being waging a war, they become barbarous. Again, Sir, when the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party, rather humorously I should think, suggested that that statement came very nearly within the law of defamation, I could only say that my friend Mr. Amar Nath Dutt did not come even under this Bill which threatens to become law, because he did not name the name of the Ruler of a neighbouring State; he did not name the Ambassador of that State; he did not name the consort or the son of that Ruler. (An Honourable Member: "He named them all.") My Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim says he named them all. By so naming he went out of the region of defamation because he was generalising and not particularising. Sir, I do not think I should take more time of this House, and so with these observations I resume my seat.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Group with the instinct of a journalist has rightly understood the character of this matter when he said that it is directed against the principles on which a public Press ought to stand. I am not quite sure whether he has not been deliberately too late in the day, for had he delivered that speech a little earlier, perhaps the Bill would have taken a different course. . . .

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Not at all.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: However that may be, I would like to point out that this Bill is not the Bill which was originally referred to the Select Committee. It has taken a different form in the Select Committee, and when it has finally emerged into this House it has taken a somersault, and the Bill now before us is not what even the collective wisdom of the Select Committee has been pleased to frame. There is no doubt that this Bill is altered beyond recognition, and it is considered in certain quarters of even this House that the Bill has been improved. Whether the alterations made in this Bill are for better or for worse it is for the country to judge, for I am afraid we have failed to judge them properly on the floor of this House. I am reminded again on this debate of the words which were uttered a few days ago by the Honourable the Finance Member in the course of his Budget speech referring to the Bombay merchants about the passion for self-inflicted wounds. I said on that occasion that it is a malady which has been prevalent on the Government Benches. Today, I find, Sir, that it is confined not merely to the Government Benches, but this malady of sustaining a passion for self-inflicted wounds has become just as common on this side of the House as it has become on the other side. (An Honourable Member: "It is an epidemic.") Sir, I have been making my position very clear from the very beginning so far as this Bill is concerned. I have always been saying that this Bill is a black Bill and however much you may wash it, you can never make it a white Bill, because it is not, as the Foreign Secretary repeatedly told us, the pukka born English law on the subject. It is neither the common law of England or the Statute law of America; it is but a miserable half-caste which is being imposed on this country. On an earlier occasion I gave a brief summary of the authority of a great writer on the theory and practice of international law on the subject, and it is not my intention to reiterate what I said then. Nor is it desirable that I should repeat what I said on that occasion. If we are to have this law, let us have it, but let that not be in the name of what it is not and what it can never be. This is a measure primarily intended to strengthen the hands of the executive to fight against any foreign influence complicating the internal situation, and as such a political measure directed against the Press of the whole country without distinction. It is not directed against any particular community; it is directed against the Press of all communities in this country. And if our reason is not prejudiced, if our judgment is not clouded, we can very well see that this measure is intended to affect particularly even all those communities who unfortunately think that they would not be affected by this measure. Such being the measure, I wish to record my emphatic protest. If there is to be only one vote against this motion, that vote shall be mine.

On an earlier occasion, I gave some instances to disprove the proposition that in spite of the repeated assertions of the Foreign Secretary, that whatever might have been the common law of England years ago, that law, bowing to the force of public opinion, had to remain a dead letter in England. The Foreign Secretary attempted to explain away those cases with good humour. He sacrificed reason for good humour and unconsciously has been throughout emphasising my point that there is no Press control in this regard. If I did not cite several instances on that occasion, it is because I did not want to crowd my speech with many details. So far as England was concerned, there are innumerable instances between 1898 to 1910 in particular when the British Press not only exceeded the bounds of international obligations, but even deliberately set at naught the English law of libel, and they were protected by the public opinion of the country that the Government had either to evade the issues or state that they had no control over their Press when indignant protests had been lodged by foreign States. When I cited the German and other instances, the Foreign Secretary said that the Press writer was an obscure one and declared that the State did not take any action which would have prevented the Great War had they done so. He ignored the Secretary of State's statement that newspapers are not under control, which is the material point in issue. However, if the Foreign Secretary would like, I can give any number of instances, ancient and modern, to prove that whatever might be the common law on the subject, it is obsolete, made so by the force of public opinion, that no Government in England would dare to prosecute a newspaper in this matter. Not only newspapers, but responsible British statesmen constantly spoke bitterly against the States. I could quote numbers of instances where immoderate abuse and intemperate denunciations of the Soviet regime were made. Speaking in Watford, the Secretary of State for India, Lord Birkenhead, speaking of Moscow and the Soviet Government, declared that they were "a band of murderers and robbers", and this was published in the Morning Post of the 22nd June 1925—it is not so old or obscure as the Foreign Secretary said, but recent quotations from British Press. In Bolton, Mr. Churchill called the Soviet Government, "The dark conspirators of the Moscow Kremlin". This was published in the Daily Telegraph of the 22nd June, 1926. The Conservative Party at Scarborough on the 17th October, 1926, called the Soviet Government, "A group of international blood-suckers". This was published by the Morning Post in its issue of the 18th October 1926. All this when Russia was not an unfriendly power. Where is this Press control? His Majesty's Government's views on Press control are stated as follows:

"His Majesty's Government regret as much as any one that the newspaper press should at times be utilised as the vehicle of international recriminations. But if they had the power to interfere—which it is of course well known that they have not—they would not feel called upon to restrain the public", and so forth.

Another serious objection to the Bill is this. There is no offer of reciprocal treatment assured from those States for whose benefit this enactment is made. It does not fall into line even with an Asiatic power's conception of it. The Persian law under Article 81 of the Persian Penal Code runs as follows:

"Whoever in any way openly slanders the Head of a Foreign State or the diplomatic representative of a Foreign State in Persia will be condemned to correctional imprisonment for a period of three months to two years, subject to the condition that the Foreign State accords reciprocal treatment in such matters to Persia."

Where is that reciprocal treatment given to us or assured under this Bill? We penalise under this Bill our own people to secure to a foreign State freedom from unwelcome attentions of our Press without affording equality of treatment in this direction in that country.

There is another difficulty. In the case of Indians in the neighbouring States who are there either as permanent settlers or residents for trade purposes, if and when injured by the action of that State, this Bill would prevent the Press in this country from taking up their cause and attacking the conduct of that State.

Further, the only operative clause is clause 2. It went into the Select Committee in one form and came out in another form. On the floor of the House, it turned a clean somersault, and we have a new clause, the result being that judicial control is brought to the narrowest limits, if at all any, worth calling as such. In this connection I would like to make only one observation. A power is either friendly to us or unfriendly. If unfriendly, there can be no question of endangering the relations. If the relations are friendly what possible objection can there be to disclose in a court evidence of matters relating to a State which is friendly? Surely, it cannot be contended that friendly relations cannot be brought to light.

Lastly, another strong objection is that public opinion is powerless to influence the Government in this country, and therefore these drastic powers are likely to stifle all freedom of the Press in these matters. That alone is sufficient ground for rejecting the Bill.

I would only conclude with the remark that the Bill as it has emerged now is an entirely different Bill altogether, and would it be proper on the part of the Government to push on with this measure without affording an opportunity to the country to have its say in the matter? However, the mood of the Government appears to be to precipitate this legislation with a few alterations regardless of the opinion of the Public. I for one would strongly enter my emphatic protest against the passing of this Bill.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I express my great regret that, in spite of our repeated protests, this measure will soon become the law of the land. I thought that the Foreign Secretary would probably take a hint from the Leader of the House when he said in the morning, or rather threw a bomb-shell that he wanted to discuss the question of the Sugar Industry Protection Bill at the Simla Session. I thought all the time that it was probably a slip of the tongue and that he really meant the Foreign Relations Bill, which is more contentious than the Sugar Industry Bill.

We have been drawing the attention of the Foreign Secretary to the genuine grievances which we have. Sir, he has not given on the floor of this House any other reason why he introduced this Bill except the one that in order that India may be reckoned among the civilised countries of the world, it is essential that it should have a common law of the type we have in England. That is the only argument which I have heard from the Foreign Secretary in support of his motion to introduce this Bill. There are many other matters in which we are less

4 P.M. civilised than England. I would rather remain less civilised rather than vote for the present Bill. My friend altogether forgot that conditions in India are different from those in England. Our Magistrates are not of the same calibre as the Magistrates in England. In England they are very independent and are above all influences. In India there are Magistrates who cannot go even against the wishes of the Superintendent of Police, not to speak of the Government of India. There are some who show independence of character, but the fact is not forgotten at the time they have to cross the efficiency bar. The Magistrates will find it very difficult to go against the wishes of the Government of India. (Sir Lancelot Graham: "No") My friend sitting on the Government Benches in this Chamber says "No", but if he goes into the country and makes inquiries, he will agree with me. I shall leave this topic here as it is not relevant. I can almost say, as my distinguished friend has just said, that with this law you cannot make black white and white black. I admit that a mistake is a mistake, and though we have removed a good deal of the poisonous effect of the first draft of this Bill, still the poison is there, however much sugar-coated it may be. In this Bill libel is confused with sedition. In the case of libel, I consented so far that if any person publishes any statement which is of a libellous character against the Rulers of adjoining States, action may be taken against him or in other words the Rulers of adjoining States may be put on the same footing as the residents in British India. This particular demand I was quite willing to agree to, but the Bill goes much further than what it claims. Had the scope been restricted to libel, I would have said very little about it, but the scope of the Bill is very much wider and goes much further than the objects which the Government had in mind. We know very little about foreign policy and we discuss it very seldom. In future there will always be a great danger of coming under the clutches of this particular law. When we discuss foreign policy, it is impossible to leave out personalities, and when personalities come in, we shall always be in danger of being convicted under this law. Sir, I pointed out at the outset, when I proposed that the Bill might be circulated, that the criticism against a Ruler, who may have taken any action or may have done anything which may be against the tenets of Islam or against the canons of our religion, may be interpreted as sedition instead of libel and prosecution may follow. There we have still to see how this law will be applied in practice. I strongly protest against the transfer of libel into sedition. Considering the enormous troubles we are now facing, is it wise to add one more measure like this for public excitement? It may be that this law may please one or two of the adjoining Rulers, but is it wise to displease a large number of our own subjects in order to please them? I would have very much liked that this Bill had never been brought before us, but it is now becoming law and before I sit down, I want to raise my voice of protest against this particular measure of the Government.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): I cannot congratulate my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary on his success with regard to this Bill which is soon to become law. In this connection, Sir, I have to say a few words. There is a Persian couplet which runs thus:

Man az bejanan hariz na nam:

Ke ba man herche kard na ashna kard.

I feel the absence of my Honourable friend Sir James Crear very much, but there are other Persian scholars who may be able to follow it. Sir, it is intended more for our own Moslem friends than for the Government and it means this. I have no complaint against foreigners who have introduced this Foreign Relations Bill; but so far as our own people are concerned, I have to lodge a complaint against those who have made common cause with the Government as regards this Bill, which is surely calculated to curtail our liberty to a great extent and particularly in matters concerning our religion. This Bill, when passed into law, will play much mischief. It was brought to the notice of the Government that, so far as Persia and other Moslem dominions are concerned, their Rulers may go against the tenets of Islam, and according to this Bill we won't be justified in criticising them because they happen to be Rulers. We will criticise their action at any cost. Even if we have got a law of this kind we will criticise them when they go against the law of the Shariat. This Government should take note of. This Act is more than the Sarda Act. It is only a question of degree. There was a time when Syed Jalaluddin, a Mughul, who became a British subject, was running a paper called Habulwatan, in the Persian language. He was criticizing the rulers of Persia, the later kings of the family of Khachar, who were enjoying themselves in Paris and London without caring for their subjects. Then the British Government did not come forward to proceed against Saïyyid Jalaluddin of Persia, who was in Calcutta. Again, there was the time when king Amanullah declared himself independent and was the friend of the Britishers and some articles were being written against him, even then this kind of legislation was not considered necessary.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan (Nominated Non-Official): He was not on friendly terms with the British Government.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: It is for the Government to say that and not for Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan.

Mr. President: Order, order. Please go on.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Now, all of a sudden our Government began to sympathize with the present Ruler, so much so that they deem it necessary to have legislation of this kind! I may assure the House that not even a single Mussalman here, not even any other Indian community, is against the present ruler of Afghanistan; on the other hand we appreciate him for having brought the civil war to a close and for having established a settled kingdom in Afghanistan (Hear, hear), and yet we do not deem it necessary to have legislation of this kind, which, as has been admitted by the introducer of this Bill, my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary, is distasteful. Now, I ask my Honourable friend and the Government as to what was the necessity for introducing such a distasteful measure, especially at a time when the whole of India is in a state of confusion and chaos. This goes to prove that the Government do not care for the opinion of Mussalmans. Sir, we see articles in the Press wherein our Mahasabha friends say that the present Government is pro-Muslim, and this is the outcome of pro-Muslimism! (Laughter.) As I have already said, Sir, how can I level a serious charge against the Government when some of our own brethren have made common cause with them? (Laughter.) Here are some friends who want to stand in my way when I say something about this; that goes to prove what kind of temperament they have and what their attitude is.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: It is all for the good of India and for the good of Mussalmans.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Yes, I know the mentality of you all. When there was that adjournment motion over the desecration of a mosque here, here are Mussalman gentlemen who went with the Government against the religious sentiments of the Mussalmans, and it is these gentlemen who now come forward to espouse the cause of the Government. (Hear, hear.) I am told it was all done on the authority of Mussalman Magistrates and Mussalman police. Sir, it has always been our contention that whoever he may be, be he a Mussalman, a Christian or a Hindu, the moment he becomes a Government servant, an agent of the Government, he does not care for his religion. He is untrue to his religion, and untrue to his country. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member restrict himself to the Bill.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Mr. President, you know, when one is interrupted unnecessarily, one cannot but deviate from the point. So, Sir, this distasteful and unwarranted piece of legislation is going to be passed, to our grief, and every Member of the Independent Party and many Members of the Nationalist Party have been against this measure,—even Mr. Ranga Iyer in his last speech. (An Honourable Member: “He is not here now.”) Never mind, he will have the occasion . . .

Mr. President: I would ask Honourable Members not to interrupt the speaker. Time is getting on, and these interruptions have the effect of prolonging speeches.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: So, Sir, this is an uncalled for and unwarranted measure, but the Government have availed themselves of this opportunity when the House is very thin—of course they are carrying the day with them, so I cannot congratulate them, but at the same time I am glad that at least some settlement was brought about between the Leaders of Parties and the Government Members, which however is a poor and sorry consolation to us. With these few words, I resume my seat.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, I support the motion of passing this Bill into law. (Hear, hear.) While I support the motion, I cannot help making a few observations on certain remarks which have fallen from some gentlemen who have spoken before me on this motion. (Some Honourable Members: “Who are they?”) Sir, I cannot accept for a moment that this Bill has got anything to do whatsoever with any particular religion or any particular community whatsoever. (Hear, hear.) It has been very clearly stated by my Honourable friend, the Leader of the Independent Party, who made quite clear to us his feeling that this Bill as it stands has nothing to do with the Mussalmans or Hindus in particular. It applies to everybody equally; and therefore this question which is dragged in,—that the Mussalmans are averse to this Bill and that Mussalmans do not like that this Bill should be proceeded with—has the effect of unnecessarily dragging the Mussalman question into controversy over a measure which has got nothing to do with them particularly—it has the effect of unnecessarily dragging in the Mussalman question when it was least wanted, when it was least opportune that this kind of controversy should be brought in or dragged on to the floor of the House. Whatever may have been the objections to the Bill as it came before the House in the original shape, certainly, Sir, when it emerged from the Select Committee, it was devoid of any communal or religious objections whatsoever and it came out in the shape that no community or no class of a community can say that it touches them and not touches the others. It touches Mussalmans, Sikhs, Hindus, Christians, Parsis all equally, and we took the greatest care in the Select Committee to that end; and I must congratulate here the spirit of give and take which was shown by my Honourable friend, the Foreign Secretary, and my Honourable friend, the Secretary of the Legislative Department, in this respect. They threw out open arms, Sir, to meet us on this question and to take away all those objections which had been brought forward in the September Session at Simla. When all these objections have been removed and have been made clear, I think it is very unwise that the same question be dragged on even in the third reading, when we know that it has got nothing whatsoever to do with the Bill. My Honourable friend Sayyid Murtuza Saheb may have got some grievance against somebody, whomsoever he may have wanted, or whomsoever he may have thought as his nearer and dearer friends from whom he has got this grievance, and not against foreigners, and I want to tell him, through you, Sir, that he has no cause for grievance on the score or in the way he wanted to insinuate.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: No insinuation whatsoever, but facts.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I am glad that this Bill emerges out of this House, and it is good in two respects; it is essential for the progress and advancement of the country that there should be internal peace, and at the same time it is essential that our neighbours should be contented and there should be no foreign aggression, and that our country should not be involved in any unfriendly relations with our neighbours. That is the essential question for the progress of the country. The main object of the Bill is that it is merely a preventive measure which stops people from disseminating malicious propaganda which might involve the country in bloodshed, money and great sorrow. One clause has just now been adopted by the House by a huge majority. I do not see how any man, who has got the good of the country at heart, can object to this. I do not see how any man who has got political sagacity can ever think of opposing that measure. The second portion, namely, as far as libel is concerned, I could not understand the speeches on the third reading could refer to that, namely, that any decree could be passed against the accused by any Magistrate and so on. I therefore give my full support to the motion that the Bill be passed into law.

(At this stage some Honourable Members rose to speak.)

Mr. President: Do Honourable Members still want to continue the discussion on the third reading?

An Honourable Member: I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, I am sure that you do not desire me to detain you for any length of time, and I will endeavour to be as brief as I can. I should like to begin by acknowledging the valuable suggestions which we have had from my esteemed friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, from Mr. Ranga Iyer and from many other Members from many quarters of the House. Those suggestions have been to a great extent adopted and incorporated in the Bill. I think that we on this side of the House may also pat ourselves on the back and say that we too have been good boys about that. Also, I should like to acknowledge the very admirable spirit which has been shown throughout this long debate on all sides of the House. The matter under debate might easily have degenerated into a dangerous and futile controversy. On the whole, I think the debates have been on a high plane, and I should like to congratulate the House on the statesman-like spirit in which it has handled this question. My Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer gave the Government a solemn warning that this measure which they have now put into their armoury, or are in process of so doing, should not be used lightly. I think, on behalf of Government I can give him a full assurance on that point. Governments are not always foolish.

An Honourable Member: Sometimes.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Yes, sometimes, they are foolish. But it is quite clear that no prosecution could be launched under this Act without the consequences of the act being very fully and very thoroughly weighed beforehand. I will not attempt to follow my Honourable friend Mr. Raju through his chromatic scheme of white, black and red Bills. I do not know what the colour of this Bill is, but I will say, however, that in time it may prove its value hereafter, by preventing the presentation to this country of the red bill of War, which is a much more expensive bill. Time alone can show whether the Bill is good or bad, adequate or not, but I can say that we all hope that it will not have to be used very often and I am sure I say this as a personal opinion—that I really believe it is quite possible for any writer to sit down and criticise any foreign Government he likes on any point and no court can ever possibly touch him under this Act, if he handles his pen like a gentleman.

Sir, I move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 4th April, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Sir Charles Watson, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., M.L.A. (Political Secretary).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

HOLIDAYS FOR THE HOLI AND DEWALI FESTIVALS.

1111. Mr. S. C. Mitra (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Pandit T. N. Bhargava): (a) Are Government aware that under the Negotiable Instruments Act in some Provinces two days holidays are given each for Holi and Dewali festivals, while in others only one day is given?

(b) Are Government also aware that Holi and Dewali are the most important Hindu festivals?

(c) If the reply to the above questions is in affirmative, do Government propose to issue instructions to all the Provinces that two days holiday be given each for Holi and Dewali festivals?

The Honourable Mr. H. G. Haig: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The Government of India do not propose to take action as suggested, as holidays are declared by Local Governments at their discretion under the power vested in them under section 25 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881.

PAYMENT OF DISABILITY PENSIONS FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

1112. Mr. S. G. Jog (on behalf of Sardar Sant Singh): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the Royal Warrant of the 6th December, 1919, and especially to Articles 1 and 9 thereof?

(b) If so, will Government refer to the answer given on the 12th February, 1932, to starred question No. 274, and to the answers given on the 9th March, 1932, to unstarred questions Nos. 141 and 142, and state whether the same principles as are embodied in the above articles have not been followed by the Medical Board held on Indian ranks in deciding the point of attributability of disability to war service? If not, why not? Is it a fact that no provision is made in the Army Regulations governing the conditions brought about by the Great War?

(c) Are Government aware of any case in which a disability was not held to have been attributable to war service or ordinary military service but might have been aggravated by the same? If so, did Government meet the claims of such persons whose disability was aggravated by war service and was not due to the serious negligence or misconduct of the discharged man?

(d) How do Government explain the omission of any question in the Army Form Y-1948 on the point of aggravation? Do Government propose to take any steps to re-examine the cases whose disability was aggravated by the service during the Great War?

(e) Are Government aware of any case in which a man might not have been discharged as medically unfit for further service but his disablement became apparent after his discharge, and was evidently attributable to war service, and not due to his serious negligence and misconduct? If so, have Government awarded such persons with disability pensions?

(f) How do Government account for the omission of any provision on this point of after-discharge disablement in the Army Regulations?

(g) Are Government prepared to consider these cases now?

(h) Is it a fact that there have been cases, where men who were not discharged from the Army as medically unfit for further service, but who were suffering from impairment apparently due to war service, and not due to their serious negligence or misconduct, and who were discharged under some other ordinary military heading? If so, have Government entertained claims of such men for disability pension?

(i) Will Government please explain the absence of provision on this matter of impairment in Pension Regulations for the Army in India?

(j) Do Government propose to take any action to have these men medically examined and provided for?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) to (j). The points raised by the Honourable Member will be investigated and a reply laid on the table in due course.

PAYMENT OF DISABILITY PENSIONS FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

1113. Mr. S. G. Jog (on behalf of Sardar Sant Singh): Will Government kindly state whether persons discharged as medically unfit for further service have been deprived of their claim to disability pensions on the ground of their disability being not attributable to war service? If so, why? Is it a fact in those cases the unfitness was due to risks to which the discharged persons were not exposed in their normal out-door and indoor civil life and that their contracts with Government, as contained in paragraph 1053 of Army Regulations, India, Volume I (1915 edition), provided that they will be given injury pensions for illness contracted on field or foreign service?

Mr. G. M. Young: If the Honourable Member means that persons who have incurred disabilities on field or foreign service have been refused pensions on the ground that the disability was not due to such service, Government are not aware of any such cases. I would suggest, however, that the Honourable Member should communicate to me the specific case or cases that he has in mind. I should then be glad to give him information as to the position under the rules.

Mr. S. G. Jog: Are Government aware that there is a feeling of dissatisfaction amongst the discharged people as regards the interpretation of the words "attributable to war service"?

Mr. G. M. Young: I have received and replied to questions on that point, from which it may be inferred that there is a feeling at any rate of uncertainty on the subject.

Mr. S. G. Jog: May I know under what clause all these cases are decided? Was there a contract between these people who went to the war and the Government as regards provision for giving them pension, etc.?

Mr. G. M. Young: I am afraid I could not answer that question offhand. I should want notice.

Lient.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member inform this House whether a marked difference is made between the treatment regarding pensions given as a result of ordinary service and those due to active service?

Mr. G. M. Young: Will the Honourable Member specify a little more clearly what sorts of pensions he means—disability pensions, family pensions or ordinary pensions?

Lient.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: For instance a man who contracts disease whilst stationed in Peshawar which, say, is the base of field operations, as opposed to a man who contracts disease whilst on actual active service.

Mr. G. M. Young: I am afraid I should have to have notice of that question. I have not the regulations by me.

Mr. S. G. Jog: Is it not a fact that Government make a distinction between three classes of service, field service, foreign service and ordinary military service?

Mr. G. M. Young: Yes, Sir: a distinction exists between these three forms of service.

Mr. S. G. Jog: Is it not the convention that if a man actually in war service contracts a disease, it can be attributable to war conditions at the place where he was serving?

Mr. G. M. Young: That is a very complicated question to which I could not possibly reply in answer to a supplementary question.

Mr. S. G. Jog: May I know what was the constitution of the Medical Board which made inquiries into these applications for pensions?

Mr. G. M. Young: I do not know what particular applications the Honourable Member is referring to. There were hundreds of them.

Mr. S. G. Jog: The constitution of the Board that decides these questions as to what was said to be attributable to war conditions?

Mr. G. M. Young: There is a separate Medical Board on every single disability pension case.

Mr. S. G. Jog: Is it not a nice question as to what is the medical and legal opinion on these cases—whether in law it can be said to be attributable to these causes? Were the medical people competent enough to discuss and decide these questions?

Mr. G. M. Young: Yes, Sir, a Medical Board consisting of professional medical officers is the most competent body to decide the question whether a particular disability was or was not attributable to active service.

PAYMENT OF FAMILY PENSIONS IN RESPECT OF CASUALTIES IN THE GREAT WAR.

1114. Mr. S. G. Jog (on behalf of Sardar Sant Singh): (a) Is it a fact that family pensions to a parent, in respect of death casualties of the Great War were promised by Government irrespective of the conditions whether a parent was or was not dependent on the deceased and whether he or she was rich or otherwise?

(b) If so, are Government aware that practice has come into vogue to investigate, (1) the extent of the parent's dependency on the deceased, (2) his or her income from all permanent sources, (3) the inability or otherwise of other living sons to support the parent; and such investigation has affected greatly the meagre resources of the parent in proving his or her claim to family pension, and causing unusual delay in the completion of the investigation (e.g., letter No. Pen./152, dated the 3rd March, 1932, of the Officer Commanding 2/6th Rajputana Rifles, Ahmedabad)?

(c) Are Government prepared to revise the procedure with regard to first claims of family pensions and see that unusual delay is not caused either in the investigation of the claims or in finally disposing of the same by the pension-sanctioning authority?

Mr. G. M. Young: I have called for the facts of the case referred to in part (b) of the Honourable Member's question. A reply to the whole question will be given in due course.

PAYMENT OF FAMILY PENSIONS IN RESPECT OF CASUALTIES IN THE GREAT WAR.

1115. Mr. S. G. Jog (on behalf of Sardar Sant Singh): (a) Are Government aware that family pensions had been refused to be sanctioned simply because the father, the nominated heir, happened to be in receipt of a service pension earned by himself?

(b) If so, will Government please lay on the table a copy of the definition that they have given to the terms "family pension" and "service pension"?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes, Sir, a family pension cannot be drawn in addition to any other Government pension.

(b) There is no definition laid down beyond what is contained in the words themselves. A family pension means a pension granted to a deceased soldier's family. A service pension means a pension which a soldier has earned by service, and draws during his life-time.

DECLINE IN THE EXPORT TRADE OF HIDES AND SKINS.

1116. *Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah (on behalf of Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the figures given below about the import of hides into Germany during the last five years?

(b) Is it not a fact that India has not been able to compete with other countries and that the export trade of hides and skin is falling rapidly? What steps, if any, do Government propose to take to re-establish the export of hide at its old level?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Government have not seen elsewhere the statistics given by the Honourable Member.

(b) Government are unable to accept without considerable qualification the statement that India is unable to compete with other countries in the export of hides and skins to Germany. So long as the world trade depression persists they do not consider that any action they might take could restore the export of hides to the position which it occupied before the period of depression began.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

TAXES AND DUTIES IMPOSED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND BUDGET SURPLUSES AND DEFICITS.

307. Mr. Badri Lal Rastogi: (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing year by year the amount and rate of import and export duties as well as the fresh taxes that were imposed by the Government of India since the life of the Legislative Assembly, i.e., since the year 1921 up to date?

(b) Will Government kindly state year by year the amounts of deficits or surpluses that came out at the time of each year's Budget up to 1931-32?

(c) Is it a fact that during the last ten or eleven years the Government of India have imposed new taxes to the extent of Rs. 70 crores on the people of India?

(d) If the answer to part (c) be the negative, what is the actual figure?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to the Finance Member's speech and the Financial Secretary's Explanatory Memorandum in connection with the Budget for each year since 1921-22.

(b) I would refer the Honourable Member to the table on page 1 of the Explanatory Memorandum by the Financial Secretary on the Budget for 1932-33.

(c) and (d). The Honourable Member has apparently based his calculation on the estimates made at the time when changes in taxation were proposed of what extra revenue such changes would yield. In the actual results then estimated receipts were in many cases not realised, and it is extremely difficult now to determine exactly what is, say, in the current year, the yield of increase in taxes made 10 years ago. The important point is to consider actual results. The total amount of tax revenue in 1922-23 was 61.41 crores while the revised estimate for the current year is 68.98 crores.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

PARTICIPATION OF INDIA IN THE IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE AT OTTAWA.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir with reference to the recent announcement by the Secretary of State for India that the Government of India would take part in the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa next July, will Government be pleased to make a statement explaining what action they propose to take in the matter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India have agreed to send a delegation to the Imperial Economic Conference which will meet at Ottawa in July next. They have been informed that the principal item on the agenda of the Conference will be the discussion of a policy of trade agreements between different countries of the Empire and they have been invited in particular to consider the question whether, having regard to the new tariff policy of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, Great Britain and India should enter into a tariff agreement embodying a reciprocal preferential regime so designed as to benefit the trade of both countries. The Government of India have accepted this invitation and His Excellency the Viceroy has, with the approval of the Secretary of State for India, appointed the following gentlemen to represent India at the Conference:

Leader—Sir Atul Chatterjee.

Members—Mr. R. K. Shannukhan Chetty,

Sir Padamji Ginwala.

Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon,

Sahibzada Abdus Samad Khan, and

Sir George Rainy.

If the conclusion of a trade agreement is recommended as a result of the Conference, any changes in the tariff which it may involve will be duly placed before the Legislature for its approval. The Government of India have no wish to put any such changes into effect unless the Legislature is satisfied that they are in the interests of India.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: What instructions are the Government of India giving to this delegation?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: That, Sir, is a question I am not in a position to answer. I shall be the person to receive instructions and not to give them.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: But the Honourable Member is for the time being representing the Government of India. He has not yet assumed his new office as a member of the delegation?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The instructions have not yet been drafted.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is the Secretary of State going to give the necessary instructions or the Government of India will give instructions without any reference to the Secretary of State?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India will give the instructions.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Without any reference to the Secretary of State, may I take it?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Unquestionably the instructions will be given by the Government of India.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I want to know whether there will be any reference to the Secretary of State before the Government of India give their instructions?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member, Sir, is, I think, acquainted with the procedure followed in connection with the Tariff Board Reports. There is always communication between the Government of India and the Secretary of State, but the final decision rests entirely with the Government of India. I take it that this is a parallel case.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: May I ask if the constitution of the delegation has been determined on the understanding that the members who compose this delegation will support Imperial Preference?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir; I do not know what the views of the individual members are.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the conclusions of this Conference, so far as they affect India, be placed before this Legislature or the Legislature to be created after the new reforms are introduced?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: So far as tariff changes are concerned, I have said so distinctly in my answer. The reason why I cannot expand it is because I do not know what other questions may come up at the Conference.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will this delegation be authorised to commit India to a definite economic policy?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not know what definite economic policy exactly my friend refers to.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Imperial Preference, for example.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: That involves tariff changes.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Tariff changes are merely consequential; what I want to know is whether this delegation will be authorised to commit India to the policy itself?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not know what use the policy would be if you cannot make the consequential changes in the tariff.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Supposing these matters are thrown out, even then the Government could with its own extraordinary power pass those measures?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: What I have said is that the Government of India have no wish to put any such changes into effect unless the Legislature is satisfied that they are in the interests of India.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I understand that the customs duty between the different countries of the British Empire will form the subject of discussion in this Conference; is this correct or not? I should like to know whether the principle of customs duty between the different countries of the British Empire will or will not be considered by this Conference?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not know whether the Honourable Member was present when I gave the answer originally. Perhaps I may read again one sentence from the answer.

"They have been informed that the principal item on the agenda of the Conference will be the discussion of a policy of trade agreements between different countries of the Empire and they have been invited in particular to consider the question whether, having regard to the new tariff policy of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, Great Britain and India should enter into a tariff agreement embodying a reciprocal preferential regime so designed as to benefit the trade of both countries."

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am sorry I was a bit late, and so I did not hear the answer when it was first given. I want to know whether this Conference will also consider the question of the protection duty as distinct from the tariff duty, because there are certain commodities on which we want to have a duty for the sake of protection, irrespective of the yield of revenue.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: It is quite clear, Sir, that the interest of India must come first and that adequate protection to Indian interests must be an essential part of any agreement.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF LADY PASSENGERS EMBARKING AT CALCUTTA FOR RANGOON.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I lay on the table the information promised in reply to question No. 1040 asked by Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi on the 29th March, 1932.

- (a) No. Such passengers are not exempt from medical inspection.
 - (b) Yes.
 - (c) and (d). Do not arise.

THE INDIAN AIR FORCE BILL.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): Sir, I move that the Bill to provide for the administration and discipline of the Indian Air Force, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration. With one possible exception, Sir, to which I shall allude later, this Bill consists of detailed administrative provisions which have been taken, as I explained on previous occasions to this House, from existing Acts, the British Air Force Act, which itself is an adaptation of the British Army Act, and the Indian Army Act. There is nothing in these provisions which is new, there is nothing which is untried. All that we had to do in framing this Bill was to select from one or other of the two Acts the particular provisions which would be most useful to an Indian Air Force, and having done so to scrutinise those provisions to see whether any alteration in them was required. The Select Committee have been through the whole of the Bill, clause by clause, I might almost say, word by word, and I should like to take this opportunity of thanking them for the time and the care which they bestowed upon this task. The result of their deliberations is before the House, in the form of a very short and unanimous Report, which recommends seven or eight small amendments in a Bill of 130 clauses. The very minuteness of the alterations recommended is sufficient to show not only how carefully the Committee have carried out their work, but also how little alteration was required in order to adapt the existing disciplinary Acts on which we were working to the purposes of an Indian Air Force. I think that the House may confidently take this Bill in the form in which it has emerged from the Select Committee, and pass it into law.

I should, however, like to say something about the one clause in the whole of this Bill which is new. Clause 9 was inserted in order to provide a statutory guarantee that the rank and file of the new Force should be Indian. This provision was not absolutely necessary. A similar provision, for instance does not exist in the Indian Army Act, but in view of the fact that there is no class composition in this Force, it was felt that some kind of provision was required as a guide to the enrolling officer, and that the provisions should be put in the statute itself. The clause as originally drafted merely repeated the statutory definition of an Indian, but some Members thought that the wording was not definite enough, particularly in view of the fact that the statutory definition of an Indian includes persons who may be of unmixed European descent. Ordinarily of course there would be no legal or moral justification for excluding such persons from eligibility to the Indian Air Force; but it so happens that they alone among statutory Indians are eligible for enrolment in the Royal Air Force, and it was felt that in instituting an entirely new and distinctive Indian Air Force, there was some justification for excluding from eligibility persons who could enrol themselves if they wished in the Royal Air Force. So we had to draft a clause bearing that in mind. One exception may lead to another; and eventually we evolved a clause which is a little more complicated in form than what we originally had before us but which I think is perfectly easy to understand and will be logical in its effect. The persons who are eligible under the amended clause are subjects of His Majesty or of a Prince or Chief in India, who are either of unmixed Indian descent, or if they are of mixed Indian and non-Indian descent, are domiciled in India, or if they are of unmixed non-Indian Asiatic descent are domiciled in India and their fathers and grandfathers were domiciled in India. This will ensure that only a genuine Indian citizen will be eligible for enrolment in the Force, and I think it is as much as one can impose upon the enrolment officer as a guide. If we went into further details, it would become impossible for an enrolment officer to carry out his statutory instructions.

[Mr. G. M. Young.]

I think that is all that I have to say. As I have said before, this is a long Bill, but it is not new and it is not untried; and I do not think that the House need have any hesitation in accepting it. Sir, I move. (Applause.)

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the administration and discipline of the Indian Air Force, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

To this motion there is an amendment from three Honourable Members proposing to postpone the consideration of this Bill to the next Simla session. Before calling upon Mr. Mitra to move his amendment, the Chair should like to inform Honourable Members that it proposes to restrict the debate to the question of postponement only. If the House desires to postpone the consideration of this measure, it would be best if the House discusses and votes upon this one issue only instead of having a joint discussion both on the main motion and on the amendment. If the amendment is carried, the time of the House will be saved, and there will be no discussion on the Bill till it comes up for consideration in the Simla session. If however the House desire to proceed with the consideration of the Bill, that motion will come up for consideration after the amendment has been defeated. I would therefore ask Honourable Members, when the amendment is moved, to restrict themselves to the subject matter of the amendment only. Mr. Mitra.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions; Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move that the consideration of this Bill be postponed till the next Simla session. I shall confine my speech only to this motion and I hope that I shall get a chance to speak on the main Bill later on.

Mr. President: Certainly, if the amendment is defeated.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: I move this amendment from the point of view of the bigger constitutional aspect, because I think the House has now ceased to be representative, and it will not only be the duty of this House to see that all important and contentious measures are postponed to the next Simla session, but you, Sir, as the custodian of the privileges of this House, if you are convinced by my argument that this House has ceased to be representative, should exercise your inherent right of adjourning the House sine die on this question. Even looking at the front Benches on the Government side, the Government are represented by only one Honourable Member. On this side, the Leader of the Opposition is absent, the Leader of the European Group is absent, and as I shall later on show, a large number of elected Members are absent. This is due not only to their negligence, but it was announced by the Government that the House would sit till the 24th March, and when we first came, we heard that because there was no Finance Bill to be discussed this year, the Assembly might cease to sit even after the 18th March. Now, the session has been extended. We are now on the 4th April, and we do not know when the House will finally adjourn. There are nine Bills and two Resolutions yet to be discussed. We on this side as much as the public at large regret that many of the elected Members are often absent. If all the elected Members of the House or the Members of the Opposition cared to attend, they could easily frustrate the Government in bringing forward many of their drastic and obnoxious measures because the two chief principal Parties, namely, the Nationalist Party number 40 and the Independent Party number 30, and there are other elected Members also, and we could get a strength of more than 70 Members, and Government have not carried any measure in this House by more than 50 or 55 votes this session. So, the discredit is due to the elected Members not being present in the House. Now, I am not regretting the absence of Members like Mr. Pandan or Mr. Talib Mehdi Khan, or Thakur Mahendra Nath Shah Deo, or Mr. Gopika Ramon Roy, or Tun Aung, who have been absent for the entire session. But I shall read out the names of 13 Members who did not attend more than one week in this session. They are Diwan Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. A. Hoon, Mr. Narasimha Rao, Mr. Govinda Reddy, Mr. Jamal Muhammad Saib, Mr. Dumasia, Mr. Aggarwal, Mr. B. R. Puri, Mr. Sadiq Hasan, Mr. Ram Krishna Jha, Mr. Badi-uz-Zaman, Mr. M. R. Puri and Mr. Kyaw Myint from Burma. All these gentlemen were more or less absent. I do not to-day regret their absence, but my point is that there were others here who wanted to attend but they are absent because the session is now being extended beyond any idea of these elected Members. They are Sir Hari Singh Gour, Leader of the Opposition, Sir Hugh Cocks, Raja Bahadur Krishnamachariar, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, Mr. Lalchand Naya'rai, Mr. Mody, Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury, Mr. Bagla, Mr. Raghubir Singh, Mr. A. Das, Lala Brij Kishore, Mr. Triloki Nath Bhargava, Mr. Shah Nawaz, Mr. Mahomed Rajan Baksh Shik, Sardar Sant Singh, Mr. Shafee Daoodi, Mr. Munshi, and several others who were present till recently. I know that it was the punctilious sense of my Leader Sir Abdur Rahim that kept him on here, otherwise he would have gone away a long time ago. When all these gentlemen are absent, do you really think that this House is really representative of the people of India, and can it take up any contentious measure and decide upon it now? Will it be fair to the country, will it be fair to the elected Members? I brought this question to the notice of the Leader of the House, and when he could not see his way to accept it, I have brought it to the notice of this whole Assembly and for your particular attention. It may be argued that Government are getting their troop always in full strength. If you look to the names of the Members on the Government side you will find that 25 per cent. of the names have been changed. Within 24 hours they can replace a Member, as soon as a man happens to be engaged elsewhere or is not physically well. That advantage is denied to this side of the House. I know there is a rule in the constitution when a Member is absent for a very long period, for 60 days, the Government have a right to declare his seat vacant, but so far as I know it was only applied in my unfortunate case when Government arrested me and put me under restraint under Regulation III, and after 60 days they declared my seat vacant as a Member of the Bengal Council. That was the only case so far as I remember in which this rule has been enforced. There are many others who will not care to attend the session for months and months and yet Government will not take any action to secure their presence. If Government are allowed to extend the time of the Assembly as they like, there is a great danger. If the Honourable the Home Member takes it into his head to change the Ordinances into law, they could easily carry the day with the present thin attendance on the non-official side.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): With this subservient Legislature, it can happen even if the Assembly is in full strength.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Even this subservient Legislature defeated Government once or twice in the division when the House was more representative. Even if we look to the European Group, I see they are represented out of ten men by three men. 60 per cent. of the European Group are also absent at this lag end of the session.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: They always vote with Government. That should not be a matter of complaint with you.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: They are also elected Members. Whether they vote with Government or not is not the point. My contention is that the House is not representative owing to the absence of so many elected Members. I hope, Sir, you will allow me to take a little more time on this amendment because I have given notice of a similar motion in connection with all the items. I shall therefore argue the whole case on this amendment. There is a contentious item like the question arising out of the financial separation of Burma. Then there is the Public Suits Validation Bill. Then there is the Road Fund Resolution in connection with the Federation of Shan States and then there are several motions for Select Committee. As regards the Select Committee motions, there is this much to be said that there is a chance in the third reading to throw out the Bills if they are not sufficiently improved in the Select Committee and if the House is not satisfied. Unless these motions are non-contentious, I say they should not be brought up at the lag end of the session and because the House has already been extended beyond the expectations of Members, several have left and others will leave even to-day. Then there is the Partnership Bill, which this House passed and which has been altered in the Council of State and Government are now certain of carrying the amendment in this House.

Mr. O. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): It was altered in accordance with the recommendations of this House.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: My point is that the Bill has been altered by the other House and it is coming back. The House passed it in one shape and now it has been altered and the House is expected to revise its opinion. These are the general grounds on which I say that the House has ceased to be representative. Simply because I move that the Bills be postponed to the next Simla session, it should not be inferred that I am in favour of the exodus. What I mean is that even if a session is held in Simla, these contentious measures should not be brought forward at the end of the session. Then even as regards the question of retrenchment, the more days we sit here, the more expensive it is, because of the conveyance allowance to Members at Delhi, in that respect Delhi is more expensive than Simla.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: That has already been paid.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: My Honourable friend has not followed my point. I am referring to the conveyance allowance paid here unlike at Simla. If you extend the session here, each day costs more.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: As Members have gone away, the expense will be less.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Most of the arguments that I have advanced in connection with this motion are applicable to subsequent measures and I suggest that all contentious and debatable Bills and Resolutions should be postponed to the Simla session. Sir, I move.

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): Although I cannot support the Honourable Member, I do feel that it is very unfortunate that such an important Bill should come before such a very thin House. I regret it because this is one of the greatest measures that have ever been introduced into this Assembly. I think that we are planting to-day a grain of mustard seed from which I hope there will rapidly spring up a great tree in which some very marvellous and wonderful birds of the air will lodge. And I think, Sir, that in the possibly very difficult days that are still to come in regard to India's new constitution, we may find that the fact that the House is now inaugurating a purely Indian Air Force will prove a very decisive factor in a sense which will entirely commend itself to this House. Therefore I am not prepared to agree on the evidence submitted by my Honourable friend that this is a contentious measure.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Important.

Mr. Arthur Moore: I agree about the importance. My friend referred for example to the fact that this particular group is reduced to a very small numbers. I am sure that Sir Hugh Cocke and the other Members who most unfortunately have had to go away are not prepared to throw the blame for that on any one but themselves, and the last thing that they would wish is that their absence should be made a reason for delaying such an important measure. I feel the same thing with regard to the Leader of the Nationalist Party, Sir Hari Singh Gour, who was the Chairman of the Select Committee and who undoubtedly gave his blessing to the Bill and did not regard it as a contentious measure. My friend Sir Abdur Rahim's party also put on a very distinguished representative of their party, Sir Cowasji Jehangir. He too is unfortunately absent. I am sure Sir Abdur Rahim will agree with me that he would be very sorry that his friend's absence should be made a reason for delaying this very important Bill. There are also a great many practical difficulties which would result, of which we shall probably hear something from the Government Benches. I shall confine myself to remarking that the intention is that this Air Force should actually come into being this summer (Hear, hear), that cadets have been trained at Cranwell, and that unless the Indian Legislature now provides for them, it will not be possible for them to come on the establishment and be paid. Sir, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Gava Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhamadan): Sir, I rise to oppose this motion; and I am surprised that a man like my Honourable friend should have made this motion. Sir, my Honourable friend's contention is that this House has ceased to be representative—a contention which cannot hold water. This House is as much representative as it was when the Swarajists and the Congress Members left it. If it is not representative, it is incapable of transacting any business, and should the rest of us disappear like other friends whose names he mentioned? In the list which he read out I find the Honourable Member has included the name of Mr. Munshi as being absent, but I find that Mr. Munshi is already there in his seat. He has also mentioned the name of Maulvi Shafee Daoodi. I have seen my Honourable friend this morning, although at this moment he is not in the House. Now this Bill is a non-contentious one, and the time we are devoting to adducing arguments in support of postponement could have been better utilized in examining the provisions of the measure, and seeing it through. Sir, the Air Force Bill and the Broadcasting Bill are two very important measures, and at the same time they are non-contentious in character, and I do hope these two measures will be allowed to pass through in this session. It is not our fault that the House is thin. Sir, the punishment for those who are absent is sought to be visited on those who are present, and who are trying to do their public duty in the best way they can. The date of the commencement of the session is fixed beforehand, but with regard to the termination of the session, it is very difficult to fix a day. That obviously depends upon the business to be done, and on the Members themselves; and if they can retrench their speeches—as my friend, Mr. Mitra, has been trying to make retrenchments in expenditure on the General Purposes Committee—much of the precious time of the House can be saved. (Hear, hear.) (Mr. S. C. Mitra: “You will be a Government Member very soon.”) Sir, as soon as a Member happens to differ from my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, well, it is quite natural for him to attribute motives. This, Sir, is one of the features that is to be found in a subject race (Laughter).—that honest differences of opinion are never tolerated. Because I want a measure like this, which I hold to be a non-contentious measure, to be passed in this session, my Honourable friend is going to be sarcastic at my expense. Sir, I hope some will be Government Members sitting on that side under the new constitution (Hear, hear), but because I or some other Members may happen to differ from him, it is not proper for my Honourable friend to cast any reflection on us.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: On a point of order, Sir. I have never said that in my speech anywhere.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Sir, I heard an interjection to that effect. (Mr. S. C. Mitra: “You hear many things.”) But I am glad to stand corrected.

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Now with regard to the contention that this House has ceased to be representative, I will recall the fact that when the House was fully attended, my friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour's Resolution—which all will admit was of such supreme importance—was nevertheless defeated by a substantial majority. So if this House has ceased to be representative, my Honourable friends who hold that view should have left this Chamber, and not allowed expenditure of public money to continue, and then turn round and say that this House is not representative. My Honourable friend has also said that the Honourable the Leader of the House should not allow contentious measures to be brought forward at the fag end of the session. If any new contentious measure be brought forward, it will be time for us to join hands, and oppose that measure; but this Bill was introduced so far back as the 3rd February, 1932. It was referred to the Select Committee on the 6th February, and we are now considering the report of that Committee on the 4th April. Therefore it cannot be said that the Government have sprung a surprise with this measure. I understand that the Indian Air Force is to be constituted during the summer; and it is necessary that the personnel should be selected, and arrangements made as soon as possible. The ordinary Simla session will as usual be held towards the end of August (Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: "Oh, you seem to know everything!"), and if this Bill has to stand over, I think much time will be wasted, and much useful work, which ought to be done with regard to the inauguration of the new Force, will have been left undone. Sir, I therefore oppose this motion.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to support this motion for postponing consideration of this Bill. The Honourable gentleman who has now spoken has not told us that the heavens will fall if the consideration of this Bill is postponed to the Simla session. When my Honourable friend, the Leader of the European Group, said that this is an important measure, I entirely agree with him that it is so (Mr. Arthur Moore: "I agree that it is an important measure"), but that is exactly the reason why I should consider that such an important measure consisting of a hundred and odd sections should not be taken up at the fag end of the session, because the point which I understand was made by my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra is, and with which I am in agreement, that a reasonable and fair debate on a motion like this could not be secured at the fag end of the term on account of the thinness of the House. That is not the fault of those Members who are present, as my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh has said; it is rather our misfortune that they are absent. It is not a charge therefore which can be made against the Government that these Members are absent.—I agree. But my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, showed the advantages which the Government have in having their Members always present as they could fill their absent Members' places at any time and the disadvantages from which we on this side suffer. Not only this legislation, but a number of other Bills are now crowded together at the fag end of the term, and my point is that a fair and reasonable debate on this and other motions cannot be secured in these circumstances now when so many people are absent; and so I appeal to you, Sir, as the custodian of the House, that whatever may be the causes for the absence of Honourable Members from this House, nevertheless the House is so thin that it would not be desirable that we should proceed with this legislation as reasonable debate cannot be had. With these few remarks I support the motion.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, I am afraid that Government are quite unable to accept the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra.

One of the points he made was that the House were given to understand that the session was going to terminate on the 24th March. I presume that he refers to the circular dated the 23rd December, 1931 which was issued to all Members. All that is said on the point there is that the Honourable the President of the Legislative Assembly has been pleased to direct provisionally that there shall be meetings of the Legislative Assembly for the disposal of official business on the following days, the last of these days being the 24th March. A circular of that kind issues every session, and directions are asked for from the President up to a certain date, the earliest date by which it is thought possible that the business can be got through. But it is never more than provisional; it does not amount to any sort of pledge that it will not be necessary to sit longer. My experience is that in every session since I have been in this House, it has invariably been necessary to go on sitting longer than the latest date for which directions were originally issued.

Then, Sir, my Honourable friend says that Government should not bring on contentious legislation at the fag end of the session. What was the course the Government have actually taken this session? At the beginning of the session we were told that we ought not to bring on the contentious Income-tax Bill in the first week of the session before Members had assembled and that it was unfair to the House to do so. Now we are told that at the end of the session we should not bring contentious measures because Honourable Members want to go away. That being so, the middle of the session is not large enough to contain all the contentious measures. If both ends of a candle are burnt away, very soon there will be very little left at the middle. But is it a fact that these measures are contentious? At the beginning of the session, in order to meet the wishes of the House, we took the Income-tax Bill later than was originally proposed. We then proceeded with all the Bills which could really be considered contentious in the ordinary political sense, and the House spent a great deal of time on two of them, namely the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, and the Foreign Relations Bill. What remains now is not, I maintain, contentious in that sense at all. Take the case of this particular Bill we have before us. The Report of the Select Committee is dated 8th March. I presume it must have been in the hands of Honourable Members since the 10th March, that is, 25 days ago, with the result that notice has been given of three amendments to one clause although there are 129 clauses in the Bill. What reason can Government have for thinking that the House regards that as contentious? Take the Broadcasting Bill, that is another example. I do not believe for a moment that it is a contentious Bill. Take the Bills that arise out of the Haj Committee's Report. Are they contentious measures? Are they contentious in the sense that there is a strong body of opinion in the House which would refuse even to send them to a Select Committee. I must protest against the view advocated by my Honourable friend. After all this House, if it wishes to discuss as fully as it did and which it was quite entitled to do, one of the measures to which I have referred, then it becomes necessary to sit somewhat longer in order to dispose of the remainder of the work, and I do not think it is unreasonable on the part of the Government that they should ask the House to sit longer when the measures that remain to be discussed by the House are not measures which are contentious, or in which it can be fairly said Government have put them down now in order to secure a majority which otherwise they could not have got. I do not think there is any one of these Bills now on the programme in which it makes the smallest difference as to their being carried or not-carried at what period of the session they are being taken.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Before I put the question, I am not sure whether I need take any serious notice of the appeal which has been made to the Chair. Honourable Members are aware of what happened when the Swaraj Party walked out and the ruling which the Honourable Mr. Patel gave on the first day, modifying it on the following day. I have got the proceedings here, but I do not wish to trouble the House with it. There is, however, one point to which I should like to refer. The Honourable Member has contended that a large number of elected Members have either been absent throughout the session or are absent now. In all democratic countries the responsibility for the discharge of obligations and duties of an elected member is the concern of the electorate. It is the duty if the constituency to call to account its representative who is remiss in the discharge of his duties on the floor of the House. The Honourable Member has asked whether the Chair would allow any very controversial measure to be sprung upon the House at the last moment. The Chair is bound to protect the rights and the privileges of the House (Applause) and if Government ever attempted any such thing without adequate reason, the Chair would take care that the House is not forced to discuss it, but if Honourable Members expect that the Chair would have any sympathy with those Honourable Members who take so much trouble and incur considerable expenditure in getting elected to the House and then do not care to attend to their duties, it is expecting too much. On the present occasion, the Bill, as has been pointed out, has been before the House for a considerable time. The Select Committee has reported upon it but it could not be brought up for discussion earlier because the Chair took care that the House should have an opportunity of fair debate on all questions which were submitted to its decision. Public business has to be done and elected Members are provided with the opportunity of contributing towards it. It is for them to decide whether they will avail themselves of it or not. The Chair trusts that the effect of this discussion will be that Honourable Members will make it a point to be present here to discharge the obligations which they have taken upon themselves.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: After the remarks that fell from the Chair I beg leave to withdraw the amendment.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The House will now proceed to discuss the motion for consideration.

Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I rise to support the motion for consideration of this Bill. This is one of those Bills which will be welcomed from all parts of the House. It is in fact an earnest of the sincere desire of Government to respect our ambitions and aspirations. I am particularly glad that it has fallen to the lot of a Punjab Civilian, whose connection with the Punjab, the sword-hand of India, can be traced to more than one generation, to steer this Bill through this House. The Bill has not been altered in any particulars by the Select Committee, and I hope I shall not be guilty of any breach of rules or etiquette to this House when I disclose that throughout the discussions in the Select Committee the attitude of the Honourable Member, Mr. Young, was that of an Indian.

12 NOON. The Bill when passed into law will give us a force which will be wholly Indian from top to bottom, and when we realise the importance of an air force in future warfare, it will be found to be the most important section of the Army of the country. The old days of invasion from land are gone; the old defences are useless and the future wars of the world will be fought in the air. So the formation of an Indian air force, important as it is, is also an index of the trust that Government has in our fighting material. I need hardly refer here to the perfect unanimity with which the report of the Select Committee has been presented before the House, and I hope the House will deal with the Bill in the same spirit of co-operation and trust. Although the Bill is original in its nature yet, as Honourable Members will see, its provisions have been borrowed from the Indian Army Act and the Royal Air Force Act. So it cannot be said that we are enacting methods which have yet to be tried. Sir, at this stage we need not go into details; that we can do when considering the Bill clause by clause. I would only repeat that the Bill is a most welcome measure, and I am sure this is the view that will be taken in all parts of the House. Sir, I support this motion.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Sir, I rise to accord my whole-hearted support to this Bill. The Bill inaugurates the creation of a new force which hitherto has been non-existent in India. I mean the Indian Air Force. The place of the Indian Air Force has long been taken up by the Royal Air Force. The Royal Air Force is an English force, but a portion of the Royal Air Force has, I understand, been utilised for service in this country. No Indian has hitherto been admitted to the Royal Air Force under statutory rules. This House has been anxious for the creation of a self-contained Indian unit in substitution for the Royal Air Force, and the Bill seeks to prescribe the discipline of the proposed Indian Air Force. The Bill is a non-contentious measure. It will be seen that there are 130 clauses in the Bill, and amendments have been tabled only on one clause, that is, clause 9. I am glad to see that Government in their Statement of Objects and Reasons have laid it down that the personnel of the Indian Air Force will be primarily Indian, and clause 9 of the Bill defines the class of persons to whom this Bill is to apply. Clause 9 says that the person to be enrolled

Mr. President: Would it not be better if the Honourable Member reserved his remarks till amendments are actually moved to clause 9? That is the one clause to which amendments have been proposed.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I am not going to explain at length the purport of clause 9, but I was merely referring to it in order to show that it has been so drafted as to confine enrolment in the Indian Air Force to persons mainly Indian or of Indian extraction and domicile. I will reserve my remarks on clause 9 till the time when the amendments actually come to be moved. It is a matter of great regret that in many important departments of Government, Indians have hitherto been excluded. They have been excluded from many sections of the Army, from the military Engineering Department, and many other national activities in the country. From the Royal Air Force, Indians have naturally been excluded because that is an English formation. Now this Bill inaugurates an era when we shall have our Indian personnel and Indian officers in the Air Force, and the Bill merely seeks to prescribe discipline and the punishments that have to be given for breaches of discipline, and so on. I do not think it is necessary for me to explain the other provisions of the Bill, we went carefully into them in the Select Committee. With these few words I accord my whole-hearted support to this measure. (Cheers.)

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, I also generally support this Bill. It is not my contention that it is useless or unnecessary. What I said was that it is a very important measure and I can show that by referring to some of these clauses. Clause 31 deals with death sentences under nine heads; clause 32 deals with mutiny and also prescribes death sentences on three counts.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Why have no amendments been tabled on them?

Mr. S. C. Mitra: I do not say that they are unreasonable; what I say is that it is a very important Bill which provides for many things and in many cases even death sentences have been provided for. I do not say it is unnecessary or that it need be amended but it is an important thing. That is my main point. My Honourable friend Sardar Sant Singh was in the Select Committee and he was very anxious to be present and move his amendment to clause 9, but because of stress of duty he could not stay. But he was most anxious to stay and deal with clause 9. That was one of the grounds why I brought in this motion for postponement of the consideration of this measure. Though they have provided, as my friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh said, that the air service should be confined to Indians, they have also provided that anybody who, even though he may not be an Indian, can manage to bring his father along with him from outside the border and declare that they intend to stay here will be entitled to be in this service. I think there is an amendment to this clause, and when that comes up I will argue this point, but it does involve a great principle. In the Civil Procedure Code there is definition of "Indian domicile" and I should like to know why in this case that is departed from and why this facility is given to any man who can bring his father with him and ask him to declare that his real intention is to stay in India. My apprehension is that the practice now obtaining in the Army of recruiting less educated and less cultured units, on the martial races theory, may be followed here. We fear that instead of the provinces supplying their quota, or instead of following the other principle of allowing minorities to have their proper representation, recruitment may as hitherto, be confined to Gurkhas beyond the Indian border or the tribal Pathans from across the frontier. My Leader says they are not recruited now. But, I find that this martial race theory has been followed so far as the Bengalis and Madrasis are concerned. They were considered to be martial races when the English came but

Mr. G. M. Young: May I interrupt my Honourable friend for a moment? My Honourable friend is talking about martial races. I have already pointed out in this House that there is no class composition in the Indian Air Force, and that all Indians are eligible for it. As a matter of fact, three Bengalis have already been recruited.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: I am very grateful to the Honourable the Army Secretary that unlike the Army, in the Air Force there will be no theory of martial races practised and that they have discovered it is a wrong principle. That satisfied me a great deal. I am in general accord with the disciplinary measures suggested in this Bill and I support it.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Sir, I rise to support the proposal brought forward by the Honourable the Army Secretary. The formation of an Indian Air Force is very necessary; and we cannot afford to lose any further time; and this Air Force cannot be formed unless there is legislative sanction behind it and therefore it is urgently necessary that this measure should form part of the Statute-book. Modern warfare requires that a country which wants to defend itself should have all its arms properly developed. The air arm has come into prominence since the late war and it has been found as a result of warfare on the North West Frontier that this air force is very useful and is very effective. Therefore it is necessary that this force should be developed as early as possible, and I congratulate Government for taking this step, and also for taking care that it should be formed mainly of Indians. There may be doubts or contentions about the nationality of an individual; but I take it, Sir, that those who are born on the soil ought to be called Indians and they ought to have the first claim. This question need not be taken into consideration at this time. I am in full accord with this measure and I desire that the Air Force should be developed as rapidly as possible. The Government and the Army Department may find that they will be in a position to reduce other branches of the Army, in that way economising money for the purpose of spending largely on the development of the Air Force. I heartily support the measure.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to support this motion. Though this particular Bill contains 130 clauses printed on 34 pages, if we read them carefully, we find that these are not new clauses. They are already in force in other departments of the Army, and we have had no complaint in the working of these sections. They have been carefully examined by the members of the Select Committee and the only serious objection that was raised was to clause 9, which we discussed day after day, and not less than ten different drafts were laid before the Committee and they were discussed at one stage or another and finally we came to some agreement; and as is the case with all compromises, it does not please everybody, but at the same time it did not displease anybody; and all the members of the Committee gave their unanimous consent to the draft which is now embodied in this particular Bill; and therefore I beg to support this motion as this Bill is not of a contentious nature; though it appears to be very bulky, there is no new principle involved in this Bill.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable gentleman from Aligarh, who is a mathematical expert, has borne testimony to the arithmetical accuracy of the numerous sections and sub-sections, 130 in all, of this Bill. After that there ought not to be any dispute on this side of the House over the Bill. I can understand the enthusiasm of the Army Secretary to do something tangible and useful on the eve of his departure from our midst, and therefore I congratulate him on having conquered this House without much difficulty.

Mr. G. M. Young: Sir, I think I need only say that the very favourable reception given to this Bill is a source of great gratification to the Government and to myself.

Mr. President: The question is;

"That the Bill to provide for the administration and discipline of the Indian Air Force, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 130 were added to the Bill.

The Schedule was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

Mr. G. M. Young: I beg to move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN TARIFF (WIRELESS BROADCASTING) AMENDMENT BILL.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore (Member for Industries and Labour): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to provide funds to enable Government to continue wireless broadcasting in India, by increasing the import duties leviable on wireless reception apparatus, be taken into consideration."

Sir, Honourable Members of this House are aware of the somewhat melancholy financial history of broadcasting in this country. Broadcasting was started by private enterprise in the year 1927 and an unbroken succession of annual deficit budgets drove the company into liquidation in 1930. Thereupon with the concurrence, I believe, of the Leaders of all Parties in this House, Government entered the field, acquired the company's assets for the very reasonable figure of 3 lakhs, and have ever since continued to administer the enterprise. As I will show presently, although Government by their administration have reduced the gap between receipts and expenditure, they have not yet been able to quite balance the two sides of the account. When therefore the Retrenchment Sub-Committee came to review the entire financial position, broadcasting with its deficit budget stood out in the general atmosphere of retrenchment and economy with challenging clearness as an object calling for the pruning knife. We on our part, Sir, were not able to claim this as essential expenditure and we therefore accepted provisionally the recommendations of the Sub-Committee and gave notice to the staff concerned. This action of ours immediately called forth a very strong expression of public opinion, which was a very surprising testimony indeed to the popularity of broadcasting in this country. We received representations from many members of the public, from the manufacturers of wireless accessories in this country, from dealers both large and small, who complained that flourishing businesses would be shut down and that we would be increasing the distress which the general depression has spread throughout the country. I have reason to believe that many Members in this House will endorse that view. I have in mind particularly my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, whose strong advocacy of broadcasting in this House we all remember. We therefore, taking into account all these representations, decided to continue broadcasting while we searched every possible avenue for finding means to balance the broadcasting budget, and the results of that search I am now about to place before the House. I ought at this point to correct a slight omission which has taken place in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. One sentence in that Statement runs as follows:

"They (the Government of India) consider however, that the service should not be a charge upon the general tax-payer, and they accordingly propose that the import duties on wireless reception apparatus should be enhanced so as to ensure that the customs receipts associated with broadcasting may suffice to cover the cost of the service."

There was an omission after the words "customs receipts" and the sentence should have read as follows: "so as to ensure that the customs receipts, together with other revenue would be sufficient to cover the cost of the service". I think, Sir, it will be common ground with everybody in this House that if broadcasting is to continue, it should not in existing circumstances, involve a charge on general revenues. There are two ways in which we can avoid doing so, firstly by a reduction of expenditure and secondly by an increase in receipts. I will take the reduction of expenditure first. I may say that we have as a matter of fact ruthlessly applied the pruning shears. During the present year, the expenditure has been reduced to 2 lakhs and 59 thousand, which is the very lowest on record, and for the coming year we have reduced even this to the figure of 2 lakhs and 38 thousand. We have now cut down to the bone and yet we find a gap of over 60,000 rupees to cover, taking all sources of income into account. I would ask the House to remember that the reduction of expenditure cannot be carried too far without its reflecting adversely on receipts. If you decrease the attractiveness of broadcasting either by the poor technical quality of your transmission or by the poverty of your programmes, and these must inevitably result from too rigid an economy in expenditure, then you must be prepared for a contraction in your clientele. Nevertheless the charge cannot be brought against us that we have been extravagant, and I think I shall be able to prove this from the following figures. Whereas in the three years under private management, the expenditure was in round figures Rs. 2,97,000, Rs. 3,35,000 and Rs. 3,17,000, we have reduced the expenditure in our time to Rs. 2,59,000 this year, and we hope to reduce it to Rs. 2,38,000 in the coming year. The losses have been reduced from Rs. 1,67,000, Rs. 2,15,000, and Rs. 1,85,000 during the years of company management to Rs. 1,44,000, and finally we hope to Rs. 68,000. We still have this gap between receipts and expenditure. We are therefore now driven to the only other expedient, namely, that of increasing our receipts. Unhappily, Sir, experience in the past has shown that the immediate prospect of our being able to increase to any appreciable extent our receipts from license fees is very strictly limited. Evasion unfortunately takes place; in spite of the fact that we are doing all we can to tighten up the administration of the law, the users of wireless sets escape through the meshes of our net; they have done so, and I am afraid they will continue to do so, but I hope far less successfully in the future than in the past, as we are taking very special measures which we hope will stop to some extent this leakage in our receipts.

The only practical hope, at present, Sir, of increasing our income so as to enable us to balance the broadcasting budget lies, therefore, in an increase of the taxation of the requisites of listening-in at the source, that is, at the point of entry into the country, and this is what we are now proposing to do. We are proposing that the duty on wireless reception instruments and apparatus and component parts other than valves and loud speakers, etc., which now pay an import duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem, should be increased to 50 per cent., which is the existing duty on such things as electric wireless gramophones and musical instruments. Our second proposal is that the duty on wireless valves designed exclusively for reception should be enhanced from 25 per cent. ad valorem to 50 per cent. ad valorem. This is the charge at present imposed upon electric bulbs, and finally we propose that the duty on loud speakers and amplifiers not definitely designed for public speaking sets or electric gramophones should also be increased from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. Judging from the conversations that I have had with many dealers on this matter, I feel confident that they will accept these increases in preference to closing down broadcasting. I have spoken to a great many licensees, and they have all agreed to some such form of self-taxation rather than face the alternative of the closing down of broadcasting. I want to make it clear that these increases will fall on the users of a luxury or at any rate an amenity which is confined to a comparatively few. It will not affect the users of the large number of sets which are manufactured in this country and which do not require valves. I am not able, Sir, to give to the House an exact estimate of the yield of these taxes for many reasons, but I think we may confidently hope that the yield of these new import duties will be more than sufficient to help balancing the broadcasting budget. Now if we do that, and if the bogey of continued deficits is out of the way, the future of broadcasting should be ensured and this will I hope give to the public that confidence in its future continuance that is absolutely essential if we are largely to increase our circle of clients.

Broadcasting, Sir, has a great future I believe in this country; but we will need to frame a comprehensive and progressive policy in regard to it when we are in a position to do so financially. At present financial considerations have made us do little more than mark time since we took over the venture, and I am afraid that for some years to come at least, financial conditions may impede the progress that we all look forward to so confidently. But I am certain, as I have said, that there is a great future for broadcasting in this country; and if, by the means which I am now proposing, we are able to carry it over these critical years, I feel certain myself that broadcasting is destined not merely to bring us in a rich return but to prove an instrument of the utmost educative value to the country. Sir, I move. (Loud Applause.)

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I am glad to find that on account of adversity and financial distress wisdom has at last dawned on the Government. Two or three years ago when the Honourable Member's predecessor (Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra) brought forward a similar Bill, some of us expressed a doubt about broadcasting. Sir, I live in the backwoods of Orissa where the music of those divine temples is more sweet to me than broadcasting; I do not enjoy the good fortune to live in Muzaffarpur like my friend, Mr. Gaya Frasad Singh (An Honourable Member: "There are splendid lichis there also"), whom my Honourable friend, Sir Joseph Bhore, complimented on his keen interest in broadcasting. To me broadcasting has been a puzzle; especially so when I come to modernised cities like Delhi and find people working hard on their wireless sets as others work on cross-word puzzles and trying to get into communication with Bombay and Calcutta and never getting any message. I feel, thank God, I live in a part of the country which is not attracted by the spirit of broadcasting. Sir, I entirely agree with my Honourable friend, Sir Joseph Bhore, that broadcasting is a luxury; and, if the Department is to continue, all its expenses should come from the luxurious class; and not only should the licensing fees be increased, but I entirely support this increase of the duty on broadcasting implements up to 50 per cent. Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member I am glad to see is now here. The other day we were talking of the evasion of taxation, and my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, heard just now from his colleague that the luxurious classes in India evade their taxes and do not pay even the licensing fees on their wireless sets. Sir, my Honourable friend, when he thinks of accusing the poorer classes of evasion of taxation, should therefore remember that it is the rich classes who evade more taxes. Sir, I do not mind broadcasting to continue, but I do hope that, whatever the expenses, if the 50 per cent. duty is not sufficient, my Honourable friend will see that the licensing fees should be doubled for those who want to have the special privilege in their evenings to enjoy what is happening in other places and other climes.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I congratulate the Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore on bringing forward this Bill. We were very reluctant in the Retrenchment Committee to recommend the abolition of this service, and we are very glad that the Honourable Member has found ways whereby the poor in this country will not be taxed and at the same time this broadcasting service will be retained. Sir, I do not agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, that broadcasting is a mere luxury, or that the ordinary man's enjoyment should consist merely in securing food and clothing. There are other small comforts, and broadcasting has helped us a great deal in having an educative effect in many ways. We can now put ourselves in contact with the civilized world, and with different parts of India itself and thus reap much educative value, and it is not a mere waste and luxury. It is part of the conventional necessities of civilized life. Sir, I support the motion.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, the Indian Air Force Bill was a very important, but
 1 P.M. a non-contentious measure, and this House enthusiastically passed it. This Broadcasting Bill is also a non-contentious measure, and I hope the House will pass this Bill also with acclamation. I remember, Sir, I went to Calcutta last year, and I visited the broadcasting station, and the Radio Association. I also remember that a memorial which was signed by hundreds of influential persons was presented to my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore protesting against the proposed closing down of broadcasting, and suggesting ways and means for making it self-supporting. I visited two years ago the broadcasting station in Bombay, and since then I have begun to take some little interest in broadcasting. There are two or three points on which I should just like to say a few words. I find that piracy associated with broadcasting is somewhat extensively practised, and steps may be taken to exterminate this evil, so that people who do not hold licenses may not unfairly take advantage from broadcasting. The second point is that the present license fee of Rs. 10, if inadequate, may have to be increased a little bit.

Mr. B. Das: Double it.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Not so much. The third point is overhead charges in the establishment are much more than they should be. I think the overhead charges also might be reduced. The history of broadcasting has been given in very eloquent terms by my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore. The Marconi Company was started in 1925, but for want of support from the public, and for want of financial assistance it had to be closed down. Then the Indian Broadcasting Company, Limited, was floated in Bombay in 1927, but for want of financial support it was languishing, until Government took it up, with the consent of the Members of this House. I understand that the total number of licenses has reached the figure, 8,390 and more. If the license fee be increased a little bit, the receipts from this source together with the import duties which are sought to be imposed upon the importation of wireless reception apparatus might be sufficient to put broadcasting on a self-supporting basis, without it being a burden upon the general revenues. Broadcasting has got a high educative value. It may be utilised in schools and colleges, and as a means of communication for lectures and other purposes just as we have got lantern lecture shows. Broadcasting may be used for awakening the masses, and for putting some light and education into them. I quite agree that broadcasting should not be made a general charge on the public revenues, and the Bill we are discussing is a measure which proposes to keep alive broadcasting in India as a state institution without at the same time making it a burden on the general revenues. With these few words, I strongly support the motion of my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to join in the chorus of appreciation showered on my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore, although I do not agree with my Honourable friend who has just sat down that the fee of Rs. 10 should be raised to Rs. 20.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I did not suggest that.

Mr. B. Das: I suggested it.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: At any rate his colleague from Bihar and Orissa said that it should be doubled. I do not agree with that suggestion. I am glad that some steps are being taken so that broadcasting may not die.

[Mr. Amar Nath Dutt.]

In fact at one time in the Standing Finance Committee, my Honourable friend over there who has just sat down seriously considered whether or not to discontinue this broadcasting in order to give some relief to the general revenues. After all, this is a matter of very small amount and even if this raising of import duty was not given effect to, the Government would have been perfectly justified in making a little more grant that was necessary for broadcasting. As my Honourable friend said, broadcasting has great educative value, and I should like to see it more and more popularised by installing broadcasting apparatus in every village

An Honourable Member: And in the Assembly also.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: I don't mind. It should be installed in every village so that this small amenity of civilised life may be available to the poorest of the poor living in mud hovels of villages. In these days, there is hardly any enjoyment in villages. The present economic distress has stopped jathras and kathakatas which combined education with pleasure in village life. I know how poor people work in the hot sun from morning till evening, and then go back and squat on the floors of their houses for the rest of the night without any enjoyment whatsoever. If only they had some little amusement like this. I think their life would be enlivened and cheered. In fact I would ask the Government to give a little more grant to save this broadcasting. With these words, I support the motion.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Sir, I have nothing to say beyond expressing my gratitude to Honourable Members in this House for the reception which they have accorded to this very small measure. I may say that, so far as I myself am concerned, my own anticipations with regard to the future development of broadcasting coincide to some extent with the ideas expressed by my Honourable friend Mr. Amar Nath Dutt. As regards the three points raised by my Honourable friend Mr. Gya Prasad Singh, I may assure him that they have been constantly under the consideration of the Government of India. There are very obvious objections to an increase in the license fees, but I will not trouble the House with my arguments in this case. I will confine myself to an assurance that all these points which have been made to-day will receive the most careful attention of the Government of India.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide funds to enable Government to continue wireless broadcasting in India, by increasing the import duties leviable on wireless reception apparatus, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Clause 2.

Mr. S. C. Jog (Berar Representative): I take this opportunity of joining in the chorus of congratulations to the Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore for having introduced this measure. As a matter of fact this broadcasting was practically in the throes of death and but for this timely help rendered up to this time, this luxury would have been killed.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member move his amendment first.

Mr. S. G. Jog: I move this very small amendment:

"That in clause 2 (b) in the proposed item No. 43 of Schedule II to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, the words 'including all electric valves, amplifiers and loud speakers' be omitted."

I see no purpose in putting these words here, especially when you say, "wireless reception instruments and apparatus and component parts thereof not specifically designed and so on". I see no propriety in putting these words, "including all electric valves, amplifiers and loud-speakers". Unless the Government explain to me the propriety of putting in these words, I for one, would like to press my amendment. If these words are deleted, I do not think it will affect the purpose of the Government in any way at all. One of the duties of the Legislature is to make the language as accurate as possible, and any superfluity is to be avoided. If I tell you that I give you all the belongings of mine in this House, it is not necessary to make any particular mention of some articles in the House like silverware, furniture, etc.

An Honourable Member: There is no harm in doing so.

Mr. S. G. Jog: That is the exact thing. We are legislators and not laymen. Our language has to be accurate and we have to avoid unnecessary points and superfluities. With these few words I suggest that Government should have no difficulty in accepting my amendment which does not affect Government or the revenues in the least.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhole: Sir, this amendment may, as my Honourable friend says, be a very small amendment, but I am afraid it may have some considerable effect. We are advised that the words to which he objects, though they may be merely explanatory, are really necessary to remove possible difficulties in interpretation, and I am afraid therefore that we cannot possibly accept it. If objection is taken on the ground that other than wireless apparatus will be roped in I ought to explain that there really is no difficulty in the matter, because our experts advise us that the parts of a talkie apparatus, for instance, are normally specially designed for that purpose and that they could not be classified as wireless apparatus under the terms of the Bill. In actual fact there should be no difficulty in the case of amplifiers and loud-speakers, but there may be some difficulty in the case of valves intended for talkie apparatus, some of which are equally suitable for broadcast receiving apparatus and gramophones. It may be that under the terms of this clause as it stands we may include a somewhat wider list than is intended, but I would urge that these are all luxuries and it will certainly give me no sleepless nights to see other luxuries roped in and made to pay a 50 per cent. duty. Sir, I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in clause 2 (b) in the proposed item No. 43 of Schedule II to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, the words 'including all electric valves, amplifiers and loud speakers' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. G. Jog: Sir, I beg to move the next amendment standing in my name and which runs as follows:

"That in clause 2 (b) in the proposed item No. 43 of Schedule II to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, the words 'and imported along with' be omitted."

The object of this measure seems to me that when the apparatus or the other parts are designed for purposes other than wireless reception, they are to be exempt from duty. But this clause says "designed for purposes other than wireless reception or are not original parts of and imported along with instruments or apparatus so designed". That means that if they are imported along with the main apparatus then they are duty free but if they are brought in separate parts or after some time, Government wants to levy duty on them. I think I have understood it correctly. What I cannot understand is what the object of Government would be. If they seriously want to exempt these articles, if they are designed for any purposes other than broadcasting, what matters it to Government whether they are brought with the apparatus or separately after some time? I fail to understand the propriety of such invidious and wrong distinctions. I suggest therefore that my amendment should be accepted and these words omitted. If the object of Government be to exempt those articles which are designed for purposes other than broadcasting, then they should be exempt whether brought with the apparatus or at any time afterwards. With these words I recommend that the amendment should be accepted.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: Sir, perhaps I might take a little time and explain to the House exactly the importance of the suggestion made by my Honourable friend. There are certain articles that are not exclusively used for broadcast reception purposes, but they can be used both for such purposes and also for other purposes, for instance, talkie apparatus. The object of the latter part of the entry, that is to say, the part to which my Honourable friend objects, is to render liable to the new duty in addition to things specially designed for broadcast reception, such of those articles to which I have referred as are not quite ascertainably meant for non-broadcast reception. It can be ascertained only if it is specially designed for or is an original part of or imported along with a talkie and other equipment with which it is intended to be used. If we were to omit the words "and imported along with", some importers would undoubtedly represent things of this dual nature as being replacements intended to be used for talkie apparatus, and we should have no assurance that in fact they were not designed as broadcast receiving replacements. I think therefore that we would be running an unnecessary risk by omitting these words. I do not think it can impose any very heavy or great hardship upon any class of importers and we would prefer therefore to retain the words to which my Honourable friend is taking exception.

Mr. President: The question is—

"That in clause 2 (b) in the proposed item No. 43 of Schedule II to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, the words 'and imported along with' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

“That clause 2 stand part of the Bill.”

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: Sir, I move that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

THE PUBLIC SUITS VALIDATION BILL.

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): Sir, I move that the Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration. As I have already observed, this Bill has been passed by the Council of State, so that the first motion in respect of this Bill in this House is the motion that the Bill be taken into consideration. The purposes of this Bill are, I think, sufficiently set out in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. Briefly, the position is that under sections 91 and 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in respect, in the first instance, of suits relating to public nuisances, and in the second instance, of suits relating to public charities, certain powers of initiation are vested in the Advocate General. Under section 93 the powers conferred by sections 91 and 92 on the Advocate General may, outside the Presidency towns, be with the previous sanction of the Local Government exercised also by the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf. I would draw the attention of this House to the words “previous sanction of the Local Government”. It has been generally understood that these words implied a general sanction; that is, that a general sanction could be given by the Government, and no particular sanction was required in respect of each suit brought by the Collector or the officer appointed by the Local Government. That practice became universal; and it was a matter of considerable surprise when it was declared by their Lordships of the Privy Council that we had been wrong in our interpretation of the section. All the governments in British India and all the High Courts have, I understand, shared in that error; and I think it was not a very unnatural error. Anybody reading that section would, I think, inevitably hesitate between the two meanings, and I think he would say that really the more reasonable meaning was that the sanction was intended to be a general one. That, however, has now been decided against us—the sanction has to be a particular one. The result is that a very embarrassing position has been caused to those litigants who were under the impression that they were proceeding in a perfectly lawful way, having obtained all the authority which was believed to be necessary from the Local Government. They now find that suits are liable to be dismissed, and in fact that suits are being dismissed in pursuance of this decision of the Privy Council in the case of Prem Narayan v. Ram Charan and others.

Now, Sir, Government do not claim to be the originators of this motion. In fact the original begetters of this Bill are sitting on the Opposition Benches, and therefore I may say that this Bill is a non-controversial measure, and I should say also a very useful measure, agreed upon by both sides of the House. For that reason alone I think it is not necessary for me to make a lengthy speech. The first proposal came from my Honourable friend, Mr. Biswas, in the form of a Bill, and at about the same time my friend, Mr. Sen, was saying to me daily, "When are you going to produce this Bill?". We were ourselves immediately convinced of the necessity for the Bill, but it seemed proper that we should consult Local Governments and that they should consult the High Courts. The result is complete unanimity and we have accordingly brought forward this Bill.

As I said in the beginning, and as I now quote from the Statement of Objects and Reasons, "The Bill is intended to remove a hardship. It validates all suits now pending and also provides for the retrial of all claims which may have been in the meantime dismissed, whether in the Court of first instance or in the Court of appeal, on the ground of the absence of the requisite sanction". Sir, I move.

Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move that the consideration of the Bill be postponed to the next Simla Session. My reason for moving the amendment is that Bill is of a highly controversial nature in spite of the declaration of the Honourable the Mover that it is not so. He is of that opinion simply for the reason that, according to him, "the begetters of this Bill sit on the Opposition Benches". Who are "the begetters" I do not know exactly, but our Honourable friend has enlightened us by mentioning two names. There may be many more who might be the begetters of this polyandrous Bill; but this morning, Sir, in the course of your ruling you remarked that the Chair would not allow any very controversial measure to be sprung upon the House, and that the Chair is jealous of the dignity of the House. That has been the view of President Patel also. If I may be permitted to read out a passage from the reports of the debate, Mr. President Patel on a similar occasion said:

"The Chair has a duty to see that the machinery of the Government of India Act is not abused to the prejudice of the people of this country and for that purpose the Chair possesses sufficient powers in the shape of the adjournment of the House sine die or in the shape of refusing to put any motion to the House...."

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member read Mr. Patel's ruling given on the following day?

Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy: I have not got it; but I have got a copy of your own remarks, Sir, before me in which you say:

"The Honourable Member has drawn attention to the fact that he has asked whether the Chair would allow any very controversial measure to be sprung upon the House at the last moment. The Chair is bound to protect the dignity, the rights and privileges of the House."

I shall show, Sir, that this is a Bill of a highly controversial nature. The very fact of the admission of my friend, Sir Lancelot Graham, that this innocent looking Bill had its origin in the Opposition and that the two "begetters" of this Bill are Members of this House, and yet the Government chose to move it in the House which, in the happy phrase of Mr. Ranga Iyer, is a House where "the benumbing penumbra of second childhood pervades" shows that this Bill was moved there simply with the object of depriving this House of making a motion to circulate the Bill for eliciting public opinion thereon. If I were only to read out section 92, the House will realise how controversial this Bill is. My Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham did not read out sections 91 and 92; he simply mentioned them. Section 91 deals with public nuisance, and I have nothing to do with that; but section 92 is not so innocent as it looks. I see a copy of the Civil Procedure Code before me, and I will just read to the House that particular section and leave it to the Honourable Members to judge whether this measure is of a highly controversial nature or not, however innocent looking it may appear to be. Section 92 runs as follows:

"In the case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the Advocate General, or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General, may institute a suit, whether contentious or not, in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate to obtain a decree—

- (a) removing any trustee;
- (b) appointing a new trustee;
- (c) vesting any property in a trustee;
- (d) directing accounts and inquiries;
- (e) declaring what proportion of the trust-property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust;
- (f) authorising the whole or any part of the trust property, to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged;
- (g) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may be, etc., etc."

I do not think I need read out the remaining portion of the section. I think I have already satisfied the House by reading out the section how controversial this Bill is. Who is going to decide whether a trust is for a public purpose, whether it is of a charitable or religious nature, and other intricate questions when the decree involves such important matters as the removal of the trustee or the sale or mortgage of trust property? For that reason a check has been provided in order to stop reckless and harassing litigation, in the shape of the consent of the Advocate General being required or of two or more persons having an interest in the trust property. Now, so far as the Presidency towns are concerned where there is an Advocate General the consent of the Advocate General is sufficient. This Bill does not affect the authority of the Advocate General, nor does the Privy Council judgment affect it. The authority which is affected by the Bill is that where the Collector is required to give sanction. My learned friend Sir Lancelot Graham remarked that all High Courts share in that error, namely, in the error of thinking that no special sanction is necessary in each case by the Collector. Well, the object of that provision of the Bill is quite obvious to those who are familiar with the history of the legislation when section 92 was introduced in the Act of 1908. The Legislature deliberately made a distinction between the Advocate General and the Collector. So far as the Advocate General, who is an officer of the Crown, is concerned, no special authority in every case was required; but where the Collector is concerned, special authority is required. It may be that for the Collectors who happen to be District officers heavily burdened with work, and more so in these days of unrest and political disturbance, who are very fond of outdoor life, and are too busy with their tennis and other social amenities to find time to apply their mind to each particular case Government thought that a general sanction as proposed in this Bill was quite enough.

[Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy.]

Now, what does the Bill propose to do? The Bill proposes to undo what the Privy Council has done. For years and years since 1908, all the High Courts of India have shared in an error, to use the language of my friend Sir Lancelot Graham. Now, the error has been pointed to them by the Privy Council, the highest Court of appeal in the Empire. Now, what does the Bill propose to do? To render that judgment infructuous in the name of public interest. Really, there is no such public interest involved in this measure. It is the interest of a particular individual. I have taken the trouble of reading the debates in the Council of State, and I find there is nothing stated excepting a reference to the section, and the Honourable the Law Member in the short space of five minutes had the Bill passed there including a congratulatory speech from the Honourable Mr. Basu. I find from this debate, the real reason for bringing forward this legislation before this House. It is, as I said, a wolf in sheep's clothing or perhaps it is a sheep in wolf's clothing. It is virtually a non-official Bill which has been brought forward in the garb of an official Bill and fathered upon Sir Lancelot Graham who repudiates the paternity of the child. The Honourable Mr. Bijoy Kumar Basu says:

"Sir, I congratulate the Honourable the Law Member for having brought this Bill, because there are a large number of suits which are pending in various provinces, which will be affected, as explained by the Honourable the Law Member, if this Bill is not passed into law. One of these suits is pending in my province—I mean the Tarakeshwar Temple suit,—and only this morning I read in the papers that in a pending appeal in that suit application has been made in the Calcutta High Court to have the suit dismissed on this very ground, and the date that has been fixed for the hearing of that application is 18th April. I only hope, Sir, that this Bill will be passed during this session, so that suits of that nature might not be dismissed for no fault of the parties. I have still more to congratulate Government, because they have so promptly taken up the suggestion which I am proud to say was made to them from a non-official source for a Bill of this kind; I believe as a matter of fact a draft non-official bill was sent up to Government by the representative of Calcutta in the Legislative Assembly—Mr. Charu Chandra Biswas"

Many Honourable Members may not know much about this temple of Tarakeshwar. It is a veritable Somnath in Bengal, and it attracted the attention of many an invader and conqueror from the North and it could not escape the eagle eye of the Congress. The temple was about to be demolished, as Mr. Biswas is aware, when the Swaraj movement was at its height and the Satyagraha commander-in-chief led the siege to that temple. After a time peace terms were proposed by the Swarajist Leader and there was every probability of a peaceful settlement. But for reasons better known to Mr. Biswas and perhaps also to Mr. S. C. Mitra the peace efforts failed. I leave them to complete the history, the genesis of this litigation, if they care to do so. I leave it deliberately incomplete at this stage. Any way, my point is this. I hope I have made it sufficiently clear that this Bill is of a highly controversial character. By way of contrast, may I refer to a Bill with which you must be very familiar, namely, the Wakf Validating Act? If I am not mistaken, in 1905 or thereabouts the Privy Council upset the Muslim law on the subject of waqfs and in the case of Abul Fata v. Mussonmay Dhur Chaudhury the Privy Council went out of their way to impose their own views regarding what a public charitable trust should be, in Muslim law. The Muslim community suffered long as a result of that judgment. There was a good deal of agitation, yet it was only in 1913, years after the judgment had been passed, that Mr. Jinnah succeeded in having his Wakf Validating Act passed through the old Imperial Legislative Council, and that also in the teeth of opposition. It was subsequently found that that Bill had to a certain extent defeated its own object because it was held that it had no retrospective effect, and it was only in 1929 that a Wakf Validating Bill was introduced by my Honourable friend Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi and it took a year or two years to be passed in this Assembly.

My Honourable friend the Law Member himself carefully went through the clauses when the Bill was before the Select Committee, balanced the pros and cons, the advantages and disadvantages of giving retrospective effect. Now, why all this indecent haste? We have been deprived, by the method of having this Bill passed by the Council of State, of having the public opinion elicited on it, and if to-day you rush through this Bill the public will not get the benefit at all of expressing its views on this measure. After all, what are you going to do? As a matter of fact, I consider this Bill to be highly reprehensible because in the interests of certain individuals you are introducing this Bill. Wherein lies the hardship? There is no hardship at all. Every day the courts of law dismiss cases on some legal point or other, and if suits are liable to be dismissed it will give a sort of opportunity to the litigants to settle the cases out of court. The Privy Council says and rightly says that special sanction must be given in each case and you want by this legislation to undo what the Privy Council wants to be done. The Collector may have been busy with the no-rent campaign in the United Provinces; he has not had time at all to go through the papers, or he may be very busy with the terrorist movement in Bengal round about Tarakeshwar and so on. And he has only to give formal sanction. I see in this House the vision of an ex-Collector with whose jurisdiction the Tarakeshwar temple is situated. He may have probably given his sanction, and the sanction stands ten years ago or many years ago—given for political reasons it may be, in order to defeat the Swarajist machinations to loot the temple and fill their coffers with the spoils to carry on the great campaign of Swaraj and freedom. What reasons actuated him we do not know. Any way, you now seek to keep that sanction alive. I wish the Honourable the Mover of this motion had at least placed before us the Privy Council judgment and given us the reason why the Privy Council judges made a distinction between the Advocate General and the Collector. (An Honourable Member: "He cited a case.") He did not give the reasons. Very well, Sir. These are my reasons for moving my motion.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): I rise to support the motion of my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham. The object of the Bill is simply this. Up to this time Government used to appoint the Collectors of districts to exercise the powers of the Advocate

[Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda.]

General by general order, and whenever any suit was filed in which the permission of the Advocate General was required, the Collector used to give permission. The Privy Council have now said that in every case that the Advocate General's consent is necessary, the Government should invest the Collector with the power of the Advocate General to give such permission. We are not concerned in this Bill with the principles on which the Collector gives permission. The only question is whether the Collector should be appointed to give permission in each suit, or whether he can be given a general power to do so by the Government. No principle of law and no important issue is involved in this Bill. Whether a Collector is empowered in each case to give his consent or whether he is empowered generally to give his consent to these suits, makes absolutely no difference so far as the principles on which the Collector exercises his judgment to give his consent for the institution of a suit are concerned. And that is the really important point. Owing to a certain decision of the Privy Council, certain suits have been invalidated, not because there was any question of law involved, but because any law was broken. That being so, it is inflicting unnecessary hardship on people if you invalidate their suits and place them in a position to have undergone all that expense for nothing and institute fresh suits. I have carefully considered the matter and I do not see that there is any real objection or any matter of controversy with regard to the consideration of this Bill. I therefore support it.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): I rise to support the motion moved by my Honourable friend Sir Abdullah Subrawardy. I think that this is a piece of legislation which, had the Government moved at an earlier stage of the session, this House would have seen to it that it was circulated for public opinion. So, the Government passed it through the Council of State and then they brought it here. This Bill I consider is a complete encroachment on the constitutional right of this House. If my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham wanted this Bill to be passed so hastily, I understand that he drafted 11 or 12 Ordinances, and why did he not draft an Ordinance to invalidate all the judgments of the Judges in Bengal and why should he follow this procedure? That would have been quite fair. Why should they ask us to condone the action of the Local Government of Bengal and may be of other Local Governments, and also to condone the action of the Advocate General of Bengal and those of other provinces, who are the legal advisers to Government? Why did they not point out to the Local Governments the mistakes that are taking place? Whenever we ask a short notice question about anything, the case is sub judice, and this House should not interfere with the course of law. To-day we are asked to give retrospective effect and invalidate the judgments given by certain judges during the last six months. Why should we do that? My Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham knows that we have no respect for the system of British administration

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Have you respect for the administration of temple grants by the Shehais?

Mr. B. Das: I am not concerned with the merits of the case; I am only concerned with the constitutional aspect that is involved in this Bill. There are eminent lawyers on both sides, and I hope that my esteemed and learned friend Sir Abdur Rahim will rise and expound the law that is involved in this Bill. We have still a little respect left for British justice. 1

3 P.M. understand from my friend Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy that the Bengal Government have been committing errors for years and years and you now come up before the Legislature asking them to regularise the action of the Bengal Government and other Governments in connection with pending cases. You want to go back and annul the judgments of the last six months. That is an encroachment on the liberty of the judiciary and on the liberty of the House and this House should not be a party to it. It would ask respectfully my friend Sir Lancelot Graham to withdraw this Bill and draw up an Ordinance, as he has drafted so many Ordinances. On this ground I whole-heartedly support the motion of postponement of consideration till the September Session. In the meanwhile if an Ordinance is passed, we will take no responsibility. Let them come up in September and the House will be full then and the Bill can be discussed in all its aspects.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): I am not at all surprised to find my Honourable friend Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy speak in the manner he did. It is quite a long time since my friend bade his final good-bye to the High Court. If my friend had only taken the trouble to go through the Privy Council judgment and the provisions of this Bill, he would not have felt so shocked at all. I venture to submit that it is not at all a controversial measure, and I shall satisfy the House that it is not so. It is a very simple and harmless measure, nevertheless very necessary. What is the position which has been created by the decision of the Privy Council? Sections 91 and 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure refer to two classes of suits, suits relating to public nuisances and suits relating to public charitable trusts. Such suits may be brought either by the Advocate General himself in the Presidency towns, acting on behalf of the public or by two or more persons with the consent of the Advocate General. That is the provision. The whole idea is that these suits being suits instituted in the public interest require very careful consideration before they are launched, and that is why the consent of the Advocate General is required. Section 93 of the Code then goes on to provide for such suits outside the Presidency towns, that is, suits in the mofussil. The Advocate General is not functioning there, but that is no reason why people residing in the mofussil should be deprived of this remedy. Section 93 accordingly provides that outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Courts, the Collector or some other special officer whom the Government may appoint in this behalf may exercise the powers which may be exercised in Presidency towns by the Advocate General. That section further goes on to lay down that before the Collector or the special officer who may be appointed in this behalf may exercise such powers, the Collector or such special officer must have the previous sanction of the Local Government. As my Honourable friend Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda very clearly pointed out, this previous sanction of the Local Government is required, not as to whether the suit should be brought, but merely as to whether the Collector or other officer should exercise the powers of the Advocate General. That is all. That previous sanction is not given upon a consideration of the facts of any particular case. The duty of examining the facts of any particular case is cast upon the Collector or the special officer. Government merely gives sanction to the Collector or the other officer to exercise the powers of the Advocate General. I shall place before you the terms of a notification under this section which was published by the Government of Bengal, and I believe that notifications in similar terms have been published in other provinces also. This notification purports to authorise the Collector and other officers to act under this section. It reads:

"In exercise of the power conferred by section 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Governor in Council is pleased hereby to sanction the exercise of the powers conferred by sections 91 and 92 of that Code upon the Advocate General by the Collectors and Deputy Commissioners in the Presidency Division, excluding the town of Calcutta, Burdwan Division and the district of Darjeeling within the limits of their respective districts."

The view which had all along been held was that a notification in such general terms was sufficient to convey the sanction required by section 93. For the first time last year their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, upon an objection raised for the first time in the Privy Council, were, however, pleased to hold that this previous sanction of the Local Government must be obtained specifically in respect of every individual suit, and a suit instituted under the authority of a notification in such general terms must consequently fail on that technical ground. That is the position. The object of this Bill is not to undo the Privy Council, not to reverse the judgment of their Lordships so far as the future is concerned. So far as suits which may be instituted hereafter are concerned, the interpretation which has been adopted by the Privy Council will stand. But it so happens that if something is not done to save pending suits, the result will be that plaintiffs, who have brought such suits through no fault of their own, will be put to considerable hardship. And who are the plaintiffs in such cases? Not persons who have anything to gain, but very much to lose indeed, if they fail—persons who act from a sense of public duty. All these suits are now threatened with dismissal, if the new procedure now held by the Privy Council as necessary is applied. The question is whether or not we here, acting as representatives of the public, will stand by those who from a sheer sense of public duty have thus come forward to protect and rescue the public endowments?

Mr. B. Das: Do not the lawyers charge fees for these cases?

Mr. C. C. Biswas: The lawyers unfortunately charge fees for these cases, and they have got to be paid by these people, who are, however, not deterred by that consideration from coming forward as plaintiffs. If they lose, they have got to pay the costs. On the other hand, if you allow these suits to be dismissed on this technical ground, who are the people who thrive as a consequence? Those who have been charged with maladministration and mismanagement of these public funds, and in some cases also found guilty by the judgment of at least one competent Court.

Sir, I am not ashamed of declaring for the information of my Honourable friend that it was my privilege, after I read this judgment of the Privy Council, to invite the immediate attention of Government to the serious situation created by that decision in respect of pending suits, and I went further. I also gave notice of a private Bill. Unfortunately the time was so short that a private Bill would have had no chance of going through in this session. Therefore, Sir, I suggested that an official Bill might be introduced, and I acknowledge with gratitude that Government have come forward with such readiness in response to what I believe is a public demand. (Hear, hear.) The reason why a Bill was moved in the Council of State was that there was no time to bring it forward here. It is very important that this Bill must be passed in this session, and I will explain why. In most of these pending suits there have been receivers appointed,—receivers who have taken charge of these trust properties; the receivers have been making collections, they have large funds in their hands, and those who are defendants in these suits—the managers of these endowments—naturally do not like that the management should have been taken away from them and placed in other hands. Now many of these suits have been pending in appeal courts, but the receivers continue all the same. I know one particular suit in which the receiver has about 3 lakhs of rupees in his hands. Suppose we allow this Bill to stand over. What is the consequence? The mover has read out from a speech made by an Honourable Member in the other House from which I gather that the 18th April is the day fixed by the High Court for the hearing of an application in connection with a pending appeal in such a case in the Calcutta High Court. That application is that by reason of this Privy Council judgment, that suit should be struck out. If this Bill is not passed, that application is sure to succeed, because the judgment of the Privy Council, unless it is reversed or modified by the Indian Legislature, is binding upon all courts, and the High Court must therefore give effect thereto and dismiss the suit. The result of such a dismissal will be that the receiver will stand discharged. Then all these 3 lakhs of rupees which the receiver has got in his hands will disappear into the pockets of certain people. My friend over there says, "Wait till September, allow the Bill to be postponed till the September Session, and the Bill provides that within six months you can take steps to revive the suit". Suppose the suit is revived within six months after September then this money which in the meantime will have disappeared will never be found again; and not merely that, during the intervening months, more funds will have been collected, and more funds will have found their way into pockets where they should never go. It is because Government are so anxious to avert such a result, such a public calamity, I should say, in respect of public trusts and charities, that they have brought forward this Bill, and they deserve all the thanks of this House. (Hear, hear.)

Sir, my friend need not be apprehensive. I am neither a wolf nor a sheep. Nothing of the kind. On the other hand, my friend has tried, with all the dexterity which anyone who has been detached for a long time from courts can command, to draw a very lurid picture of the controversial character of this Bill. He has, for instance, read out section 92. Now what has that got to do with this Bill, Heaven alone knows. We are concerned only with the question whether pending suits should be allowed to be hit because the Privy Council have now held that the sanction required under section 93 must be given specially for each suit, and not in general terms. My friend, Mr. B. Das, raises a controversial issue. What is that big issue, I for the life of me have been unable to comprehend. I think he says that this House was not given the opportunity to consider the Bill in the initial stage; in other words, that this House has been deprived of the opportunity of delaying its passage more and more! As the Bill was moved in the Council of State, a motion for circulation would of course not be accepted here. If the Bill had come before this House first, my friend would probably have had the chance to move such a dilatory motion. That cannot be done now. Sir, I really do not see why we should be anxious to adopt any such tactics here, that can only produce one impression on the public mind—the impression that we are interested in stifling suits which have it for their object the purification of these public trusts.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, this measure involves an extremely serious constitutional issue. My learned friend, Mr. Biswas, asked what that constitutional issue was. I will tell the House in very few words what that issue is. The Privy Council have decided a certain appeal on the question whether the sanction granted in a suit under section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code was valid or not. It has decided that according to the correct interpretation of the law, that suit had not the sanction that the law required. I do not think that it is the position of the Government that the decision of the Privy Council is wrong. I understand that that is not the position of the Government, and I shall proceed on that basis. I shall proceed on the basis, therefore, that the decision of the Privy Council on the question of law involved was correct. If that interpretation of the law was correct, then all suits that have been filed hitherto on the wrong interpretation of the law have to be dismissed; and it is a matter of everyday occurrence in court that suits that are filed without having conformed to the requirements of law in certain respects are liable to be dismissed, and many a suit is dismissed every day on that ground as the Honourable the Law Member and other lawyers in this House know very well. Now, then, what is this Legislature asked to do? What are we asked to do? Not to say that the decision of the Privy Council is wrong. We cannot say that. We are asked to say that that decision, that that interpretation of the law must not be applied to the suits which have already been filed contrary to that interpretation of the law. Does it not really come to the same thing,—that you are validating suits which according to the correct interpretation of the law were not validly filed, that is to say, in filing it the provisions of the law had not been complied with. Is that the function of the Legislature? The function of the Legislature is to pass a law and to leave entirely to the courts the interpretation of that law and the application of that law to particular cases. If this Legislature were to interfere because in the opinion of the Government or of certain Members of this House a certain interpretation of the law is wrong or should not be enforced, where is the matter to end? We should be usurping the functions of the courts, which I submit, with all respect to the House, this House has not got the machinery and is not in a position to perform. It is a function which can be performed properly only by the courts and by the courts alone. As a matter of fact in cases which are disposed of on what are called technical interpretations of the law, hardship is caused to litigants. That happens every day. But I have never heard that that is any ground for coming forward with a Bill, with a legislative measure, in order to relieve those litigants, because owing to the wrong advice given by their lawyers, they lost their suits. If the decision of the Privy Council is right in this case—and I maintain it is right—and as they point out this decision of theirs follows an earlier decision, then in that case what we are asked to do is to say that the litigants who succeeded in the lower or appellate courts should be deprived of their success by a measure passed by this House. The position which I take is that the Government will not dispute this; that this Legislative Assembly has nothing whatever to do with the interpretation of the law. If this Assembly finds that a certain law as authoritatively interpreted by the courts is not in the interests of the public then it can change the law. That is a perfectly legitimate function of the legislature but to go further and give it retrospective effect in the manner proposed by this Bill is undoubtedly wrong and it is a very serious matter which I submit the Government ought to take into consideration.

Having regard to the procedure that has been adopted in this case, the Bill was not circulated and cannot be circulated now for eliciting public opinion. In all cases which are instituted in the courts, there are two parties and surely it is not right on the part of Government because certain parties have lost in the courts or are likely to lose to come forward and support them here and get the Bill passed in order to enable them to succeed. This is a very serious aspect of the position that has been created. I do not know whether the Honourable the Law Member has got any precedents for a Bill of this nature. The Waqf Bill which has been cited by an Honourable Member of this House really has no bearing on this case. The Waqf Validating Bill purported to validate certain acts of parties, certain acts which they are allowed to do, not suits. That is a very different matter altogether. The Waqf Validating Act, I think, enacts that waqfs that had been created by parties before the passing of the Waqf Act relating to waqfs in favour of the waqfs' descendants, that in those cases, the waqf should be held to be valid, but the legislature was careful and rightly careful to see that any rights acquired by other parties in the property in the meantime would not be affected. Here, we should not be advancing any such cases. Here suits have been filed, some parties have lost, may be on a technical objection, that is to say, purely legal objection but why should we interfere in their favour? If we do that, I should like to know where we are to end. We should be turning this Legislative Assembly into another court, a court which is to sit in judgment even on the Privy Council. Surely, the Honourable the Law Member will not contend that and I am sure he will not countenance the position which leads to that effect.

I should like the Government to reconsider its position so far as this Bill is concerned and at least postpone its consideration to the September Session. That is the least they can do. There may be some cases which may be adversely affected, some causes may be lost, a position which cannot be helped. We know the courts sometimes do take a wrong view of law, sometimes the Privy Council itself finds it necessary, though in a somewhat disguised form, to amend its own previous interpretation of law, but that is a matter which cannot be helped. It is a matter of everyday occurrence. The position which Government ought to take up is that at least they should not hurry with this Bill but consult the High Courts, consult the Local Governments and consult public opinion before they proceed any further with this measure. As I have said there are always two parties to a litigation, the one party has lost and the other has won. We ought not to interfere because we think the party which won ought not to have won. This is a serious matter which Government ought to consider and we ought not to set a precedent of this nature, because once you do it, you really do not know what cases will not be brought up here.

[Sir Abdur Rahim.]

Parties losing their case in courts will bring a Bill of this nature and that would be an intolerable position. I hope again that the Government will reconsider its position.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): I have listened to my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim with great interest, and if I agree with him in any respect, it is on one point only, namely, that this is a serious matter. I will go further and say that this is a very urgent matter and not merely serious. As regards the other points, I am sorry I find myself in disagreement with him. He has treated suits on public charities as if they are suits between two private individuals. My Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim knows, probably better than anybody else in this House, that the Crown is the protector of public charities and suits between two private individuals are of an entirely different nature from suits relating to a public charity. Therefore when my Honourable friend said

Sir Abdur Rahim: Why does not the advocate General or some other Government official institute such a suit?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: My Honourable friend said that Government by bringing in this Bill was helping one of the parties to succeed, that it was helping the plaintiffs to succeed. I do not admit that we are helping anybody to succeed. We are only giving the plaintiffs a chance to succeed and if the plaintiffs do succeed then public charities are rescued from fraudulent trustees. This is the effect of plaintiffs succeeding in suits under section 92. No Government should be ashamed of protecting public charities against fraudulent trustees, but I disclaim the imputation that we are helping any of the parties to succeed in the sense of helping any private interest. We are merely helping the plaintiffs in restoring to them the chance of which they have been deprived by the Privy Council judgment for no fault of their own. That is all that we are doing.

Sir, as regards the genesis of the Bill my friend Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy seemed to be somewhat nervous. In order that there may be no misapprehension I will tell this House exactly what the genesis of the Bill was.

Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy: I did not say so. It was the Secretary of the Honourable the Law Member, Sir Lancelot Graham, who said that, the begetters of the Bill sit on the Opposition Benches.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I will tell the House quite frankly the genesis of this Bill. As soon as the Privy Council judgment was published, I received a large number of telegrams, letters and representations from various parts of the country pointing out that by reason of this judgment hundreds of suits stood liable to be dismissed. What was to be done? When I was considering this matter a private Bill was sent by my friend Mr. Biswas and he wanted to introduce the Bill in this House. I considered that Bill also. I found that it required some revision in the drafting and I also found that if a private Bill were introduced there was no time for the Bill going through the Legislature this session. And therefore I thought that in the interest of the general public,—not in the interest of this litigant or that litigant,—but in the interest of the general public and, in the interest of public charities of which the Crown was the protector, a measure like this was necessary, to save pending suits from dismissal which was inevitable. Therefore I introduced a Government Bill. For the sake of convenience I introduced it in the Council of State instead of bringing it up here in the first instance. That, Sir, is the genesis of the Bill. There is no secrecy about it; a large number of representations came to me and a Member, an elected Member, did send in a Bill. But I took it upon myself because I was convinced of the urgency of the matter.

Mr. B. Das: Why don't you postpone it till September?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I tell you why. Then all the mischief will have been done. One instance has been given by my friend Mr. Biswas. All lawyer Members of this House know that whenever a suit of this kind is instituted, it is immediately followed up by an application for a receiver and acts of maladministration by fraudulent trustees are alleged. They are investigated and if the court is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out a receiver is appointed as a matter of course. As soon as the receiver is appointed, he takes charge of all the assets of the charitable foundation. He not only takes charge of the assets, but he collects current income. The result is that the alleged fraudulent trustee is out of it for the time being. Now, if this measure is not passed in this session what will happen is this; applications will be made in every pending suit by the defendant that by reason of the Privy Council decision,—they will take no account of a Bill being pending in the Legislature,—the suit is liable to be dismissed. The courts will have no option but to dismiss these suits; all the receivers will be ipso facto discharged and all the monies which are in the hands of the receivers will have to be made over to the fraudulent trustees. That will be the effect of postponing the Bill and that is precisely the mischief which we want to prevent.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Why do you call them fraudulent when nothing has been proved?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir Abdur Rahim has been a Judge for many years and he will bear me out when I say that no receiver is appointed unless a prima facie case is made out; and in these cases of public charity the prima facie case which has to be made out is that the trustee has been guilty of fraud or breaches of trust. That being so, whenever you find in these cases a receiver appointed, there is a prima facie case of fraud or breaches of trust which has been made out to the satisfaction of the court. And, it is in order to prevent monies which are now in the hands of receivers falling into the hands of fraudulent trustees that it is urgently necessary that no time should be lost in passing this measure.

So, my first point is this. Sir Abdur Rahim is under a misapprehension when he thinks that suits under section 92 are like ordinary suits between two private individuals. These are suits of a different nature in which the Crown has a vital interest as the protector of public charities. Secondly, the urgency of the measure is to prevent monies belonging to public endowments and public charities being frittered away by people against whom serious allegations have been made; because, without serious allegations no suit is maintainable under section 92.

Sir Abdur Rahim's next point is that by entertaining this measure the Legislature is usurping the functions of the court. Sir, I submit it is doing nothing of the sort. The Legislature is not called upon to pronounce upon the merits of any suit. It is concerned only with a matter of procedure, a procedure of which Government and all the courts in this country had taken one particular view for the last half century or more. That view of the procedure is now declared by the Privy Council to be wrong. For no fault of anybody but for simply following a procedure, which was honestly believed to be the correct procedure and which all the courts in this country had pronounced to be the correct procedure, numerous pending suits are threatened with dismissal. If the Legislature, in conditions like this and without going into the merits of any case, gives relief to this large body of plaintiffs, that is not usurping the functions of the court. The primary function of the court is to adjudicate upon the merits.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Not on questions of procedure?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I said the primary function of the court is to adjudicate upon the merits. The preliminary function is to see that the correct procedure is followed. If the Privy Council judgment had not been made, all the courts would have said that in these cases the correct procedure had been followed: We are now confronted with the Privy Council judgment which has intervened. What we had considered to be the correct procedure now turns out to be the wrong procedure. In these circumstances it is, I submit, the duty of the Legislature to come to the rescue of the aggrieved people, who for no fault of their own and after having spent money and time for the sake of protecting public charities, now find themselves threatened with dismissal of their suits. That being so, it is peculiarly the function of the Legislature to step in and give relief to these plaintiffs. That is not usurping the function of the courts. We are giving relief against the consequences of the Privy Council decision only in the pending cases.

These are all the points which have been made. I submit that this is not merely a serious matter,—hundreds of suits are pending all over the country,—but it is an urgent matter. If this measure, which we consider to be a beneficent and necessary measure, is to be effective at all, it ought to be passed by this Legislature and today if possible.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable the Law Member and the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party, who are certainly two old legal luminaries in this House, have presented to this House both sides of the shield asking the laymen to judge for themselves. Sir, the Law Member's force of reasoning, I must admit, has dimmed Sir Abdur Rahim's lustre of eloquence. Coming to the argument of my friend, Mr. B. Das, I must certainly say that Mr. Das very rightly stood for the supremacy of this House over the Council of State, and my friend, the Honourable Sir Lancelot Graham, by bringing down this Bill from the Upper House to the Lower House has acknowledged that supremacy. As that Upper House exists and the law permits that a measure could be brought down from the Upper House to the Lower House to give the final stamp of approval, I do not think anything unconstitutional has been attempted or illegal perpetrated. So far as procrastination of this particular Bill is concerned, quickness of decision has always been considered to be a virtue of the legislators, whether in this country or in any other country; and the very fact that this matter has been discussed in the Council of State—and the discussion in the Council of State was not conducted in camera—ought to be sufficient justification for proceeding with the Bill, now that the matter has been before the public for a sufficiently long time for the Members of the House to form an opinion for themselves. I am not an advocate for absentee lawyers on this side of the House. Members of the Legislature, if they are not sufficiently interested in matters coming before the Legislature and are therefore absent, are responsible for their absence and those who are present cannot abdicate their duty. I need not emphasise the urgency of the matter so lucidly and clearly put by the Honourable the Law Member. All that I need say is that my party leaves it an open question, while lawyers on my side who are present are on the side of the Honourable the Law Member.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I was rather surprised at the speech delivered by my Honourable friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer. I thought he would always fight for the true interests of the Assembly and for justice. But recently he has put on a new mantle and he opposes anything sensible, reasonable, or anything which emanates from the party to which he does not belong. I really do not know. . . .

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member speak to the motion?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am just coming to the motion. One thing I do not understand very clearly is this; here was a private Bill of a certain individual and the Law Member took it upon himself to make it a Government Bill; he did not stop there; he went further and instead of presenting the Bill before this House he went first to the Council of State and brought it down here from that place. I think this reverse process really showed the weakness of the case, because had he really considered it a strong case he would have come to the Legislative Assembly first. I am myself not a lawyer; but the way in which this Bill has been piloted, first as a private Bill, then made into a Government Bill and then taken straight to the Council of State, where any Bill can be carried with certainty, shows the weakness of the whole case. There is one thing which is certain; and that is that any Bill which is brought before the Council of State is as certain to be carried as two and two make four. In the case of the Assembly now, on account of the change of attitude which the Leader of the Opposition has adopted, I say the Government are now mathematically sure to carry any Bill in the Assembly, but till recently the Government were not sure of this position. It was clearly pointed out by the Leader of the Independent Party that the Government ought not really to interfere in a matter like this. It is really the function of the court; and if we begin to legislate in this manner, it may be for the interests of individuals or of a particular party, I think we do not know where we will land ourselves. The Honourable the Law Member came out as a champion of endowments. I wish he would support and present a Bill about endowments in general and take possession of all endowments in the country

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I wish I could.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, we have examples of other countries which have taken direct charge of all the endowments, they are administered by the State departments. If he is really a great champion of the endowments and I am sure that he is, he will certainly bring forward a Bill and if he does so I can understand his position and I promise full support. He will certainly be able to carry it in the House. But to interfere in the administration of trusts simply under the excuse that he has brought forward shows the weakness of the method he has adopted and that his whole case is very weak.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Sir, I am really surprised to see that there has been so much opposition to this innocent Bill. It is well known that trustees of Hindu temples have turned themselves into absolute owners, and have been doing anything they like with the trust property; and as the British Government have been rather indifferent to these things, these persons have been left to enjoy the property as if it was their own. The Civil Procedure Code makes provision for calling these *shebait*s or trustees before the court and asking them to show that they have been administering the trust properly. But the procedure laid down has been a very difficult one and a very expensive one, and unless in very urgent cases, or unless the property is very big, nobody generally thinks of instituting a suit. But the gravity of the situation is shown by the fact that, in spite of these difficulties, so many cases have been pending before the courts all over the country; and it is quite necessary in the interests of justice that these cases should continue to go on, and the wrongful persons or those who have committed breaches of trust should be brought to book. If this Bill is not passed all these persons will be wrongfully benefited and therefore great injustice will be done. My friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, asked why Government were not taking these trusts under their own management. He cited the instance of a foreign country which was managing its own trusts and perhaps he had the Soviet Government in Russia in view. I wish to inform him that in the State of Mysore, a Muzrai department has been established and is managing all these public trusts; and in the small State of Kolhapur the same thing is going on. So the Hindu Princes are quite alive to the necessity of managing these religious trusts in order to carry out the intentions of the original donors; and I may also state here that the Government of Madras since the reforms have had a Bill passed there and they are managing the endowments of the Hindu trusts also to the benefit of the general public; and the so-called trustees are there brought under check, and that was done by the ministry of the Justice Party. So I whole-heartedly support this Bill and oppose the motion of adjournment.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Sir, I have very few remarks to offer at this stage. Firstly, I should like to thank those

Mr. S. C. Mitra: On a point of order, Sir. The motion before the House is that this matter be postponed till the next Simla Session. Is that carried?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): No, No; it is the amendment that is now being debated. The whole question has been allowed to be debated to save time. The motion for postponement will be put to the House after the reply has been given.

Sir Lancelot Graham: I understand, Sir, that I am to reply both on the motion for postponement and Mr. President: No, there is an amendment for the appointment of a Select Committee.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Therefore, Sir, I am to reply solely on the question of postponement. Very good, Sir. That has been so effectively dealt with that, I think, all that is necessary for me to do is to repudiate the charge which was somewhat light-heartedly levelled against the Government of having introduced this measure in the Council of State in order to prevent the bringing in of a motion in this House that the Bill be circulated. I confess, Sir, I was surprised that my friend Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy should have thought me capable both morally and intellectually of such machinations. That bright idea never suggested itself to me for a moment. We were solely concerned with helping both Houses to get through their business in as reasonable a time as possible. By the time we had decided to bring in legislation on this point, our programme here was so packed that there was no room to insert the earlier stages of this Bill, and therefore it was purely for the convenience of business in this House and the other that we introduced the Bill in the other House. Had we been really as wicked as my friend Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy suggests, we might have moved in the other House the Bill to refer to Select Committee, and if we had done that, then no amendment of any sort could have been moved in this House, except for postponement. Therefore, I think the House will agree that we have not in any way trifled with the dignity and powers of this House. It is fully recognised that in this bi-cameral legislature legislation may be initiated in either Chamber. We do in practice introduce most of our legislation in this Chamber, but I doubt if a single session of this Legislature has passed since 1921 in which some Government measures have not been initiated in the Council of State.

There are one or two points in my friend Sir Abdur Rahim's speech which have really been dealt with by the Honourable the Law Member. My friend said there was no precedent at all for this sort of thing, and we were simply putting a premium on litigants. The justification for this legislation is that the mistake is not really that of the litigants. The error was a universal one, and in my opinion a reasonable one. I am not saying that the decision of the Privy Council is incorrect. Personally, I am convinced that it was correct, but at the same time I say that the error was a reasonable one, and it was an error on the part of Government. Consequently these litigants had to suffer, and that point has also been dealt with already. These litigants are taking upon themselves a very unpleasant duty in the interests of the public. Their suits are being dismissed on account of a reasonable mistake, and the only way to do any sort of justice. I submit, is to bring in a Bill of this kind and to put it through as quickly as possible, for, Sir, time literally is of the essence of this legislation. People say, "Well, pass this Bill six months later", but I think that Honourable Members who make that suggestion do not realise that litigants have not got an unlimited purse at their disposal. Therefore, it is absolutely essential that no more money nor time should be wasted. It is a waste of time, and therefore this measure should be passed without any undue delay. Sir, I oppose this motion.

Mr. President: The question is—

"That the consideration of the Bill be postponed till the next Simla Session."
The motion was negatived.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The next amendment on the Order Paper is for circulation which cannot be moved under Rule 29.

The next amendment which can be moved stands in the name of Mr Maswood Ahmad to refer the Bill to a Select Committee.

(Mr. Maswood Ahmad was absent.)

Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin has given notice of the same amendment.

Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin (Cities of the United Provinces: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Sir Lancelot Graham, Sir Abdur Rahim, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy, Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhry Lal Chand, Rao Bahadur Pandit, Mr. S. Fazl Haq Piracha, Mr. B. Das, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, Mr. K. Ahmed, Sirdar Harbans Singh, Mr. Muhammad Muazzam Sahib Bahadur, Mr. Ghuznavi and the Mover, with instructions to report in the next session, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five. My reason for moving this amendment is to have an opportunity for the public to go through the whole matter. Sir, I am a layman, a plain man of business, and I cannot understand why there should be such great hurry for upsetting the judgment of the Privy Council, which is the highest court of appeal in the Empire. I am sure there is no public demand asking Government to adopt such a measure. The general public knows nothing about the matter, and therefore public attention should be drawn to it and we the representatives of the public should be given an opportunity to form our opinion. I therefore hope that my motion to refer the Bill to a Select Committee will be adopted by this House.

Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim (Chittagong Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, there is an amendment in my name in almost identical terms to the one moved by my friend Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, and if I take this opportunity to say a few words I would spare the House from repeating the same motion again. I have listened with a great amount of interest to what has fallen from my esteemed friend the Law Member and also from my esteemed friend the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party. One of the speakers said that on certain matters of importance both Sir Brojendra and Sir Abdur Rahim have differed and it would not be right for others to take a detached view one way or the other. As one more or less connected with this line of business in which Sir Abdur Rahim is and my friend Sir Brojendra was engaged, I think it will be pertinent on my part to say what I most humbly think about the merits of this Bill. The constitutional issue raised by Sir Abdur Rahim goes into the root of the whole matter—whether this Legislature can sit on judgment over the works of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

The Judicial Committee have passed judgments regarding the merits of Section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code—and they say that sanction of Government in all cases must be obtained now. This Bill says that sanctions will be taken from this time upward, but they should like to give relief to those people, who have lost their cases on account of the present ruling with retrospective effect from November, 1931. This, Sir Abdur Rahim said, is improper—and here comes in the conflict. To my judgment Mr. President, Sir Abdur Rahim is right and the action of the Government in this matter is certainly wrong. I hope that this is

4 P.M. the last occasion on which the Government of India on the legislative side, or for that matter on any side, have been advised to introduce important measures of this kind in the Council of State. We know the importance of having a bi-cameral legislature, but there are certain things which should not be done. Will my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham advise the Finance Member to introduce a Bill which may savour of bringing some money into the coffers of the State, in the Council of State? The Honourable the Law Member by way of meeting the argument of Sir Abdur Rahim said, yes, it is correct that courts here in this country are possessed of two functions, one whether a particular suit which comes before them is of proper jurisdiction, and second, to try the case on its merits. By the introduction of this piece of legislation, the Government have tried to usurp the functions of the court, and the contention of my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim has not been properly met by the Government. Why is this inordinate hurry? I know of instances in which a particular decision was the result of the mental aberration of a Judge of the High Court in this country. People know the kind and quality of cases which come before the judicial tribunals in this country. Cases under section 124 of the Penal Code require the sanction of the Local Government and for want of proper sanction they are dismissed. I am certain my Honourable friend knows very well, and I think some time ago it was represented to him by certain people in this country whether it is not a fact that there have been different kinds of decisions of the highest courts in this country with regard to section 497 of the Criminal Procedure Code. When important cases of that kind are brought to the notice of the Government, I have never known that they have taken any serious notice of them. It is far from me to impute any motive to any side or any person, but it looks outlandish and rather hasty for Government to come in with this piece of legislation at this fag end of the session with such a hurry. I know personally we were interested in a case in 1905 that went up to the Privy Council. That was decided by the Privy Council in a correct form—and if the decision of the Privy Council had been given effect to in 1905

or 1906, I assure you, Mr. President, that lots of property would have been saved and those of some very loyal citizens of the Empire. But those are old cases. If we had people of the ability of Mr. Biswas they would have been able to get through legislation to confirm the Privy Council's decision. But that is an old story. My Honourable friend the Leader of the Independent Party asked, what will be the effect if this Bill is taken up in the Simla Session? The reply came from Mr. Biswas, "Oh, the whole world will come down, the receivers will be grabbing the whole money". But my Honourable friend Mr. Biswas knows very well that the receivers have to furnish very heavy securities. It may be personal security sometimes, but the receiver has got to account for every cowrie that comes into his hands. Besides Mr. President what is the proof that these trustees are all swindlers? It creates a lot of uneasiness in the minds of us all this side, because this Bill is to be passed immediately. There are more important things which the public thought that the Government should take notice of, but they slept quietly over them and did not take any notice, but this is not likely to hurt anybody, and I am really surprised that Government should simply blurt out that they have hundreds of instances where these people will be penalised. But is this a fact? They have not been able to bring out even one instance. Again, where is the decision of the Privy Council? If it was possible for Members to know where the Privy Council had gone against the existing law, of course, we might have been able to take a proper view. I am surprised that my Honourable friend Mr. Jadhav should so lightly treat the suggestion of Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad said, if Government were so solicitous with regard to the preservation of old properties, they should have been able to bring in some measure by which those properties could be properly administered.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: May I inform the Honourable Member that it is a provincial subject and the Provincial Governments may take it up?

Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: What was the reply of the Government? It was a very unconvincing reply. My view is this. If the Bill had been introduced here and allowed to roam over all parts of the country, then public opinion would have been available, we would have seen what the public Press had to say, what the platform had to say, about it. But to merely swallow the whole thing on the speech of Mr. Basu and the Honourable the Law Member, I feel it is rather difficult to do so. Mr. Das and others have taken the constitutional aspect of the case, and they have my support. The Government of India are the victim of many things, and this is an instance in view. The Wakf properties of the Mussalmans will come under the mischief of this Bill.

I am also surprised to see that Government lend their support to measures, which are likely only to benefit a few individuals only.

With these few words, I support the motion of my Honourable friend Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin.

Mr. S. C. Sen (Bengal National Chamber of Commerce: Indian Commerce): I oppose the motion for reference of the Bill to a Select Committee. This is a dilatory motion in par with the two previous ones, and I submit that the Bill need not have been put forward if it could not be passed at once. The whole object of the Bill is to prevent further mischievous being done. The only principle underlying the Bill is to make good a wrong which has been done by reason of a wrong interpretation,—or as my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham said, although it is a mistaken interpretation, it is a reasonable mistake committed by the Local Governments and it is the duty of the Government to come before this House and the other House and to pass a law by which to remedy the wrong which has been unintentionally done to the litigants who at very great expense had taken upon themselves a public duty to do good to the public trusts. As the Law Member rightly pointed out, these suits are not of a private nature but of a representative character as it is called. The plaintiffs represent the public but to represent the public they have to go through certain formalities, one of the formalities being that they should obtain the sanction of the Collector of the districts and of the Advocate General in the Presidency towns. Under section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code the Local Governments have to authorise the Collectors or other persons to give sanction. The Local Governments throughout India took the view that they could by general order authorise the Collectors by general order to give sanction. The Privy Council, however, considered that a general order was not sufficient and that special order in every case was necessary. The result is that all suits now pending are liable to be dismissed for no fault of the parties. Who is the person who will be benefited if this legislation is not passed? The poor fellows who launched into litigation for the public benefit would lose the costs already incurred because the Government officials made mistakes. There is no constitutional question involved in the matters that the Legislature is riding rough-shod over the courts or the judiciary. That is not the question before us. The question before us is merely whether the persons who would ultimately suffer by reason of the decision of the Privy Council upsetting a practice extending over 60 years should be given any remedy, any delay will defeat the object. With these observations, I oppose the motion for Select Committee.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I support the motion to refer the Bill to Select Committee. As I listened to my friend the Honourable the Law Member in support of the motion to take the Bill into consideration, it seemed to me that he has been lapsing into his old habits of an advocate. He has raised points which would be all right in a court of law as coming from an advocate of a certain party, but I do submit to this House that arguments like that are no answer to the important constitutional issue that arises in connection with this measure. The point he wanted to make was that these suits were suits with reference to public trusts and therefore the decision in these suits must be treated on a different basis from decisions on other suits.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: No, no.

Sir Abdur Rahim: It comes to that, at any rate that these suits must be treated on a different basis. My friend suggested that public endowments ought to be protected. Is he prepared then to contend that all the suits that are instituted under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code are really bona fide suits and deserve to succeed? Does he not know by experience that many of these suits are mala fide and deserve to fail?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: All we are saying is this—give the courts a chance to say so.

Sir Abdur Rahim: That brings me to his next point, that the decision of the Privy Council was in regard to a question of procedure and therefore this legislature is entitled to set the Privy Council right. Is that a good argument? Is that a good constitutional argument; because the decision has been on a question of procedure, therefore this Legislature should take up the function of a court of appeal and set aside the decision. Questions of procedure are sometimes very important. Procedure is often the essence of a suit and surely it is the court which is best fitted to say whether the right procedure has been followed. What about questions of limitation? How many suits are not dismissed because they are filed a few days too late. Prima facie we may say this is very hard. Could you bring in a law to give relief to those litigants who have been too late? Litigants are sometimes badly advised by lawyers. In that case, is it any justification for the legislature to say—here are these poor litigants who were not at fault. They engaged lawyers, paid them handsome fees in order to derive advantage from their legal experience and technical knowledge and they have been misled. Therefore we must set matters right. Is that really the argument of my Honourable friend the Law Member? I should have thought that the Government would consider this as a serious question and not hurry the Bill like this. They will be establishing a bad precedent. Are Government prepared to bring in Bills of this character, whenever any such cases happen? I should like the Government to declare that. They would be putting themselves in a very false position indeed if they took up an attitude of that kind.

It has been said that this is a very urgent matter. A receiver has been appointed in some suit. Several lakhs of rupees are in his hands, and may have to be refunded to the trustees if the decision against the plaintiff stands. That is the position. What have the public been doing all this time and why were not proper steps taken in time against trustees who are now alleged by two or three members of the public to be in the wrong? Are there not many cases of mismanagement in which no action is taken? Are there not honest trustees as well? Are not there trustees who are harassed by interested litigants who easily get a fiat from the Advocate General or the Collector or the Local Government in order to institute suits of this character? Can that be denied? The whole position really resolves itself into this. You are saying that in certain cases litigants should not be allowed to take advantage of the law as has been interpreted by the Privy Council. Is that the right position for Government to take up? I am not interested either in endowments or in persons seeking to set right the administration of any particular endowment. I am raising this question as it involves constitutional issues of very grave importance.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If I understood my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim rightly, he is supporting this motion.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Yes.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Then he accepts the principle of the Bill and he wants this Bill to be referred to a Select Committee to see to the drafting.

Sir Abdur Rahim: That is the least that could be done now.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Either he was speaking on the motion for reference to Select Committee or he was speaking on something outside that motion. I take it that my Honourable friend, the Leader of the Independent Party, would not be guilty of any error of procedure, and he was talking in support of this motion for reference to a Select Committee. Sir, acceptance of a motion for reference to a Select Committee means this that you accept the principle of the Bill, but that there are drafting defects which may be remedied in Select Committee. (Sir Abdur Rahim: "Not merely that.") Sir, not a single word has been said in criticism of any of the clauses of the Bill by my learned friend. Therefore I take it he has no quarrel with the drafting of the Bill. The principle is accepted and the drafting is all right. Now I should like to know how he reconciles the two positions he has taken up. He has not criticized any of the clauses. He attacks the principle of the Bill, and yet he supports the motion for reference to a Select Committee! Sir, neither the Mover of this motion nor my friend, Mr. Anwar-ul-Azmi, who supported this motion touched upon a single clause of the Bill. So, I take it that all the Honourable Members who are supporting this motion accept the principle of the Bill. If they accept the principle of the Bill, and they find no fault with the drafting then, I have got no quarrel with them.

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil (Bombay Southern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to support the motion for referring the Bill to a Select Committee. The Honourable the Law Member just said that the Leader of my Party did not refer to any of the clauses of the Bill. I maintain, Sir, that in effect he did refer to the clauses of the Bill in this way. He said that when a suit is dismissed, important rights accrue to a certain party. Now the question before us is, are we going to disappoint him? Are we going to take away his rights accrued after the suit has been dismissed? That is the point that was made. Now let us consider some of the clauses of the Bill. There is a clause in that Bill that suits already dismissed after some date in November until the passing of this Bill into law will be restored by reason of this Bill being passed into law. If that is so, what provision have you made for making amends to the person whose rights you are going to take away now? That, Sir, was the thing that was pointed out by my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, and that is the reason why I support this motion; because if this Bill goes to Select Committee, they will at least make certain provisions for the benefit of persons who will suffer by reason of this Bill being passed. Then, Sir, my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, discussed every implication arising out of this Bill and he also touched upon the principles involved in this Bill. It is true that we cannot go against the principle, but I submit that we get still another opportunity to throw away the Bill altogether and it is for that reason that my friend still spoke on the principle. Now let me point out that there is absolutely no hurry for passing this Bill into law. It is submitted by the Honourable the Law Member that if at all this Bill is to be passed, it must be passed in this session only because he says that the public trusts are in danger, that the trustees are likely to fritter away public money. I say this is very rare; because as a practising lawyer

[Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil.]

I know a number of vexatious suits filed against trustees simply because there is a private grudge, simply because they themselves are not the trustees.

Then, Sir, what is the procedure before suits are filed? A copy of the plaint is sent either to the Advocate General or to the Collector of the district and he considers the plaint from top to bottom and from bottom to top. He will consult his subordinates and he will take their opinion. If the matter in question is a serious one or if he thinks that really the property is in danger and that there is any possibility of money being frittered away, certainly he will personally undertake to prosecute the case. If we look into the provisions of the section, we will see that there is discretion given either to two persons among the public or to the Collector or to the Advocate General himself to prosecute the suit. Therefore I say in all cases where there is any serious danger to public money, suits are undertaken by the Collector or by the Advocate General. My Honourable friend the Law Member or the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill may be knowing how many suits are actually filed by the Advocate General or the Collectors; will they look into their records? I submit they must be very few and can be counted on one's fingers.

Then, Sir, I ask, is it fair that we should sacrifice the principle involved, or that we must allow some property to be wasted away? The former course, I think, is inadvisable because, as my esteemed leader submitted, we would be setting up a very bad precedent. Is it proper for this Legislature to lend its helping hand to all defaulters, to all people who are negligent and who have with eyes wide open neglected to take proper precautions, to obtain proper sanction? For these reasons I heartily support the motion for reference to a Select Committee.

Some Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda: Sir, I wish to say a word with regard to the two points which have recently been made. It was said that this Bill makes the Legislative Assembly sit as a judge to correct the mistakes of the Privy Council. As I understand the Bill, this is not a proper representation of the case. The Privy Council have interpreted the law in one way. The Local Governments have interpreted it in another way. This Bill does not say that we shall correct the interpretation of the Privy Council. This Bill has been brought in only because the Government think that the Local Governments have wrongly interpreted the law, and in order that the wrong interpretation may be set aside and that any losses caused to people because of the wrong interpretation put upon it by the Local Governments may be made good, it is because of that that the Government have undertaken this Bill. I think it was also asked, will Government bring forward such validating Bills again? I think if such circumstances arise again, then it will be the bounden duty of Government to bring forward such Bills. If any people, litigants or others, are put to loss because of Local Governments' mistakes, it is the duty of the Government of India to put the thing right and validate these things so as to save the people from unnecessary loss. I think, Sir, that as the whole thing was due to the mistake of the Local Government, the Government of India have done very well in bringing forward this Bill, and I think we must thank the Government of India for so speedily trying to put things right. (Hear, hear.) We have to thank the Government instead of condemning it.

(Several Members moved that the question be now put.)

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Sir, I do not wish to take up the time of the House but I think my Honourable friend the Law Member has conclusively shown that my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim, at any rate, thought he was merely supporting a dilatory motion and did not realise that he was accepting the principle of the Bill. The House has already given its decision on the earlier dilatory motion, and although this motion in form is not a dilatory motion, I have no doubt at all in my mind that it really was intended to be a dilatory motion and there are no arguments for me to meet now because all those arguments have been put forward before. Therefore, I oppose this motion.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Sir Lancelot Graham, Sir Abdur Kanim, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy, Captain R. B. Chaudhri Lal Chand, Rao Banadur S. R. Pandit, Mr. S. Fazl Haq Piracha, Mr. B. Das, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, Mr. K. Ahmed, Sardar Harbans Singh, Mr. Muazzam Sahib Bahadur, Mr. A. H. Ghuaznavi, and the Mover, with instructions to report in the next session and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters as passed by the Council of State be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: Clause 3.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I beg to move:

"That clause 3 be omitted."

I do not mind Government passing clause 2 which is legislating to give effect from the date this Bill is enacted into an Act by the sanction of this House. But clause 3 introduces a phase which no elected Member of this House should subscribe to, because here, we are going to invalidate the judgment of the Judges, and why should we do it? I do not know whether this has happened in the past. My lawyer friends say that it happened once or twice in a blue moon. This is not a case which happens very often. As my Honourable friend Mr. Sen said, if mistakes had been made, they must be rectified. But who committed the mistakes? If the Local Government made mistakes, then blame the Local Government, sack the Local Government, dismiss the Governor, the District Magistrate and everybody. Even the Advocate General who advised the Government never pointed out these mistakes and today we condone the mistakes of the Local Governments and Advocate Generals. I am not here holding a brief for the Local Governments. I therefore suggest to the Honourable Member my friend Sir Lancelot Graham, if he subscribes to the principle of clause 3, he should bring it out in the form of an Ordinance and not take the sanction of the elected Members of this Assembly. That we should here legislate against judgments passed by High Court Judges, and Judges of Privy Council under any form of procedure is intolerable. May I ask the Honourable the Law Member whether he is going to introduce that practice into everything and into every kind of mistakes which the Government of India make. I do not think my Honourable friend the Law Member would advise his colleagues in the Executive Council to do that. If he had given proper advice, these Ordinances would not have been enacted. If the Honourable the Law Member is so much alive to the situation in the country, he would have strongly differed from his colleagues about the Ordinances. The Honourable the Law Member in his first speech observed that the opinions of the High Courts and Local Governments have been collected and the Government of India hold certain views

[Mr. B. Das.]

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I never said that opinions had been collected. What I said was that the High Courts, all the Courts and all the Governments had gone wrong according to the judgment of the Privy Council. Hitherto the view taken not only by Local Governments but by the High Courts, the subordinate courts and by all the lawyers practising in this country was all one way and that view now turns out to be wrong. The view universally held is now held to be wrong.

Mr. B. Das: I am glad to know that all the High Court Judges have gone wrong. I do not mind clause 2 of the Bill. But in clause 3 you are going to ask that the judgments already delivered should be quashed. You are invalidating certain judgments. Who is going to pay the costs of those parties? They will all bring out their taxed costs. Under the terms of their contract, high officials of Government won't pay. If the Honourable the Law Member and my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham are so anxious about the parties who are involved in this case, why do they not put in another clause to the effect that these judgments will be quashed and the money that has been spent by the different parties will come from the pockets of the Local Governments, of course, Local Government means tax-payers' pockets.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Out of the pocket of the Law Member and High Court Judges, perhaps.

Mr. B. Das: Or as my Honourable friend Mr. Neogy suggests why should not the costs be met out of the salaries of High Court Judges or even of my Honourable friend the Law Member. I think, Sir, this is a piece of jobbery. It is an outrageous clause which is embodied in this clause 3. It is a piece of jobbery.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: It is a legislative jobbery.

Mr. B. Das: Yes, it is a legislative jobbery of which my Honourable friend Mr. Biswas is the inspirer. It is an outrageous way of doing things which I think every elected Member should oppose and vote down.

Mr. S. G. Jog: On this side of the House, as a Member of the Nationalist Party, I have got great respect for my Honourable friend Mr. Das. I generally take him as a very safe guide to follow in all other matters except law. As a lawyer I think in this particular case I must use my own discretion even at the risk of throwing my revered friend overboard. I can certainly excuse my engineering friend of not understanding the urgency, the necessity, the equity and the justice of the measure that has been introduced. I can certainly excuse him, but I am not prepared to excuse my lawyer friends who take a different view of the whole measure. My Honourable friend's suggestion is to omit clause 3, that is practically taking the soul out of the body. If the suits that have been dismissed are not to be restored, then what is the remedy? Why should these people suffer for the mistakes of so many judicial officers for which they are not at all responsible? A particular view has been taken for nearly a century, and fortunately or unfortunately it was not brought to their notice, and for this should the people suffer? I think Government would have been charged with some other things if they had not moved this Bill and moved it in such haste and hurry for bringing relief to these litigants. Sir, I oppose the amendment proposed by Mr. Das.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Sir, I will just point out that such instances of intervention of the Legislature are not at all rare. For instance, when the Privy Council held that in regard to certain suits on mortgages the sixty years' limitation was not applicable, but the 12 years' rule would apply although all along the sixty years rule was held to apply, what happened? The Legislature intervened, and they added a provision in the Indian Limitation Act by which they provided . . .

An Honourable Member: That was not done in one day; it took two months.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: I thought that aspect of the question was disposed of by the amendments which have been defeated. Now we are on the merits of the Bill, and I am pointing out that exactly the same thing was done in regard to the Indian Limitation Act as is now proposed in respect of section 93, Civil Procedure Code. That was also done in consequence of a decision of the Privy Council to the effect that the sixty years' rule would not apply, but the 12 years' rule. I refer to section 31 of the Limitation Act. It expressly provided that where in any such case the claim of any mortgagee was wholly or partly dismissed or extinguished after a particular date because of the view taken by the Privy Council, the courts shall restore such suits upon application made within two years; because those suits would not have been liable to be dismissed upon the view of the law, which had prevailed for a long time but was now unexpectedly turned down by the Privy Council. The whole idea was to save suitors from the consequences of an unexpected decision. Exactly the same thing is happening here. If you have the Bill, you must have clauses 3 and 4.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, there is just one word I want to say. I wish my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad were present here to witness the very enjoyable spectacle of the Chief Whip of my Party, Mr. B. Das, a martyr to conviction, cheerfully becoming a pleasant pin-cushion to Members sitting behind him. On this motion as on other previous motions we have left the matter an open question and are animated by no animus towards the Independents (Hear, hear) on the undependable Benches. (Laughter.)

Sir Lancelot Graham: Sir, there is really very little that I wish to say on this point, but I think we are doing the fairest thing we can do. This clause will have the effect of restoring the status quo ante and allowing the suit to be decided on its merits. I can imagine nothing more just, I therefore oppose the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 3 be omitted.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I move that clause 4 be omitted. I listened very attentively to the very short speech that my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham made and he said that in equity and fairness clause 3 should be maintained. I should like to ask him one or two simple questions. I want to know why a decree that has been passed after the 30th day of November 1931 should be set aside. Why not the 30th November of 1930 or some other previous year?

Sir Lancelot Graham: Because that is the date of the Privy Council judgment.

Mr. B. Das: If my Honourable friend was so kind and so fair to the litigants, why did he not think of refunding the money that the litigants spent in the previous cases and which they fought and won? Will the Local Governments or the Government of India bear those costs? Sir, I have heard it mentioned by previous speakers that the public is spending money at great sacrifice and the trustees are spending money for these law suits. I am not interested in these mutts, or wakfs or religious trusts, whether belonging to Hindus or Muslims. I am not concerned with the fact whether the trustees mismanage the funds in the name of the public or whether the original owner who is some mahant mismanages them. But when the previous speakers mentioned that the public are spending their own money like water, I ask them, who told them to spend their own money? They are spending that money surely with the idea that when they get hold of the three lakhs, which my friend Mr. Biswas said is lying somewhere in the bank, they will take a share out of that. So, Sir, it is not a fact that those who have advocated this Bill and those who spoke on behalf of the trustees have done all philanthropic work. The trustees have some ulterior motives as also the other side, the old proprietors, the mahants, had ulterior motives. But I accuse the Government of the serious charge that they are doing something which is outrageous and which should not be done on the eve of great constitutional changes.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Sir, all I can say is that if I am doing something quite outrageous. I am quite content to have a large majority of the House with me.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 4 be omitted.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Sir, I move that the Bill, as passed by the Council of State, be passed.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, during the past ten years I have never found the Government so very reasonable and so very alert to protect the interests of the people entrusted to its care. I congratulate the Honourable the Law Member as also my Honourable friend behind who has been the inspirer of a Bill like this. We in Bengal certainly want that these suits should not be thrown out on a very technical ground. At the same time I should be wrong if I were not to state before this House what I feel about this particular piece of legislation and also about the judgment of the Privy Council. Sir, every lawyer is aware of the doctrine of factum valet, and it was up to the Privy Council to set up to that doctrine and say that when things have been going on for a series of years like this they must accept it and not base their judgment on such technical flaws. I think the Privy Council was wrong in not acting up to the doctrine of factum valet or is it that they thought that this was a case in which the doctrine of factum valet did not apply. In either case I believe that it is not for us to legislate so as to upset the judgment of the highest court of the British Empire. With all my sympathies for those who would suffer if this Bill were not passed—in fact no one will be more pleased if this Bill is passed for the particular case to which reference has been made here; but at the same time I cannot deny that this is neither our province, and it is not our duty as legislators, if I may say so, to enact a measure like this. I ask myself: have we ever found that when really the public charities and interests of the poor people were at stake, Honourable Members coming in such haste and introducing measures like this? I have not. Perhaps they have turned over a new leaf and I hope they will continue in future to do so.

In the Bill which came into our hands, I find the Statement of Objects and Reasons is dated the 8th March, 1932. The swiftness with which this Bill was introduced in the House of Elders just to shut it out of not very obliging Members here, who might file an amendment motion for circulation, was very cleverly done. I wish that all this zeal had been shown in a better and a higher cause. If I am saying anything about the principle of the Bill, it is because I feel that this Bill is certainly not a happy specimen of either the intellect or the heart of my Honourable friend over there for whom I have the greatest admiration and respect. In fact my idea has been that some one must have persuaded him to such an extent that he could not resist the temptation

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The force of public opinion.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: As for public opinion, I have not as yet found any meeting held in any part of the country, or either anything in the newspapers or elsewhere. I really welcome the provisions of the Bill which is very salutary, and I am glad that it is going to be passed. All this I say (Laughter); but at the same time the lawyer's sense in me revolts when I find that the highest law officer of the Crown, after a brilliant career at the Calcutta High Court and at the bar, and being Law Member, has become the victim of enacting such a measure as this. We also heard that this was following a decision of the Privy Council; if that were so, I think it was up to him to come at that time; and when he did not come at the time but comes now, people should not be criticised if they hold that there must be something behind, something at the bottom of it all. Whatever that might be, I congratulate my Honourable friend on this Bill, and I whole-heartedly accept the provisions of the Bill for the welfare of the public; but I protest against the manner in which this Bill has been rushed through, and if there be any occasion in future I will demand of Government to do things like this when the imperative interests of my country and my countrymen demand it; and if they fail to do anything at that time, I will say that they are not sincere. I hope they will remember this. Of course my Honourable friend the Leader of the House is going away; I know he would have been true to his promise if he had been here and another Member of the Government has gone away already; but I hope their successors will follow in their footsteps and hence forth be more alert in preserving the public interests and the interests of the people.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Did not my Honourable friend sign a representation to the Viceroy that a Bill of this kind should be brought forward?

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Yes; and so I say I am happy that this Bill has come up.

Sir Lancelot Graham: Sir, I have merely to say that I thank my supporters—both those who approved of the Bill and those who disapproved of the Bill; I understand they all support me.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters, as passed by the Council of State, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 5th April, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 5th April, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Mr. James Richard Blair (Government of India: Nominated Official).

STATEMENT RE SOUTH AFRICA.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, the House will remember that on Saturday last I intimated that a statement would be made on behalf of Government to-day regarding South Africa. In the ordinary course that statement would have been made by the Honourable Member in charge of the Department Sir Fazl-i-Husain, but as he is unavoidably detained in another place, I would ask your special permission, Sir, for the statement to be made by Mr. Bajpai on his behalf.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai (Government of India: Nominated Official): In accordance with paragraph 7 of the Cape Town Agreement of 1927, delegates of the Government of the Union of South Africa and of the Government of India met at Cape Town from January 12th to February 4th, 1932 to consider the working of the Agreement, and to exchange views as to any modifications that experience might suggest. The delegates had a full and frank discussion in the Conference, which was throughout marked by a spirit of cordiality and mutual good-will.

2. Both Governments consider that the Cape Town Agreement has been a powerful influence in fostering friendly relations between them, and that they should continue to co-operate in the common object of harmonising their respective interests in regard to Indians resident in the Union.

3. It was recognised that the possibilities of the Union's scheme of assisted emigration to India are now practically exhausted, owing to the economic and climatic conditions of India as well as to the fact that 80 per cent. of the Indian population of the Union are now South African-born. As a consequence, the possibilities of land-settlement outside India, as already contemplated in paragraph 3 of the Agreement, have been further considered. The Government of India will co-operate with the Government of the Union in exploring the possibilities of a colonisation scheme for settling Indians, both from India and from South Africa, in other countries. In this investigation, which should take place during the course of the present year, a representative of the Indian community in South Africa will, if they so desire, be associated. As soon as the investigation has been completed, the two Governments will consider the results of the inquiry.

4. No other modification of the Agreement is for the present considered necessary.

5. Before passing on to the Transvaal Asiatic Tenure (Amendment) Bill, Honourable Members would, perhaps, like me to comment on the more important points in the settlement which I have just announced.

(1) Recognition by the two Governments of the need of continued co-operation in the common object of harmonising their respective interests in regard to Indians resident in the Union justifies the hope that friendly relations between South Africa and India, which are of such vital importance to the Indian community in the Union, will continue.

(2) It had become increasingly evident for sometime before the Conference met at Cape Town that Indian opinion both in South Africa and in India had become unfavourable to the scheme of assisted emigration to India. This was due to no shortcoming on the part of either Government but primarily to climatic and economic causes, and the fact that 80 per cent. of the Indian population of South Africa were born in the Union. The recognition by the Union Government that the possibilities of this scheme are now practically exhausted should be received with considerable relief by Indian opinion on both sides of the ocean.

(3) The proposal that the possibilities of land-settlement outside India should be examined merely carries out an integral part of the 1927 Agreement. It may be welcomed on two grounds:

- (i) If it results in a satisfactory scheme of land settlement, it may provide an outlet, especially to the younger generation of Indians in South Africa, in a country where they may have greater opportunities both for economic development and for political self-expression.
- (ii) The association of a representative of the South African Indian Congress in the investigation will not only be a valuable safeguard for the inquiry, but constitutes an experiment in collaboration between the Union Government and the Indian community in South Africa which, it is hoped, will be extended to other fields.

(4) The Agreement stands unmodified except as regards the scheme of assisted emigration to India, and the proposed exploration of the possibilities of land settlement elsewhere. This means, to mention only two points out of the last Agreement, that the Government of the Union continue to adhere to the policy of uplifting the permanent section of their Indian population, and that the Government of India will continue to maintain in South Africa an Agent whose presence has admittedly proved most helpful alike to the Indian community in South Africa and to the promotion of friendship between the two countries.

6. I shall now endeavour to deal with the Transvaal Asiatic Tenure (Amendment) Bill copies of which are also before Honourable Members. The Conference decided that it should be considered by a sub-committee consisting of two representatives of each Delegation. After discussion in the sub-committee Dr. Mulan, who was one of Union representatives, agreed to place informally before members of the Select Committee, which had prepared the Bill, the suggestions of the delegates from India. The results of this consultation may be summarised as follows:

(1) Clause 5 of the Bill which embodied the principle of segregation by providing for the earmarking of areas for the occupation or ownership of land by Asiatics has been deleted. Instead, the Gold Law is to be amended to empower the Minister of the Interior, after consultation with the Minister of Mines to withdraw any land from the operation of sections 130 and 131, in so far as they prohibit residence upon or occupation of any land by coloured persons. This power will be exercised, after inquiry into individual cases by an impartial commission presided over by a judge, to validate present illegal occupations and to permit exceptions to be made in future from the occupational restrictions of the Gold Law. It is hoped that liberal use will be made of this new provision of the law so as to prevent the substantial dislocation of Indian business which strict application of the existing restrictions would involve, and to provide Indians in future with reasonable facilities to trade in the mining areas without segregation.

(2) The Bill has also been amended so as to protect fixed property acquired by Asiatic companies up to 1st March, 1930, which are not protected by section 2 of Act 37 of 1919. This will have the effect of saving many Indian properties which, though not acquired in contravention of the letter of the Act of 1919, were acquired contrary to its spirit.

(3) Local bodies, whom clause 10 of the Bill required to refuse certification of fitness to an Asiatic to trade, on the ground that the applicant may not lawfully carry on business on the premises for which the licence is sought, shall have to treat a certificate issued by a competent Government officer to the effect that any land has been withdrawn from the restrictive provisions of sections 130 and 131 of the Gold Law as sufficient proof that a coloured person may lawfully trade on such land. As it is proposed to maintain hereafter a register of all lands in proclaimed areas where Asiatic occupation is permitted, such a provision should prove a valuable safeguard to the Indian community.

7. As against these important concessions, it has to be recognised that the recommendations of the Indian Delegation that areas like Springs and de-proclaimed land, to which the restrictions of clauses 130 and 131 do not at present apply, should not be made subject to them, and that lease for ten years or more should not be treated as fixed property have not been accepted. On the balance, however, the amendments which, subject to ratification by the Union Parliament, have been made in the Bill represent a substantial advance on the original Bill.

8. I must apologise to the House for the length of the statement. I have endeavoured to make it as brief as is compatible with clarity. Government had hoped that it would be possible to make the announcement earlier, but this was found impossible as the results of the Conference have to be published in both countries simultaneously, and the Union Parliament reassembles only today after the Easter recess. Government trust, however, that keeping in view the difficulties inherent in the problem, and after consideration of the statement which has been made today, Honourable Members will feel satisfied with the results achieved.

Mr. B. Das: May I ask a supplementary question

Mr. President: The whole subject will come up for consideration on a Resolution and then the House can deal with it.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

BIRTH AND DEATH RATES IN AJMER-MERWARA.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary: Department of Education, Health and Lands): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 212 asked by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin on the 23rd March, 1932.

Final reply to unstarred question No. 212 by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, regarding births and deaths in Ajmer City, asked on the 23rd March, 1932.

(Ad interim reply was given on the 23rd March, 1932.)

(a) (1) The figures quoted by the Honourable Member, which apparently refer to Ajmer Municipality only, are not quite correct. The correct figures are :

	Birth rate per mile.	Death rate per mile.
1912-13	19.58	32.70
1913-14	19.65	33.95

(2) The number of deaths reported exceeded the number of births registered in 1913-14 by 1,238. It is believed, however, that the registration of births in that year was very defective.

(b) No. What Major Lumsdon said was—

“So large an excess of deaths over births is due partly to the bad sanitation of the city and partly to imperfect registration of births”.

(c) A complete drainage scheme involving very large expenditure has been prepared and will be carried out gradually as funds permit. Government intend to do all they can to improve public health conditions in the Municipality as soon as possible.

BAD DRAINAGE OF AJMER CITY.

Sir Frank Noyce: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 213 asked by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin on the 23rd March, 1932.

Final reply to unstarred question No. 213 by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, regarding bad drainage of Ajmer City, asked on the 23rd March, 1932.

(Ad interim reply was given on the 23rd March 1932.)

(a) A copy of Lt.-Col. Dff. Mullen's report is laid on the table of the House.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to part (c) of his question no. 212.

Report referred to in the reply to (a) of the statement laid on the Table in reply to unstarred question No. 213.

Drainage.

As regards drainage, an expert ought to be engaged to draw up a comprehensive scheme for the whole city, and this scheme could be worked out gradually as funds were available. At present, although a lot of money has been spent on it at different times the drainage is ludicrously defective. Kaiser Ganj is a hotbed of Typhoid fever in consequence of sullage water stagnating for want of proper drainage. I believe something might be done towards removing sullage and waste water from the higher parts of the city by means of two inch pipes leading from cisterns placed at the higher levels to a reservoir outside the city wall at a low level and from thence taken to the Tram Depot. The pipes are inexpensive, and this plan would do away with a certain amount of cartage within the city, a boon to be appreciated.

DEF. MULLEN, M.D., Surgeon,

Lt.-Col.,

Civil Surgeon, Ajmer.

HIGH DEATH RATE IN AJMER.

Sir Frank Noyce: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to unstarred question No. 218 asked by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin on the 23rd March, 1932.

Final reply to unstarred question No. 218 by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, regarding infant mortality in the Ajmer Municipal area asked on the 23rd March, 1932.

(Ad interim reply was given on the 23rd March, 1932.)

(a) (1) Yes.

(2) No.

(b) The correct figures of birth and death rates in 1930-31 were :

Births 26.7 per mile.

Deaths 33.9 per mile.

(c) Efforts are being made to improve the existing conditions by means of health propaganda, maternity and child welfare work and by improving the sanitation of the town.

MOTOR MAIL CONTRACTS IN BOMBAY, MADRAS AND BENGAL.

Mr. T. Ryan (Director General of Posts and Telegraphs): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to parts (a), (b) and (c) of starred question No. 818 asked by Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil on the 16th March, 1932.

List of contracts for the carriage of mails promised in reply to parts (a), (b) and (c) of the starred question No. 818 asked by Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil on the 16th March, 1932.

Names of Presidencies.	Particulars of contracts.	Names of contractors.	Amounts of monthly subsidy paid.	Remarks.

CONTRACT FOR THE CONVEYANCE OF MAILS BETWEEN ERODE AND SATYAMANGALAM.

Mr. T. Ryan: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred questions Nos. 515 and 516 asked by Mr. Bhuput Sing on the 29th February, 1932.

Starred question No. 515.

(a) No; the Postmaster-General decided to accept the tender but acceptance was not communicated to the party concerned.

(b) The Superintendent refrained from making the contract pending the result of a reference by him to the Postmaster-General.

(c) No.

(d) Yes, under the orders of the Postmaster-General.

(e) Does not arise in view of replies to (c) and (d) above, but the action of a subordinate officer in suggesting reconsideration of orders issued to him before acting on them is not necessarily out of order.

Starred question No. 516.

(a) Yes, except that the orders alluded to were not communicated to the tenderer and were not exactly 'final' orders.

(b) Yes, unless the invitation to retender be covered by the term "negotiations".

(c) The first order was reconsidered before the execution of any agreement, because the Postmaster-General became aware that another tenderer was prepared to make a revised offer and accordingly fresh tenders were called for to give both parties an equal opportunity in the matter.

(d) It is a fact that the tenderer in question holds the contract for another mail line Erode to Dharapuram. Government have no information regarding the testimonials held by him.

(e) The agreement was made with the present contractor because it resulted in a decided advantage to Government. The action of the Superintendent was approved by the Postmaster-General.

THE RAILWAY HOSPITAL AT NAGPUR.

Mr. J. R. Blair (Government of India: Nominated Official): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to parts (a) and (b) of starred question No. 71 asked by Sir Hari Singh Gour on the 27th January, 1932.

Statement giving the information promised in reply to parts (a) and (b) of starred question No. 71 asked by Sir Hari Singh Gour on the 27th January, 1932, regarding the railway hospital at Nagpur.

(a) Yes.

(b) The Medical officer at present in charge of the Railway hospital at Nagpur is an Indian.

THE ANCIENT MONUMENTS PRESERVATION (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904, for certain purposes.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for a certain purpose, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration. Those Members of the House who have read the Bill will realise that it is a very small matter of procedure which is being dealt with by this legislation. It is an addition to the Code of Civil Procedure for the purpose of enabling Courts in British India to take evidence for foreign tribunals in civil and commercial matters. As pointed out in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, there is no specific provision in the law of India prescribing the procedure to be followed in such matters, and it is desirable that the outlines of the procedure to be followed should be shown in the Code of Civil Procedure, in order to secure a general uniformity in the practice of the various High Courts and for the guidance and information of foreign tribunals. That, Sir, is the whole extent of the Bill. I do not think that it is necessary for me to say anything more at this stage. Sir, I move.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I do not move my amendment.*

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): We do not oppose this motion.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for a certain purpose, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

* "That the consideration of the Bill be postponed to the next Simla Session."

Sir Lancelot Graham: I move that the Bill, as passed by the Council of State, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN PARTNERSHIP BILL.

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department): I move that the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill to define and amend the law relating to partnership be taken into consideration.

Honourable Members will remember that this Bill was passed through this House in the earlier stages of this session. At that time an amendment somewhat late in the day was moved by my learned friend Diwan Bahadur T. Rangachariar, and in accepting the principle of that amendment, we stated that we should have to re-examine the draft to make sure that it fitted in with the rest of the Bill. On a re-examination of the draft, we decided that it was desirable to make a formal amendment in the amendment passed by this House. That, Sir, is the explanation of the amendment to sub-clause (6) of clause 30 of the Bill. No alteration has been made in the principle laid down by that amendment. Then, another matter on which it was hinted in this House that an amendment was desirable was in connection with some relief to be granted in matters of registration of partnerships. My Honourable friend Mr. Sen suggested it but he had not got an amendment tabulated to our satisfaction. We said that we would examine that proposal and if we approved of it, we would insert an amendment to the effect in the Council of State. That is how the amendment came into the Bill. The third amendment is a purely drafting amendment to clause 11. The words, "Subject to the provisions of this Act" have been added in order to make sure that there is no clash between the different clauses of the Bill. Sir, there having been no amendments of substance made by the Council of State, I do not think it is necessary for me to dilate at length on these formal amendments. I therefore move that these amendments be taken into consideration.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): I do not move my amendment.*

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): I rise to support the motion made by my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham. These amendments have been made as a result of suggestions made in this House when the Partnership Bill was under discussion here. Though the amendments do not fully cover the ground which I suggested during the discussion, they go to a certain extent to give relief to small partnerships, and are useful to people who engage in small partnership business. I think we should all support the Bill; Sir, I support this motion.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): I was only waiting here for my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra to show in what respects this was controversial measure!

Mr. President: The Honourable Member knows that Mr. Mitra did not move his amendment.

The question is:

"That the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill to define and amend the law relating to partnership be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

* "That the consideration of the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill be postponed to the next Simla session."

Mr. President: The question is that the following amendment made by the Council of State in Clause 11 be adopted:

"In sub-clause (1) of clause 11, for the words 'The mutual rights and duties', the words 'Subject to the provisions of this Act, the mutual rights and duties' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that the following amendment made by the Council of State in Clause 30 be adopted:

"For sub-clause (6) of clause 30 the following sub-clause be substituted, namely:

'(6) Where any person has been admitted as a minor to the benefits of partnership in a firm, the burden of proving the fact that such person had no knowledge of such admission until a particular date after the expiry of six months of his attaining majority shall lie on the person asserting that fact'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that the following amendment made by the Council of State in Clause 69 be adopted:

"For sub-clause (4) of clause 69, the following sub-clause be substituted, namely:

'(4) This section shall not apply--

(a) to firms or to partners in firms which have no place of business in British India, or whose places of business in British India are situated in areas to which, by notification under section 55, this Chapter does not apply, or

(b) to any suit or claim of set-off not exceeding one hundred rupees in value which, in the Presidency towns, is not of a kind specified in section 19 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, or, outside the Presidency towns, is not of a kind specified in the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, or to any proceeding in execution or other proceeding incidental to or arising from any such suit or claim'."

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN MERCHANT SHIPPING (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, for certain purposes, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur, Mr. H. P. Mody, Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. N. M. Dumasia, Mr. G. Morgan, Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi, Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad, Lieutenant Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

I do not think that Honourable Members will desire a long speech from me in support of this motion which, I am happy to think, is an entirely non-controversial one. The Bill like the department from which it emanates may be described as an omnibus Bill. It deals with a variety of subjects, but there is one connecting link between them, and that is the desire to improve the conditions of pilgrims travelling to the Hejaz. I may perhaps be allowed to offer a few brief comments on the three main directions in which it is desired to bring about this improvement. The first is the modification of the existing system by which pilgrims either purchase return tickets or make deposits with Government for the purpose of defraying the cost of the inward passage from Jedda. The existing section 208A. of the Bill already provides that pilgrims must either be in possession of return tickets or must make deposits with Government in order to defray the cost of their passage back from Jedda. This in practice has not proved quite sufficient. It is possible for pilgrims to proceed on pilgrimage on ships other than ordinary pilgrim ships, an experience has shown that many of them do so. It has also shown that the proviso to section 208A under which a pilgrim is also automatically exempted from the obligation to purchase a return ticket or make a deposit if he declares that he does not intend to return to India within three years after the date of declaration is also not sufficient. The declaration system had broken down not so much because pilgrims make a declaration with the deliberate intention of falsifying it, but because they are ignorant of the full facts and conditions of life in the Hejaz, and have in consequence to be repatriated at Government expense within a few months of their departure from India. The number of pilgrims who have had to be repatriated at Government expense has steadily grown during the last five years. It was 188 in 1927, 179 in 1928, 139 in 1929, 387 in 1930 and 313 in 1931. This cost of repatriation during the last two years has amounted to over Rs. 13,000. It is for this reason that we propose to apply the obligation to purchase a return ticket or to make deposits with Government to pilgrims who proceed by other than ordinary pilgrim ships and also to abolish the existing system of declarations. I should perhaps mention that the Haj Inquiry Committee would have liked to abolish the system of return tickets altogether and to insist on deposits in all cases. Government carefully examined this recommendation in consultation with the Standing Haj Committee, but were unable to accept it. They felt that it involved an undesirable interference with the right of pilgrims to purchase return tickets, if they preferred doing so to making deposits with Government. The figures that we have obtained on this point are of interest. In 1930-31, in all, 22 pilgrims made deposits, whereas 8,091 took return tickets. An even more important consideration which weighed with Government was that if the system of return tickets were to be abolished, the legal liability to provide ships for the return journey of pilgrims would fall on them instead of on the shipping companies. It will be obvious to the House that this might involve Government in considerable difficulties and expense if the shipping companies considered other traffic to be more lucrative than the return traffic from Jedda, and diverted their steamers to it in the middle or towards the close of the pilgrim season. The return ticket system is therefore to be retained side by side with the deposit system, but it is proposed to effect certain improvements in the working of that system. Better arrangements are to be made for refunding to pilgrims or to their nominees or legal representatives the value of unused return coupons. The waiting period at Jedda which is mentioned in section 209A of the main Act will be reduced from 25 to 15 days in the case of return ticket holders who apply for accommodation for the return voyage during the six weeks following on the Haj day. The unclaimed value of unused return coupons of pilgrims is to be recovered by Government from the shipping companies and handed over to the Port Haj Committees for application towards the benefit of pilgrims. These are, I venture to think, marked improvements on the existing system.

The next direction in which it is sought to improve the conditions of pilgrims on the voyages is the obligation which this Bill will place on shipping companies to provide cooked food for the pilgrims. There is no doubt that, at the outset, this alteration in the existing system will not be altogether welcomed by the shipping companies, who may find it difficult to comply with it, and it may not be welcomed by the pilgrims as they may not always be able to get exactly the food they would like. But the present condition of affairs is undoubtedly unsatisfactory. It is most insanitary to have cooking done all over the ship, and there is also a very considerable danger of fire, I cannot but think that, after a short experience of the new system, the shipping companies and pilgrims alike will wonder why the old one was allowed to continue so long.

The third and perhaps the most important of the three main improvements that the Bill seeks to bring about is the compulsory immunization of pilgrims against cholera and small-pox. This proposal gives effect to a recommendation of the Haj Inquiry Committee which I am glad to inform the House has received the unanimous support of all quarters. It is calculated to safeguard the health of pilgrims, and, what is most important, to minimise the chances of their being required to land at Kamaran the quarantine station in the Red Sea on the outward journey for purposes of disinfection. In this respect we are following the example of the Netherlands East Indies Government, which has adopted this system for a long time past, and also that of the Straits Settlements. It should save the pilgrims a great deal of trouble. If it is adopted there will be no likelihood of their being held up at Kamaran, and this will probably save a day on the voyage. Vaccination against small-pox is I think compulsory already, but that against cholera is only voluntary. It has made rapid strides, but it will be obvious to the House that one un inoculated passenger on a boat involves as great a risk as a very much larger number. Arrangements will be made to immunize pilgrims in their own districts as far as possible, but in the case of pilgrims who are not immunized, inoculation and vaccination will be carried out at the ports of embarkation. These, Sir, are the main provisions of the Bill. There are several others of less importance of which I might perhaps mention the provision in the Bill for medical attendance which will in future be provided free, as an example of the steps Government are taking to improve the conditions of pilgrims. It is unnecessary to explain the various clauses in greater detail. The object of the Bill, as I have said, is to carry out the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee and I am sure it will commend itself to the House.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, I am glad that the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee have at last moved the Government of India to bring up before this House a Bill of this nature. I have read the Bill under discussion, but I find there are some provisions which are not in conformity with the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee. I remember that the conclusions at which we arrived were come to after most anxious consideration at that time, and after a great endeavour on our part to bring into line with us the views of our esteemed President of the Committee, Mr. Clayton. I have not yet been able to find out why there is that difference on those questions on which the Haj Inquiry Committee have reported; but as the Bill is going to a Select Committee, we shall have an opportunity to discuss the matter again. Sir, I reserve my right of opposing those measures which are against the Haj Inquiry Committee's recommendations.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not feel very happy about certain clauses in this Bill, but as it is going to be discussed in the Select Committee, I hope that Committee will modify them. I draw particular attention to clause 15 which provides that if any pilgrim on board a pilgrim ship cooks any food and lights a fire, he shall be liable to a fine which may extend to fifty rupees. Sir, we know what these pilgrims are; probably some arrangements must be made for their hookahs and various other matters. I think some of the provisions might prove harsh to these pilgrims. There are some other clauses which call for consideration. I hope the Select Committee will look into all these matters, and that when the Bill comes back, all these objectionable things will be removed. I hope that the Government will adopt a sympathetic attitude towards all the real objections brought forward for discussion in the Select Committee. I congratulate the Government for bringing forward this Bill, which ought to have really been brought up about a year ago. This Bill is in keeping with the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee's Report, and I support it.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, at this moment I shall only congratulate the Government on their bringing forward this measure. I do not of course agree with all the provisions in the Bill, but as I am myself a member of the Select Committee, I do not go into them at this moment. Sir, I support this motion.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): Mr. President, I feel bound to congratulate the Member in charge on having made the motion that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee. In the Bill, Sir, there is one healthy feature which relates to the quarantine at Kamaran, which was causing a great deal of annoyance and hardship to pilgrims, and there was a hue and cry raised against this quarantine. When our Committee went to all the important centres in India and examined all these questions, we gathered from the evidence that the pilgrims were put to many hardships and difficulties in Kamaran. I am glad that our recommendations, so far as the quarantine is concerned, have been approved. But as regards the subject of return tickets, we were informed by the Mover of this motion that the Government could not agree with us. Sir, our Committee consisted of six members presided over by Mr. Clayton, I.C.S. All the seven were unanimous in all the recommendations.

We were holding vehement discussions on important and momentous questions, and we came to unanimous conclusions which found a place in our recommendations. After so long a time, we heard that some of the recommendations of ours, particularly as regards return tickets, have not been accepted by the Government. The difficulty is this, and it was pondered over by all the Members. The evidence, which we are sorry to see not published by the Government for financial difficulty, would have convinced the House that the return ticket system did not find favour with many pilgrims, because many of the pilgrims do not take the same route when they get back to India. Some of them take the land route and some of them do not return at all but settle down either in Mecca or in Medina, and the Shias settle down generally in Karbala or Najaf. So, we were not at all willing to impose any hardship on them. So far as repatriation is concerned, I think the Government could have met that question very easily if they had simply followed the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee. As has been observed by previous speakers, this is not the final stage of the Bill. When this is referred to the Select Committee, we can go into all these questions, and I hope the Honourable Member in charge, or his Secretary, will give in at least in some of the momentous questions.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain (Member for Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I am very glad that Honourable Members who have taken part in the debate have been appreciative of the way in which my Department has dealt with the Report of the Haj Inquiry Committee. Before I proceed to deal with a few points that have been raised, may I give a birds-eye view of the history of this legislation, and the one included in the two Bills that have been already introduced. The reason for my taking up a few minutes of the time of the House in doing so, is not anything that has been said by Honourable Members on the floor of the House but certain false statements, certain half-truths, certain misrepresentations that have been made in the public Press, attacking not only the supposed inaction of the Government of India but also very seriously reflecting on the efficiency and capacity for work of the Standing Haj Committee, which reflections I, its Chairman, know are altogether undeserved. What are the charges made, the House may ask me, which you seem to be anxious to repudiate? The charges made are something like these: The Government of India and the Department concerned have turned a deaf ear to all the Muslim representations on the subject of the Haj; the Haj Report was made, but the Government of India kept silent for two years and took no steps. But the gentleman who made statements from which the Press commented also professes great interest in the Haj. I will not go into his own history during the last few years, whether in India or outside India, but content myself by showing whether as a matter of fact the Government of India and this House have been or have not been solicitous of the welfare of the Hajis. As early as September 1928, a Resolution was moved in the Legislative Assembly desiring the appointment of a Haj Inquiry Committee. That Resolution was promptly followed by the appointment of a Haj Inquiry Committee in the next session of the Assembly; that is to say, March 1929. A very strong Haj Inquiry Committee was appointed consisting of 8 or 9 Members, most of them from the Assembly, some from the Council of State, and only one from outside. That Committee toured throughout India, and spent one full year; as many as 250 associations and individuals sent in written opinions in answer to their questionnaire, which was very carefully framed. A large number of witnesses were orally examined. They did their duty thoroughly. They submitted a very carefully considered report, embodying as many as 219 recommendations, and most of them, if not all, were unanimous recommendations.

An Honourable Member: All were unanimous recommendations.

The Honourable Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain: Except for a little bit here and there. The Committee cost the State two lakhs of rupees, to get this work done for the Hajis. They made their Report without any avoidable delay in March 1930. Therefore, to say that the Government of India turns a deaf ear to all representations concerning the Hajis is a bare falsehood. The man who made that statement was himself a witness before this Committee and therefore he could not possibly avoid admitting that Government did something in the matter of helping the Hajis. But he proceeds to say, having appointed that Committee, since then Government have done nothing. That again is untrue because when the Report was out in April 1930, Government took several steps, firstly the Report was in English and Government was able to secure the co-operation of a public-spirited Muslim, Maulvi Firoz-ud-Din of Lahore, who translated the whole Report into Urdu at his own expense and published it.

Again Government proceeded to deal with these recommendations straightaway. But the critics outside and some of the Members of this House appear to think that because this legislation has been produced after two years of the making of the Report, therefore it is a long time taken by Government. It should be remembered that in the first place not only had these recommendations to be considered by the department, but Local Governments had also to be consulted, in particular the Government of Bengal and the Government of Bombay. That was not all. We had also to consult certain authorities outside India, in particular in Jedda. We had to consult the Foreign and Political Department; we had to consult the Commerce Department; and Honourable Members know that when so many interests and so many departments are involved, it is not easy to make rapid progress. However I may mention that soon after the Report was published, my Department took up dealing with it, and a large number of meetings of the Standing Haj Committee were held. The first one was held as early as 5th July, 1930, and during 1931 four meetings were held, one in February, one in March, one in September and one in November; and all these meetings were very well attended. It was in these meetings that Government were able to deal with all the recommendations made by the Haj Inquiry Committee. When Government were able to accept any recommendations straightaway, intimation of that acceptance was given to the Standing Committee. Those we felt doubtful about were discussed in the Standing Haj Committee, and where the Committee was unanimous, there, so far as I recollect, Government invariably accepted their recommendation. It was only in very few cases where the Haj Committee was divided, that in one or two cases Government might have failed to accept the recommendation of the majority. In every case where Government was not able to accept, it was on the advice of the Standing Committee. Therefore it is for the Honourable Members to judge how far this representation that Government have turned a deaf ear is true, if it is not an actual falsehood.

Then it may be urged, how can the public know what you are doing. The Standing Haj Committee meeting is not like a public meeting of which everybody comes to know. That is perfectly true, and Government were not content with dealing with these matters in the Standing Haj Committee, but a large number of communiqués were issued from time to time. The first one was issued as early as February 1931, wherein a reduction of fares for the Haj was announced. This gentleman who professes so much interest in the Hajis has failed to realise that it was the Standing Haj Committee which met the shipowners and persuaded them to reduce the fares, and that reduction was communicated to the public through a communiqué dated the 9th February, 1931. Another communiqué was issued on the 27th October, 1931, telling what action had been taken on the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee's Report up till that day, and that Government was proceeding with the rest of the recommendations. Again, on the 23rd November, 1931 another communiqué was issued, another on the 16th December, 1931, and still another on the 21st January, 1932. For any one to say that Government were taking no interest in these things is nothing short of an absolute untruth. It has been asked, what has been the fate of these 219 recommendations made by the Committee. Sir, so far as I recollect, nearly 130 have been accepted as they stood, another 30 or 40 with very slight modifications on the recommendation of the Standing Haj Committee, 19 have been rejected, at least 17 or 18 of them with the concurrence of the Standing Haj Committee, and on another 40 or so suitable action has been taken because they were not recommendations that could be either accepted or rejected, but only called for certain steps to be taken. Last of all, but not the least important of all, three Bills have been prepared and have already been introduced. One of them is being sent to the Select Committee, the other two will follow. It is much to be regretted that people come to Members and Secretaries of Government, see them, place their points of view before them; they are told actually what is being done; and knowing all that, they go out and publish statements to the effect that the Government of India turn a deaf ear to everything. I trust not only that this attack on the efficiency of the Committees of this House will be considered unfavourably by this House, but that a practice of this sort is one to be discouraged in the interest both of this House as well as of the Government.

Now, Sir, with reference to the two or three points mentioned by the Honourable Members, I assure them that Government are ready to consider any suggestion they wish to make in the Select Committee. The question of return tickets or deposits was one on which, in the Standing Committee itself, there was a great divergence of opinion. All the arguments that apply to deposits equally apply to return tickets. There was the question of people going to Najaf and settling down in Hejaz, and returning overland. We were assured that as in the case of deposits, so in the case of return tickets, the money for the return passage will be refundable to the person who comes and says after a particular time that he is going to settle down in the Hejaz, or that he is not going back at all and so on. In other words there was no difference between the two except from the shipping point of view. The shippers said they would not have their right to sell return tickets curtailed, and we had to decide whether we could force this down their throats or not. I daresay there may be a way of doing that, but short of Government shouldering the responsibility of running the traffic itself, we felt we could not do anything else. That is why that particular recommendation, to which reference was made and on which, as I said, there was a difference of opinion, Government could not but embody in the Bill the view it has taken. All other points are such that it will be found on further study of these that there is practically no difference of opinion.

My friend Dr. Ziauddin showed some solicitude for the hookah smoker. If he reads the Report of the Haj Inquiry Committee, he will find that the maulanas who have served on that Committee were not unmindful of the inconvenience they might cause, but felt that approach to Western standards by the hookah smoker will not be altogether to the detriment of the best interest of the Hajjis.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move that the name of Bhai Parma Nand may be added to the Select Committee.

The Honourable Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain: I understood that the Leader of the Nationalist Party wishes to add the name of Bhai Parma Nand. The Mover of the Resolution has consulted me and he says he has no objection to Bhai Parma Nand's name being added as well as that of another aspirant to serve on the Select Committee, Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan of Bengal.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, for certain purposes be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulvi Sayid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur, Mr. H. P. Mody, Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. N. M. Dumasia, Mr. G. Morgan, Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi, Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad, Lieutenant Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan, Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan, Bhai Parma Nand and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

THE TEA DISTRICTS EMIGRANT LABOUR BILL.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore (Member for Industries and Labour):
Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill, to amend the law relating to emigrant labourers in the tea districts of Assam, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Sir Cowasji Jehangir, Mr. K. Ahmed, Mr. C. C. Biswas, Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, Mr. A. G. Clow, Mr. Tin Tut Mr. H. B. Fox, Mr. N. M. Joshi, Mr. B. N. Misra, Mr. H. P. Mody, Mr. G. Morgan, Mr. T. R. Phookun, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, Mr. K. P. Thampan, Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan, Sir Frank Noyce, Mr. S. G. Jog and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, I now ask the House to accept the principles of this Bill by sending it to a Select Committee. The first principle is the acceptance, as an ideal policy, of the removal of restrictions on and impediments to the free movement of labour. I do not think that anybody in this House will object to that policy which has the endorsement of two Royal Commissions. But it may be that that policy may not be susceptible of complete acceptance here and now without some temporary modification or qualification, and we have therefore provided in the Bill for power to exercise control over the forwarding or the recruitment of labour to Assam or over both, should this become necessary in the interests of the emigrants. Our position is that we would like to see all restraints removed, but realising how easy it is for abuse to creep in, we have provided power to impose control should this be necessary.

The next principle of importance is to secure to the emigrant to Assam the right of repatriation. That is a matter of great importance. It is perfectly true that this will lay a statutory burden upon the employer. But I venture to think that his gain will also be substantial. His labour, feeling that their return to their homes is definitely secured, will be more contented and for that reason more efficient. We are providing for a definite right to repatriation at the end of three years, and we are also providing for the exercise of that right before the expiry of that period in certain definite eventualities.

These, as far as I can see, are the main principles of the Bill. The other provisions of the Bill deal with procedure machinery and other necessary details.

I think I ought to say a few words in regard to my motion for reference to a Select Committee. It has been actuated by a desire to get on as rapidly as possible with labour legislation, subject of course to the necessity for ensuring publicity in regard to our proposals. I ought to explain to the House that the revision of existing labour legislation in regard to Assam has been the subject of discussion with Local Governments so far as it concerns the removal of restrictions and control ever since the year 1926. As a matter of fact in 1928 we actually framed a Bill on this matter and we referred that Bill to Local Governments. But, as the Labour Commission had then been appointed, we considered that it would be advisable to leave the whole question for the consideration and examination of the Labour Commission. The Commission examined this question with great care, recorded much evidence relating to this subject, and I may say that this Bill with certain slight deviations embodies the unanimous recommendations of the Labour Commission.

It only remains for me to say that so far as we are concerned, if the House accepts this motion, we propose that the Select Committee should meet slightly before the next Simla Session begins. In the meantime, we shall be glad by executive order to circulate this Bill for eliciting opinions thereon, so that such criticisms as may be available will be before the Select Committee before it starts upon its labours. In that way, we hope that much time will be spared and that we shall be able to get through this legislation as early as possible and thus leave the stocks free for other legislative measures. Sir, I move.

Mr. K. P. Thampan (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I heartily accept the main principles embodied in this Bill, and while doing so I wish to make one or two observations. As far as emigration, repatriation and other kindred things are concerned, this Bill is fairly perfect, but there are one or two very important matters which, according to my view, have been completely neglected. In the first place, the Royal Commission on Labour in Chapter XXI of their Report have suggested a statutory machinery for fixing wages. In subsequent Chapters, they make a special recommendation for a Board of Health and Welfare, maternity benefits and other things. Regular and prompt payment of wages has also to be naturally provided for. All these things have been completely left out in this Bill. Perhaps the Honourable the Mover is taking refuge in the belief that they are matters for Local Governments to deal with, but, Sir, we know how the machinery of Local Governments moves in this country. Unless the Government of India bring pressure to bear upon the Local Governments, legislation on these matters are not at all likely to be undertaken. I therefore request the Government that they should consider earnestly whether it will be possible to include these provisions also in some form or other in this Bill; otherwise, they must press upon the Local Governments the imperative necessity of taking up immediately the necessary legislation on those lines, unless that is done we will be tackling only the fringe of the problem. With these few words, I support the motion to refer the Bill to a Select Committee.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury (Assam: Muhammadan): Sir, this is a very important measure. It will affect the future happiness and well-being of thousands of workers in Assam tea plantations. It is therefore very necessary that the House should realise the true implications of this Bill, that it should have an idea of the dangers and pitfalls to which it exposes emigrants to Assam tea gardens, and that the House should examine very carefully the sufficiency of the measures that are proposed to be taken to safeguard the interests of labour. This Bill is primarily intended to facilitate the flow of labour to Assam tea gardens. It is intended to remove the restrictions that hamper the flow of labour to Assam plantations and to solve the problem of scarcity of labour which the tea gardens are supposed to be suffering from. Now, in a poor country like ours, where unemployment is chronic, it is pertinent to inquire why is it that labourers from distant parts of India do not flock to Assam gardens when there is a great demand for labour there. Why is it that some of the Local Governments find it necessary to prohibit recruitment for Assam tea gardens in their own jurisdiction, and why is it that the tea planters find it necessary to spend as much as Rs. 150 per recruit to get labourers from outside? On no other industry. Sir, in Assam is it necessary to spend money on recruiting organization. The Assam Oil Company at Digboi is able to attract recruits without any recruiting organization; the B. O. C. oil wells in Sylhet and Cachar are worked with local men. Assam sends labourers even to other parts of India. There are about 4,000 labourers from my own district, Sylhet, in Jamshedpur. In Calcutta, Howrah and Kidderpore there are about 10,000 unemployed men from Sylhet waiting for opportunities of employment in sea-going vessels. Why don't all these men go to the tea gardens of Assam and seek employment there? There are about six lakhs of men, ex-tea garden labourers in Assam; why don't they go to tea gardens? The only conclusion to be drawn from all this is that the conditions of life and work and also wages in tea gardens are not such as to tempt anybody to go there and seek service there. In the year 1927 the British Trade Union Congress sent a delegation to India to study the labour conditions here. The delegation consisted of Messrs. Purcell, a Member of Parliament, and Mr. Hallsworth, a prominent Trade Unionist. They made inquiries into the conditions of labourers in Assam tea gardens, and as to what these observers say I shall read out a few lines from their Report:

"The story of the poor labourers in the tea gardens in Assam is about as sordid as one as could possibly be related. The official statement on wages, it will be noticed includes many things and even then makes a most miserable show in putting down the amount of wages for a month's labour. If the highest figure is taken, including all the items named, the combined labour of husband, wife and child brings this human trinity only one shilling and three pence per day!

We refrain from narrating the many other facts which were garnered, except the significant one that we witnessed a group of men, women and children working away together, while about five yards away was a planter's young assistant proudly lugging a whip. This we regarded as good proof of the "contentment" prevailing among the tea garden population.

Our view is that, despite all that has been written, the tea gardens of Assam are virtually slave plantations, and that in Assam tea the sweat, hunger and despair of a million Indians enter year by year."

This is how these trained observers describe the conditions of labourers in Assam tea gardens, and I am not aware if conditions have improved to any considerable extent since they submitted this Report. If we are going to encourage emigrants to go to the tea gardens where conditions are such as have been described by Messrs. Purcell and Hallsworth, it is not merely enough if you make provision for safeguarding the interest of the labourers from the time they leave their homes till they arrive at the garden and repatriate them after three years if they want to, but what is by far the most important is that they must be assured of a reasonable standard of life and work during the years of their stay in the gardens. This is what this Bill fails to assure. No doubt the Royal Commission recommended the withdrawal of the powers of the Local Government to prohibit recruitment to Assam, but they recommended many things more; they recommended that comprehensive measures should be taken with regard to conditions of work, wages, welfare of the labourers in the tea gardens, and I maintain that all these recommendations should be taken together as one connected whole and not piecemeal, as has been done in the present case. To enforce only those portions of the recommendations which facilitate recruitment to tea gardens, and to ignore most of the recommendations which go to ameliorate the conditions of the labourers is most unfair. Sir, in the case of emigrants to Ceylon and Malaya, the Government of India insisted on certain regulations being laid down regarding their wages, housing conditions, sanitary and medical facilities and so forth before they agreed to send out recruits. There is no reason why the Government of India should not equally insist on laying down certain regulations on similar lines in respect of emigrants to the Assam tea gardens. The Labour Commission have themselves pointed out that the position in Assam of an emigrant from Chota Nagpur is not different from that of a Telugu emigrant to Ceylon. They even go further and maintain that the contact between the recruiting district and the district of employment is closer in the case of Ceylon than in the case of Assam. Therefore, Sir, the need for assuring a reasonable standard of life to these emigrants when they are removed far away from their own native place is all the greater in the case of Assam immigrants than in the case of emigrants to Ceylon and Malaya.

I shall tell the House what are the conditions that I consider essential and should be incorporated in this Bill before the Government can encourage emigration to Assam tea gardens. The first essential condition, I think, is that the emigrants in tea gardens and the general public should have opportunities of coming into closer contact with each other than is at present the case, and that the general public should be given the right of access to the tea gardens. When Messrs. Purcell and Hallsworth described the tea gardens as slave plantations, I am prepared to admit that they were little rhetorical, but they were not very wide off the mark. In tea gardens the labourers live in lines to which the public has no right of access. The public have as little right to go to these gardens without the Managers' permission as they have the right to go to a detention camp for detenus without superintendents' permission. The garden Manager rules there as the monarch of all he surveys. There are about 900 tea gardens in Assam, but there is not one single labour organisation to protect the interests of the labourers. The labourers themselves are illiterate and the public are shut out from the gardens. All over India the trade union movement is progressing, but in Assam plantations it is non-existent. It is impossible to start a labour union as the public have no right of access to the gardens. The trade union being non-existent, the labourers remain ignorant even of the beneficial measures that the Government pass for their protection. And being ignorant of their rights, they cannot assert or claim them and are thus absolutely at the mercy of the planters. The Commission recommended that steps should be taken to secure closer contact between the tea garden labourer and the public outside. In the opinion of the Commission, it was objectionable in principle that a large stretch of land where so many thousands of emigrants live should be closed to any one who is interested in doing welfare work there. In the Assam Legislative Council they passed a resolution asking the Government to give the public a right of access to the gardens. Before the Government help the tea gardens to secure recruits they should make sure that the tea garden has ceased to be an isolation camp and that the public have a right of access there.

Next as regards wages. If the labourer is assured of a reasonable wage, no further impetus to induce the labourer to go to the tea gardens will be required. But with regard to wages the planters there are moving in a vicious circle. They keep their wages low and therefore they are confronted with a scarcity of labour. Because they are confronted with a scarcity of labour, they spend huge sums of money to secure recruits from outside, and because they spend large sums of money on securing recruits from outside, they are forced to keep down their wage bill. In the year 1929, this industry spent over a crore of rupees in securing recruits. Had they spent that money on the wages of the labourers, the wages could have been increased by 25 per cent. In a very valuable memorandum that Mr. F. C. King, I. C. S., Chairman of the Assam Labour Board, submitted to the Government of India, he clearly explained the interdependence between wages and recruitment, and I should like to read to you a portion from that memorandum:

"I believe that not only does the payment of higher recruiting commissions not tend to establish a voluntary flow of labour to an industry but it actually militates against it. Till wages find their true level, there will not be a free flow of labour to the tea industry. Once this level is reached, the scarcity of labour should automatically disappear and with it would go the competition amongst employers to secure labour and the necessity of paying recruiting commissions. In the meantime, employers should realise that the recruiting commission system cannot solve the problem of labour scarcity, that it does not save them anything, and that it deprives their labourers of benefits they would secure under the free play of the law of supply and demand. Temporary difficulties may present themselves in cutting adrift from a system which has been in vogue for so many years, but if the industry is solidly combined these difficulties should easily be overcome."

To solve this problem the Labour Commission recommended the establishment of a statutory wage fixing machinery to which my Honourable friend Mr. Thampan has referred, and I consider that the establishment of such a machinery should have preceded introduction of legislation in this House.

As regards welfare conditions, the Commission made many detailed recommendations with regard to that; I am not going to discuss them at present. But there is one recommendation which I want to emphasise and which I think should have been enforced before the passing of this legislation,—the recommendation to which my Honourable friend Mr. Thampan has also referred, namely, the establishment of a statutory Board of Health and Welfare. The functions of these boards will be to lay down regulations with regard to conservancy, drainage, sanitation and other welfare activities. I should like to remind the House that at the instance of the Government of India the Federated States of Malaya incorporated in their "Labour Code" similar provisions in the interests of Indian emigrants. I shall illustrate my point by reading a few sections from the Labour Code of Malaya. Under section 75:

"Every female labourer shall be entitled to abstain from work during terms of one month each before and after confinement and, in respect of such terms, hereinafter jointly referred to as 'benefit period' to receive from her employer maternity allowance to be calculated as provided in sub-section (iv) hereunder."

Section 76 runs as follows:

"The Controller may at any time by order in writing require any employer on a place of employment where ten or more children of any one race between the ages of seven and fourteen years, being dependants of labourers on such place of employment, reside, to construct within a reasonable time to be stated in such order and thereafter to maintain at his own expense a school for such children with such school teacher or school teachers as shall seem sufficient to the Controller, but not in excess of a reasonable number."

Section 169 has the following:

"The supply of water available for each labourer for drinking, cooking or bathing purposes shall not be less than such number of gallons a day as the Controller shall by order either generally or for any particular estate direct."

Section 176 says:

"The Controller may at any time by order in writing require any employer to construct within a reasonable time to be stated in such order and thereafter to maintain at his own expense a hospital on or in the immediate neighbourhood of any estate upon which labourers are employed by him with accommodation for such number of patients as may be stated in such order, or if there is already a hospital maintained by such employer to enlarge or add to such hospital, so as to provide accommodation for a further number of patients as stated in the order; and may further require him to employ a registered medical practitioner as defined by 'The Medical Registration Enactment, 1907', to reside at and have charge of such hospital or any hospital maintained by such employer, and to provide such medical practitioner with fit and proper house accommodation to the satisfaction of the Health Officer."

In Ceylon also the interests of Indian emigrants are similarly protected. Section 32 of the Education Ordinance No. 1 of 1920, provides:

"It shall be the duty of the superintendent of every estate to provide for the vernacular education of the children of the labourers employed on the estate between the ages of six and ten, to appoint competent teachers, and to set apart and keep in repair a suitable school room."

In the Medical Wants Ordinance, No. 9 of 1912, section 12 says:

"It shall be the duty of every superintendent—

- (a) to maintain the lines of his estate and their vicinity in a fair and sanitary condition;
- (b) to inform himself of all cases of sickness on his estate, and to take such steps as he may deem best for the immediate relief of the sick;
- (c) to send any labourer to hospital when so required by a medical officer;
- (d) to send for the district medical officer in any case of serious illness or accident;
- (e) to inform the district medical officer within forty-eight hours of every birth and death upon the estate;
- (f) to supply at the cost of the estate every female labourer resident upon the estate, and giving birth thereon to a child, with sufficient food and lodging for one month after the birth of such child, and to take care that the female labourer be not required to work on the estate for one month, unless the district medical officer shall report sooner that she is fit to work;
- (g) to see that all children under the age of one year resident upon the estate receive proper care and nourishment and to comply with all directions given by a medical officer under section 7(c)."

All this that I have read is merely illustrative. I want that in this Bill identical provisions should be inserted to safeguard the interests of the emigrants to Assam. This Bill, I maintain, is an incomplete Bill. It safeguards the interests of the labourers to a very partial extent and if the Government are really desirous of serving the interests of the labourers, they should amend the Bill in such a way as to include all the provisions about the welfare of the labourers. I do not want to enter into a detailed discussion of the provisions of the Bill, as in the Select Committee I shall have ample opportunity of doing so, but there are two or three points to which I want to direct attention. There is the question of repatriation. I consider that the conditions, under which labourers are to be repatriated before the expiry of three years, require widening. The circumstances that are enumerated in the Bill do not exhaust all the contingencies that may arise, and therefore to provide for unforeseen contingencies, the Commission recommended that "for other sufficient reasons" the labourers may be repatriated earlier, but those words "other sufficient reasons" have been dropped out in the Bill. I do not see why Government should depart from the recommendation of the Commission on this important matter. Then as regards the power of the Controlling Officer, the Commission suggested the appointment of an officer armed with power for the protection of the interests of the labourers, but this Bill gives him power only to inspect gardens and to inspect the records. What is this good for if he cannot enforce his decision which he considers to be in the interest of the labourers? This is what the Commission intended:

"What is wanted is an effective authority working mainly in Assam and definitely charged with responsibility for the emigrant during his journey and after his arrival and entrusted with adequate powers to protect his interests."

The powers that have been given in this Bill to the Controller are neither effective nor adequate. I think, Sir, that the Controller should be vested with powers similar to those vested in the Controller of Emigrants in Malaya and Ceylon. There is one thing more that I want to mention, and then I have finished. I consider that the Controller and the Deputy Controller must be Indians. I mean no reflection on European officers, but the very nature of the duties in which they will be engaged requires that these officers should inspire confidence in the labourers who are ignorant and illiterate. They will be suspicious of Europeans, however well intentioned they may be, and I hope that, when making the appointments, this aspect of the question will be borne in mind.

Mr. H. B. Fox (Assam: European): From some of the remarks of the last speaker, I think Honourable Members who know little of Assam and of the tea industry might perhaps fall into the error of thinking that the chief object of this Bill is to confer benefits on a favoured industry. Such, Sir, is far from being the case. There is very little sugar for the tea planters, either British or Indian, in this Bill, though the tea industry is every bit as worthy of the sympathy and the help of Honourable Members of this House as that of any other industry in India. In the dim distant past, labourers in Assam were under penal contracts, and naturally the recruitment and employment of such labour was regulated by statute. In those bygone days Assam was remote, inaccessible and unhealthy, labour was difficult to get and without the indenture system it would have been difficult to keep, the more so as the Government of Assam had vast tracts of virgin land lying undeveloped to which they did their best to attract settlers. Honourable Members will be interested to hear that there are 600,000 ex-tea garden coolies settled on 500 square miles of land which they hold direct from the Government of Assam, and these settlers were all imported at the expense of the tea industry. That, Sir, might probably be one of the reasons why we did not achieve a flow backwards and forwards between Assam and the recruiting districts. Once labourers got to Assam and go on to Government land, they are lost to the tea industry. The difficulty of obtaining labour in those days was responsible for the creation of a class of professional recruiters who reaped rich harvests at the expense both of the tea industry and the emigrant. The situation inevitably gave rise to all sorts of recruiting malpractices and as a result Assam acquired a bad name, first as a remote and unknown place, a foreign land like Fiji or Malaya. My Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury still wants to treat Assam as a foreign country like Malaya. Secondly it acquired a reputation as a labour market, which had no scruples, either legal or humanitarian in the matter of recruiting; but those days are past and gone and it is only the lingering memory of these stigmas that is the cause of the Bill which is before the House today. I maintain, and I have the support of the Royal Commission in maintaining that apart from the vague fears of the recrudescence of the old recruiting abuses, there is no justification whatever for the perpetuation of a system whereby one single industry in one province is legally hampered in the engagement of its labour force, one single industry in the whole of India and when I inform this House that the indenture system was abolished in 1915, that every other form of penal contract has been wiped off the Statute-book, it will be obvious that the conditions in which the old recruiting malefactor enjoyed both prosperity and immunity have passed away, for it is the mobility of labour which renders the professional recruiter powerless for mischief. This Bill, Sir, grants to the emigrants statutory rights of repatriation. The tea industry has no objection whatever to this, for in this matter the Bill merely crystallises into a definite system what has for years been a constantly growing practice. By these rights the interests of the emigrant in the matter of their emigration are so fully safeguarded that there remains no justification whatever for the imposition of restrictions on recruiting. What, Sir, have the Royal Commission stated? On page 63 they have stated:

"We recommend that the powers to prohibit recruitment should be withdrawn immediately, and that in future no barriers should be set up to prevent the normal play of social and economic forces in attracting labour from one part of India to another."

That Commission has definitely stated that they are satisfied that emigration to Assam to work on the tea plantations deserves encouragement in the interests of the labourer, and on page 368 the Commission states:

"We are in entire accord with the view that the danger of serious abuses afford the only justification for the continuance of control."

The Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill informs us that the first object of the Bill is, while making it possible to exercise such control as may be justified and required by the interests of the emigrant, to ensure that no restrictions are imposed which are not so justified. The industry, Sir, has no fear of these threatened restrictions, so long as the criterion of their introduction is the interests of the emigrant and not the interests of rival employers. (Hear, hear.) Let the Bill adequately ensure that, as it is intended by the Government of India to do, and all the apprehensions on the part of the industry on chapter IV will be allayed. As a matter of fact, I maintain that an unanswerable case could be made out for the total omission of chapter IV from the Bill, inasmuch as the interests of emigrants are impregably protected against any recrudescence of grave abuses. It was clearly contemplated by the Royal Commission on Labour that there should be a marked difference between the introduction of control over forwarding and the imposition of restrictions on recruiting. The former was to be the normal state of affairs; and unless and until it is considered desirable to do without such control, the restriction on recruiting was in no case to be normal or automatic or precautionary: it was only to be resorted to if a situation developed that made such restrictions unavoidable. We find in the Bill, however, that the manner of introducing a regime of forwarding control and a regime of restricted recruiting is precisely the same in each case, with no safeguard whatever that there should be cause shown before the latter step is taken. I claim, Sir, that it is not only reasonable but essential to introduce into this Bill some specification of the grounds that alone can justify a notification under section 26(1) and to prescribe as essential the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council to any such notification. If such safeguards are not given, the interests of the emigrants themselves may be gravely prejudiced and the tea industry will have no alternative but to regard this Bill as a threat of an indefinite perpetuation of a system of unjust and unmerited restriction for which there is no parallel in India. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muham-madan Rural): Sir, the Honourable gentleman who preceded me concluded with the remark that in certain contingencies this Bill would be characterized as a "threat" to the tea planters. When such apprehensions are expressed in certain circumstances from the European Benches, it becomes more and more clear to Benches on this side of the House that we were pretty right in making this a party question and seeing that it was referred to a Select Committee. Sir, without much hesitation we decided to extend our support to the Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore for the simple reason that he is only trying to give effect to the recommendations of the Labour Commission. It is hardly necessary for me to make a lengthy speech on the matter, but the consideration in this particular affair should be entirely that of the labouring classes,—not so much that of the employers as that of the employed—and, Sir, I suppose, and I hope that that important consideration will be prevailing when the subject is considered in Select Committee. Sir, at the same time I agree with the Honourable gentleman who preceded me in saying that everything should be done to make matters attractive to labour in one part of India by introducing circumstances and offering facilities to enable them to move to another part of India. Sir the statutory right to repatriation, as pointed out by the preceding speaker, has already been in practice. Therefore, Sir, my Honourable friend has got no serious objections to putting it on the Statute-book. His apprehensions were only in regard to the restrictions in chapter IV, and these restrictions are a matter for examination in the Select Committee and therefore I take it he does not object to the reference to a Select Committee. I hope in this matter every attempt will be made in Select Committee to reconcile antagonisms with a view to making the Bill satisfactory for its easy passage, when it emerges from the Select Committee and comes before this House.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, that the present Bill is an incomplete one, as giving effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Labour. I also agree with him that there is some risk in passing a measure of this kind implementing the recommendations of the Royal Commission sectionally, inasmuch as we may pass this Bill here to-day and we may not be able to persuade the Assam Government to pass legislation on the other recommendations within a short time after these recommendations are given effect to. But Mr. President, I feel that although there is some risk in this procedure, considering the constitutional position and considering all other circumstances, it is better to take this risk instead of waiting for the time when there will be simultaneous legislation on all the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Indian labour. Sir, this question of the labour conditions of plantations has a long history, and all that history is not a very pleasant one. I do not understand the complaint of my Honourable friend, Mr. Fox, that this is the one industry which has hampering restrictions placed on it. He forgets that if this is the one industry which has hampering restrictions placed on it, these hampering restrictions had a justification. The original restrictions were not really in the interests of the labour, but were in the interests of the employers themselves. The history is that the planters found it difficult to get labour. They spent a large amount of money in securing labour and then approached the Government and asked that the labourer should not be allowed to go back to his district from his work and thus restrictions were first placed upon the liberty of the labourer himself. Therefore, I feel he was not justified in complaining that his industry is the only industry on which hampering restrictions have been placed. Hampering restrictions to recruitment have been now placed simply because the industrialists wanted to put hampering restrictions upon the liberty of the labourer himself. Restrictions were first placed upon the labourer and then restrictions were placed upon the employers in the matter of recruitment and other things. When labourers were not allowed to go back, naturally Assam got a bad name and they found it difficult to secure recruits. In spite of the difficulties, they went on recklessly recruiting through their contractors, with the result that certain evils crept in, and then, in order to diminish these evils, the Government of India legislated by putting certain restrictions upon recruitment. He cannot certainly complain about these restrictions placed upon recruitment, for one thing because these restrictions were necessary on account of the restrictions placed upon the labourer himself.

I am not one of those people who consider that plantations are an evil altogether. The plantations have provided employment and provided an industry. At the same time, it cannot be forgotten and cannot be denied that the conditions of plantations are not what they should be. The Honourable Member from Assam said that on account of the plantations 500,000 people have been settled on land, independent of the plantations. It is a fact but should he not also consider the fact that, even after 50 years' time, the industry should not have been able to settle sufficient people on the land in Assam in order that they should get labourers locally. An industry that has to recruit labour from a long distance, even after 50 years, need not boast of the advantages which that industry supplies to labour. The very fact that they have still to recruit labour from long distances after 50 years shows that the conditions there are not what they should be. Moreover, as my Honourable friend, Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, pointed out, if other industries in Assam get their labourers without special recruitment, why should not the tea plantations get their labour locally. I do not suggest that the position of the tea industry and of other small industries is the same. There is an essential difference between the small industries that exist in Assam and the tea industry. It is quite possible that other industries mentioned by Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury perhaps get part of their labour from the tea plantations themselves, but they get their labour from the tea plantations because they pay much more than the tea planters do. In the other industries, the wages generally are about one rupee a day, whereas on plantations the average wage per month is about Rs. 10 to Rs. 15. That is the great difference between wages paid in tea plantations and the wages paid in the other industries in Assam.

I am one of those people who feel that the principle of the recommendations of the Royal Commission as well as the principle of this Bill is very sound. The Honourable the Mover of this Bill stated that the first principle was that restrictions on recruitment should be removed. I feel, however, that the first principle of the Bill is that the labourer should be free to go anywhere he likes in search of employment. This is a very sound principle. In India in agriculture, the wages are very low and on account of the low wages, the standard of living of the people is low. If this standard of living is to be raised by the raising of wages, the labourers must be free to go wherever they can get better wages. Moreover I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Fox that the labour must be mobile. People must be able to go wherever they can so that the wages will tend to rise where they are low and on the whole the wages in the whole country will tend to equalise. Then there are other parts of the country in India where in agriculture the labourers are bond-slaves even now. In Madras, there is a system which is called kambari or retthi where the labourer is a serf or a bond-slave to the sahukar and the landlord. In Bihar, there is a system called the kamiauti system by which the labourer, on account of the advances made to him, is held in bondage by the sahukar or the landlord. So long as these conditions exist in some parts of the country in agriculture, we must see that the labourer has some way to escape from these conditions. Moreover I feel myself that travelling is a good thing even for labour. We all know that travelling broadens our point of view, it sharpens our intellect to some extent. On the whole travelling does tend to equip men better for the struggle in life. I therefore feel that the labourer should be left free to go wherever he likes. I agree that in our country the working classes to-day, on account of the ignorance, and on account of their poverty, must be protected. There is nobody here who will deny the fact that although the labourer must be free to go wherever he likes, it is the duty of Government to protect him wherever he goes either by legislation or by other methods. The principle that labour deserve special protection is accepted all over the world. Therefore the second principle of the Bill is that labourer should be protected after being given freedom to go wherever he likes. He should be protected on the way to Assam, and be protected in Assam itself where he is working. This is the second principle of the Bill. This is also in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Labour. The Bill provides certain measures for the protection of the labourer during the stages of his journey from recruiting districts to Assam. The Bill provides for registration and establishment of depots where the labourer should be provided with food, rest and shelter. It also provides for depots on the way and inspection of these depots. These measures are what they should be.

The Commission has made certain recommendations for the protection of the labourer on the plantations. First the Commission recommends that the labourer's liberties should be secured and the labourer should have every facility to return home. Now, as regards facility to return home, the Bill provides for the right of repatriation. I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury that the right of repatriation provided for in the Bill is somewhat meagre and it should be extended. I myself hold that it is in the interests of the plantations themselves that they should provide a very generous right of repatriation to the labourer, so that he may feel that he is really free and if the conditions are not to his satisfaction he can return home. If once a confidence is produced in the recruiting districts that it is the easiest thing for the labourer who is dissatisfied on plantations to return home, you will make your task of recruitment very easy. I would therefore suggest to the planters to give a sort of return ticket to every labourer in Assam so that whenever he thinks of returning home he may do so. I am sure every labourer will not think of returning home simply because he has a return ticket, because when he returns home he may not have sufficient to eat. If the conditions in Assam are quite good, although a return ticket may be in his pocket, the labourer is not going to return home. But the point is that if the labourer feels that he has every facility to return home, there will be a confidence in the recruiting district that after all the conditions in Assam may not be so dark, and even if there is some doubt, the labourer will take some risk and go to Assam to see what the conditions are. If the conditions are not good, he will return. I therefore feel that this right of repatriation should be made as generous as it can be made. I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury that the Bill should provide for general power being given to the Controller to repatriate a labourer for any sufficient reason. The planters I am sure will have sufficient confidence in an officer appointed by the Government of India that even though the power given to him may be very wide, he is not likely to misuse that power.

Then I feel that certain provisions of the Bill provide for right of repatriation in one year. I would suggest to the planters that they should themselves agree that this right also may be extended not to a period of one year but whenever a labourer wants to go back. Then, Sir, there is a small point which I should like to mention, and that is that a labourer gets a right of repatriation if the employer is convicted of assault. I myself feel that it should not be necessary for a labourer to go to the court and get his employer convicted of assault. The power, so far as the right of repatriation goes in the matter of assault, should be left to the Controller himself. A labourer should have the right to make a complaint to the Controller if his employer has committed an assault; and if the Controller is satisfied that the employer has done it, he should have the power to repatriate the labourer.

Then, Sir, the second proposal I would make for improving conditions in Assam is that the liberty of the labourer on the plantation should be further secured. The Royal Commission on Labour agrees that in spite of the disappearance of the legislation providing for criminal punishment for breach of contract of service, the labourer is not entirely free. I shall just read a few lines from the Report of the Royal Commission on Labour on this point:

"The workers, for the most part, live in lines to which the public have no right of access. Access is not ordinarily withheld in practice, but, whenever the manager considers it necessary, a watch is maintained on visitors, and there are almost always chaukidars, part of whose duty is to observe movements to and from the lines. It is contended by planters that no amount of vigilance can keep a labourer who is determined to leave; and chaukidars are probably employed more to prevent other employers from enticing labourers than to prevent the labourers themselves from leaving. At the same time, we had evidence that workers who wanted to leave even a good garden without permission found it advisable to do so by night. In speaking of a labourer who goes without permission the term universally used is "abscond"; and this term reflects accurately the position in which the labourer on some gardens finds himself when he wishes to seek employment elsewhere."

The fact is that even today the labourer is not entirely free. I therefore feel that the Government should take every measure to give a feeling of freedom to the labourer. The recommendation of the Royal Commission is that the houses of the labourers should be approached by public roads and there should be public roads even within the lines where the houses are built. My Honourable friend Mr. Fox says it will introduce disease. Disease is not prevented from coming simply if you call a road a private road and it will come in if you call it a public road. I feel, Sir, that the Government should take steps immediately to see that all roads leading through the plantations to the houses in which the labourers live should be made public. My own view is that the Government should declare these roads to be public even without giving any compensation. The planters did not pay very huge prices for the lands which they got from Government; they got the lands very cheap, and they have made profits during the last 50 years. And there is no harm at all if Government declares all the private roads to be public. Then the workers' liberty in plantations is restrained and reduced by the action of the planters themselves. The planters have made certain agreements amongst themselves; they have made agreements amongst themselves about wages so that the wages on one plantation should not be increased; they have made agreements amongst themselves not to take . . .

Mr. H. B. Fox: I do not think that is the case.

Mr. President: Honourable Members proposed to be appointed to the Select Committee are giving expression to their views at great length.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: It is quite true that I am one of the Members of the Select Committee, and I am hoping to be able to attend the meeting of the Select Committee. But I am anxious, Sir, that those Members of this House who are not members of the Select Committee will study the Bill in the vacation which they will get and I want to place a few points before them for their benefit.

Then, Sir, the planters have an agreement amongst themselves not to employ each other's labour. This again restricts the liberty of the labourer. It is quite true that the planters may say that they have every right to do so. They may have every right to do so but at the same time the fact remains that the labourers are not an organised body and they are ignorant and illiterate; and if the stronger party is allowed to make such agreements as will restrain the liberty of the workers who are weak, I suggest that Government will be justified in declaring all these agreements to be null and void. Sir, it is in this way that the Government of India can secure the liberty and freedom of the labourers on plantations.

Then, Sir, the Royal Commission on Labour has made certain recommendations for improving conditions on plantations. They have made recommendations as regards establishing machinery for fixing a minimum wage; they have made recommendations as regards establishing boards of health and as regards education, and certain other recommendations for prohibiting the employment of children before a certain age. I feel that all these proposals should be given effect to without loss of time, so that the real principle of the Royal Commission's recommendations, namely, that the labourer should be made free to go anywhere he likes but should be protected in the province where he goes for his work, will be given effect to.

There is only one more point which I would mention before sitting down; and that point is this; that whatever we may do here in the Central Legislature, a great deal will have to be done for the labourers on plantations in Assam and in the Assam Legislature. I hope that the Government of India will do everything in their power to see that the labour on Assam plantations will be fully represented in the local Legislatures. We must realise that labourers in Assam are not educated and are not able to put forward their own case before the Franchise Committee and before the Government. But I hope that the Government as the trustee of these illiterate and ignorant masses will take every step to see that the labourers in Assam will get adequate representation. I feel, Mr. President, that if they do not get sufficient representation in the Assam Legislature, whatever we may do in the Central Legislature here, the labourer in Assam will not be adequately protected. Assam is a province where not only in old times there was planters' raj but I feel that in Assam the planters' raj may continue even under the new constitution. I therefore hope that the Government will do everything in their power—they should approach the Franchise Committee and they should approach the Assam Government to see that adequate representation is given to the labourers on plantations. There is no section in Assam which is free from the influence of the planters. The Government are dominated by the planters; the officers are dominated by the planters; the legislators are to a large extent dominated by the planters; and if the present state of the labourer being unrepresented in the Legislature continues, there will be no protection for the labourers in Assam at all. I hope that this defect will be remedied.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty-Five Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty-Five Minutes Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, after hearing the Honourable Member from Assam, Mr. Fox, one would think that Assam is verily a land of paradise for Indian coolies. The Honourable gentleman said that nowhere except in Assam were there such restrictions imposed on the recruitment of labour, but may I ask him whether there is any part in India where the same conditions which are obtaining in Assam prevail. He says that this Bill is intended for the benefit of emigrants. I hope it may be, and I wish it were. If it were in the interest of the emigrants themselves, then I would ask why of all the recommendations of the Labour Commission this particular recommendation, which is the least beneficial to the emigrants, has been taken up when other matters of a more weighty character have remained untouched. In this question two parties are involved; one the emigrants and the other are the employers. We have had the benefit of hearing the employers' point of view about the merits of this Bill, but unfortunately we have not had the privilege of hearing the emigrants' point of view in this House, because labour is not directly represented here, although there is my friend Mr. Joshi who, if I may be permitted to say so, is only a labourite by adoption (Laughter), and in the absence of labourers themselves it is very difficult for us to say how their interests are safeguarded, and it behoves us all that we should treat this measure as a trust and administer it as a trust for the sole benefit of those poor labourers. The principle on which this Bill is based is stated to be this, that there should be a removal of the restriction on the free flow of labour in the country. On the face of it, there can be no possible question that the principle appears to be sound. But I would like to ask what was the nature of those restrictions and who were the authorities who have imposed those restrictions and who are the people affected by those restrictions. If we look a little more deeply into the matter, we find that the restriction on the free movement of labour is imposed not so much on the labour itself as on the employers' powers of recruitment. Here the employers by various methods have been recruiting people and the way in which they have been discharging those duties has become a by word of reproach and in some respects a scandal. Under those circumstances, certain restrictions were imposed by certain Provincial Governments to prevent not recruitment in all cases but certain methods employed in recruitment, and in certain other cases to regulate recruitment under certain conditions. Therefore, it would seem that the restrictions are meant to act against the free exercise of the employers' right of recruiting people from various parts of India. Therefore, I say there is no restriction on the labour itself to go and seek employment in Assam. The restriction is entirely a restriction on recruitment, or rather on the methods of recruitment. Such being the case, one would like to know what safeguards there are, so that these people, who have been notoriously illiterate, who have been helpless and who have been tempted by all sorts of promises by the agents of these employers to forsake their homes and go to distant lands never to return any more, may not be defrauded. Now, the Bill aims at removing that protection which has been accorded up to now to the labourers. In return for that, I must in fairness admit that the Government of India have not altogether neglected the case of the labourers. They say that they are going to impose in substitution for that protection certain rules so as to give them free choice and a right of repatriation. That is the second principle of the Bill.

Sir, I come from a place which is considered to be a fair recruiting ground for these labourers to Assam. The Honourable the Mover of this Bill has also some knowledge of those districts from which this labour is recruited. Sir, I have a little knowledge of how recruitment by the agents of the tea planters is made in my part of the country. Our country is poor, Sir, and particularly those districts which I have the honour to represent are very poor. The land is very much crowded and is not fruitful when compared to other places like those in the Gangetic valley or in the Delta districts. Therefore, it is a great inducement for the labourers to leave the district. If any one goes and offers them substantial amounts as wages and also employment, they will immediately follow them, because, as I said, land is overcrowded and is not able to support them at home. The agents of these tea planters go to these villages and give these poor people a little cash to start with, a few rupees which to the agent is not much but which to the poor labourer is very tempting; then he is promised all sorts of things, and among others I may mention, particularly when these agents deal with young men, they are even promised two wives. (Laughter.) A wise man would consider that even one wife would be too many, but these are poor labourers without any education, they are ignorant and knowledge naturally comes a little late to them. By employing such method, these poor people are tempted to the towns. With cash in their pockets and plenty of scope for enjoyment, with all the nice things that they are given to eat and with the promise that they would be eating likewise thereafter and with so many other facilities to have a good time they are promised, these poor people are enticed away to the nearest town. They are taken there to all sorts of disreputable houses and are demoralised; and often they are taken to drinking booths. In this condition, Sir, these poor, illiterate people are asked to enter into a contract with the employers. The way in which the indenture system has been working was a big scandal. A hue and cry was raised against it, and as a result the Provincial Governments came to the rescue of these people and passed certain legislation to prevent this sort of propaganda. That legislation protected the labourers from falling victims to the agents in the manner they did. Such being the case, it is very difficult to believe that everything that can be done could be done under this Act unless the Select Committee go into the very details of this question and see how best they can, if not actually substitute, at least secure equal protection that these labourers were hitherto enjoying by such rules as would make it impossible for any exploitation of labour in that direction; or else it is very difficult to understand how this measure will be useful.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): I am a good deal interested in this measure. I come from Orissa, and since 1866 lots of people have left Orissa and they have never returned to their homes. As far as I understand from my Honourable friends Mr. Fox and Mr. Joshi there are at present 50,000 Orissa labourers employed in the Assam tea gardens. Nine years ago when I became a Member of this House, and found my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi fighting his solitary battle on the floor of this House against a House that showed him no sympathy with problems of labour, my heart went out to Mr. Joshi, and from that day, whenever any measure came up before the House for ameliorating the condition of the working classes, Mr. Joshi always had my sympathy. When I heard to-day Mr. Joshi, I found he was speaking in a tone of jubilation. He was speaking in a tone of confidence, as if he was the Ramsay Macdonald of India on the eve of the formation of the National Cabinet. No doubt he had every reason to express satisfaction, because to-day he finds the two stalwarts of Government, the Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore and my friend Mr. Clow—and I hope my Honourable friend Mr. Clow will speak later on—two stalwarts of the Government agree with him and are carrying out the spirit for which Mr. Joshi worked for the last 11 years on the floor of this House. In the years 1924-25 I used to find, when a question was asked about the Assam labour, the gentlemen who replied from the Treasury Benches were unsympathetic and they used to contest at every stage Mr. Joshi's charges. But to-day I find, after reading the Report of the Royal Commission on Labour, at least my Honourable friend Mr. Clow, who is an expert on the side of Government on labour problems, agreeing with my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi. It has taken Mr. Clow six or seven years to come into entire agreement with Mr. Joshi. That is a good omen. That shows that the world is tending towards socialism and towards dealing with the working classes humanely. I listened most attentively to my Honourable friend Mr. Fox and I thought that during the first part of his speech he was reasonable, and he wanted that the working classes should be treated properly. But somehow he hinted that there was a conspiracy whereby the Government and the representatives of the working classes are going to deal hardly on the tea gardens so that that particular industry may not thrive. My Honourable friend pointed out that in the year 1915 the penal contract system had been abolished. It might have been abolished on paper, but so far as I know the indenture system continued till 1923 or 1924.

Mr. H. B. Fox: No, Sir.

Mr. B. Das: It might not have been continued on paper, but it continued in practice.

Mr. H. B. Fox: No.

Mr. B. Das: When I spoke last year on the Resolution about forced labour, I said that although in actual writing it does not continue, the penal system continues under the civilised administration of the Government of India. My Honourable friend says that the working classes are paid well in Assam tea gardens. As far as I know, in 1923-24 the wage of an adult was Rs. 3 or Rs. 4. I admit that it is three times that now, it is Rs. 12, thanks to the efforts of my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi, and also to the kindly sympathy of my Honourable friend Mr. Clow. In 1924-25, we found people were allowed wages of Rs. 4 which did not keep their bodies and souls together. And what happened to those lakhs and lakhs of Oriyas who left Orissa in the great famine of 1866? They never returned to their homes, because the wages that were paid in kind and in money amounting to Rs. 3 or Rs. 4 never allowed them to save sufficient money to return to their homes. So, I congratulate my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore on bringing in a measure whereby there will be repatriation of a labourer after three years. At least the man will go back to his wife or to his children from whom he had been seduced and separated, seduced actually by the recruiters or even by the Labour Boards which have been organised by the Provincial Governments at present. Another thing that I welcome in this Bill is the abolition of the Assam Labour Board, and I welcome the appointment of a Controller of emigrant labour. My Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury has suggested that the Controller and Deputy Controller should be Indians. I am not concerned at present whether they will be Indians; what I am concerned is that they should be humane. I have had occasion to hear that the members of the Labour Boards in Bihar and Orissa and in the Central Provinces recruit labour for these Assam tea gardens. There is no difference between this system of recruitment and what I have read of the slave drivers who wished to recruit slaves from Africa and transfer them to America. It may be that they do not recruit them under the indenture system, but the same system prevails in practice. There can be no break in that system unless there is a complete change as suggested in this Bill. I wish it had been possible for the Government to see that when labour is recruited, if some of them wish to stay in Assam for long periods, a sufficient number of women are also recruited from the locality from similar castes. In the past it was not possible because, as my Honourable friend Mr. Raju pointed out, the men were seduced to go to Assam under the pretext of high wages and they never returned home. They never had a chance to write even letters to their homes. How could they write letters when these tea gardens are secluded areas and no member of the public is allowed to visit them or to meet these workers. When the Controller of Emigrant Labour has organised his office, he should keep a regular register of all workers that go to Assam and he should also supply a list of men and women that are recruited from particular districts to the district officials of these districts so that when enquiries are made about the labourers who are lost, the district magistrate should be in a position to supply the information. It is a very pitiable thing that in Orissa in almost every village you will find a man is absent for 20 or 30 years and no trace of him has been found. I know that Oriya labour goes to Burma, to Bengal and other places, but they write to their homes, but in the Assam tea gardens the labourers are never allowed to write to their relations. When my Honourable friends Mr. Amar Nath Dutt and Mr. Mitra speak on this motion, they will reveal how even educated men have been coerced in the past under the indenture system and they were not allowed to write letters to their homes. So, when the intention of the Government and of my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore is to produce humanised conditions, it is not too much for me to ask that every labourer who goes to Assam even under the present system should be helped to keep in touch with his home.

My friend Mr. Fox said that it is the tea planters who gave travelling allowance to these indentured labourers in the past to whom the Government of Assam had given six lakhs of acres of land to cultivate and settle down. I do not know whom to thank for this, the Government of Assam or the tea planters. The tea planters took away men from their homes under a system of forced labour as it exists in Africa to-day, and when these labourers had no money to go back to their homes, the Government of Assam came to their rescue and gave them certain plots of land. From what I know of Assam, the Government have too much land with nobody to cultivate it and if my friend Mr. Fox and his predecessors take credit for it, I think the credit is not due to them. Serious charges were made by my friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury and my friend should have pleaded guilty to the mistakes made by his predecessors in the past.

[Mr. E. Das.]

Instead of behaving as civilising agents, they behaved as slave drivers and they treated the labourers in the most inhuman way. These people ought not to have been seduced from their homes. I believe they paid their agents something like Rs. 150 per head. I wish that all that money comes to the labourers in the shape of wages instead of going in bribery and to the Labour Board, which although the Government and my friend Mr. Clow may tell me is a humanising organisation, is the inheritor of traditions of the old indenture system. With these few words, I whole-heartedly support the Bill.

Mr. A. G. Clow (Government of India: Nominated Official): We have had a long debate, Sir, and to me an interesting one. I do not propose to go into the points of detail that have been raised. They were raised, I think, entirely by Honourable Members who it is proposed should serve on the Select Committee, and they can be better discussed there. I would however like to say just a little about the principles of the Bill, and about certain principles which are not in the Bill but which I gather some Members would have liked to have seen there.

Of the principle of repatriation I have heard no criticisms. It affords indeed an answer to a good many of the difficulties which some of my Honourable friends mentioned? As regards what was said by my friend Mr. Das, this is really a safeguard, for it provides that the man if he wishes can get into touch with his own country, and that he will be able to return there if he so wants, with his family, within three years. I would emphasize here, in fairness to the planters and in reply to the suggestions that conditions in Assam are not on a high moral plane, that they unlike most employers in India have always tried to recruit families rather than individuals. I have no reason to believe that in Assam, the high standard which is maintained throughout the Indian villages is not fully sustained.

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil (Bombay Southern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rarad): Is not the population of female workers more than the population of male workers?

Mr. A. G. Clow: It may be so. I have not the actual figures before me but there is a much better sex ratio here than in any centre of industry in India.

The main principle of the Bill is the abolition, so far as it is possible, of restrictions on the free movement of labour. The enunciation of this seems to have misled my Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, who in some other respects, such as the extent of the Controller's powers, did not seem to be very familiar with the provisions of the Bill, into supposing that we were in some curious way giving the Assam employers special facilities for stimulating, I think he said, the flow of labour. Actually the position is somewhat different. So far from giving the Assam employer special facilities, the Bill either continues or imposes upon him restrictions to which no other industry is subject and to which not even the tea planters in other provinces will be subjected.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Is it not a fact that in some of the districts of the United Provinces recruitment for Assam is prohibited. Under the provisions of this Act, they will be free to recruit from those districts?

Mr. A. G. Clow: It is perfectly true that certain districts of the United Provinces are at present closed to recruitment, but under this Bill there will be no possibility of saying to a person in a single part of India that he shall not proceed to another part.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Is it not a fact that you are facilitating recruitment by this Bill?

Mr. A. G. Clow: My Honourable friend Mr. Raju suggested that the only restrictions imposed were those imposed on employers, but actually that is not the case. If he were to go to some of the men in the tracts he was speaking of some of whom are subject to the grave disabilities mentioned by Mr. Joshi and say to them that Assam is a much better place, he might find himself in danger of arrest, and if out of the kindness of his heart he were to pull out a few rupees and say "Here is your fare" he could certainly be subjected to a criminal prosecution.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Why should not the Local Government stop it?

Mr. A. G. Clow: I do not propose to enlarge on that question. It can be discussed in the Select Committee.

Mr. H. B. Fox: These districts in the United Provinces which were closed to recruiting were only closed for the benefit of the employers and the zamindars of the United Provinces.

Mr. A. G. Clow: I think there is no advantage in entering into that controversy though there is truth in the suggestion that they are not in the interests of labour. As a matter of fact, even when this Bill is passed, the employer in Assam will continue to be subject to peculiar restrictions. That, as Mr. Fox and Mr. Joshi explained, is largely the result of history; and my Honourable friend Mr. Das was treating us, I think, more to what is a matter of history than a recital of present day conditions. I am glad to say that there is nothing now approaching indenture in Assam, and if this Bill is passed the last mention of any kind of criminal contracts for labourers will have disappeared from the Indian Statute-book.

Mr. B. Das: Let us hope so. I agree with you.

Mr. A. G. Clow: There were other references to entirely different subjects, and I should like just to mention some of them in conclusion. There were suggestions that the recommendations made by the Commission in other parts of their report dealing with such questions as minimum wages, health and welfare might have found a place in this Bill. These of course stand on a very different footing. In the first place, this Bill deals with migration, which is a Central subject, whereas these subjects are Provincial. In the second place, the Commission themselves did not regard these recommendations as capable of immediate application. In the case of minimum wages, they recognized, that the material was not available and that a good many statistical and other investigations would have to be conducted before the Local Government would be in a position to introduce anything of that kind. I may inform the House that actually the Assam Government has taken one step in that direction for it deputed a gentleman very well known to this House, Mr. Cosgrave, to visit Ceylon last Christmas with a view to ascertaining how the minimum wage Ordinance was working in that island. As regards health, my Honourable friend Mr. Thampan knows that that is a provincial transferred subject, and it will be for the Local Governments to do what they think fit on that subject. Actually the recommendations of the Commission regarding health were not restricted to Assam; and if I were asked in what places they were most urgently needed, I do not think I should select Assam as the first. The Commission were not under the impression that Assam was the workers' paradise to which some Honourable Members referred, but I can assure the House of one thing, namely that I know of no group of employers in industries who do so much for the health of their workers as the planters in Assam. (Loud Applause.)

[Mr. A. G. Clow.]

Some Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put.
The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: Sir, I have nothing to add to what Mr. Clow has said.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Sir, with your permission, I would simply ask permission to propose the addition of the name of Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur, who is much interested in Indian labour. I hope the Honourable the Mover will have no objection.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: I have no objection if the Honourable Member is willing to serve.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: He is willing to serve.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to amend the law relating to emigrant labourers in the tea districts of Assam be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Sir Cowasji Jehangir, Mr. K. Ahmed, Mr. C. C. Biswas, Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, Mr. A. G. Clow, Mr. H. B. Fox, Mr. N. M. Joshi, Mr. B. N. Misra, Mr. H. P. Mody, Mr. G. Morgan, Mr. Tin Tüt, Mr. T. R. Phookun, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, Mr. K. P. Thampan, Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan, Sir Frank Noyce, Mr. S. G. Jog, Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

THE PORT HAJ COMMITTEES BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to establish Committees in the principal ports of pilgrim traffic to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur, Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi, Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad, Lieut. Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan, Haji Choudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan, Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinoy, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

It will be noticed that the composition of this Committee differs somewhat from the one to which I moved reference of another Bill this morning. The reason for this is that, as I think the House will agree, this question of establishing Haj Committees at the ports is really a matter of domestic concern for the Mussalman community, and it is for that reason that the members of the Select Committee have, with two exceptions, been found from the Muslim Members of this House. The two exceptions are myself, as the Secretary in the Department concerned, and Sir Hari Singh Gour, who has been added to the Committee owing to the desirability of having at least two Members on the Committee who can, if necessary, act as its Chairman. As regards the principle of the Bill, I think

3 P.M. there can be no question. It is only in regard to details that there may be some differences of opinion and those can be threshed out in Select Committee. There are one or two points on which I may perhaps comment. It would make things very easy for us if we could accept the suggestion of my Honourable friend, Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur, and accept the recommendations of all our Committees in toto. Had we been able to do that in this case, it would have saved my Department and myself hours of work. No references to Local Governments would have been necessary, and we should not have had to call on the Standing Haj Committee for the advice which is so generously and freely given. I have no doubt whatever that the recommendations of Committees represent the best, but unfortunately in this work-a-day world it is the duty of Government to decide how far of the best can be converted into the practical and that we have had to do in this case. We have had to consult the various interests concerned, and above all we have had to defer to some extent to the views of the Local Governments who are very keenly interested in this matter. For that reason, the composition of the Port Haj Committees, which we have suggested in the Bill, differs considerably from that suggested by the Haj Inquiry Committee in its Report. It will be seen that the composition of the various Committees differs inter se. We have got a different Committee for Calcutta, a different one for Bombay and a different one for Karachi. The reason for that is that, acting on the advice of the Standing Haj Committee, which I should perhaps say was given by a majority, we have decided to follow the advice of the Local Governments. But we are not laying down a rigid composition for the Committees: if it is found at a later date that any alterations are necessary, those can be effected without an amendment of the law. I submit to the House that until some experience of the working of these Committees is gained, it is desirable that we should adopt the course which has been suggested by the Local Governments concerned, as they have far more accurate knowledge than I think even the Haj Inquiry Committee or the Standing Haj Committee would claim of local conditions and requirements. It is again exactly for that reason that we have not followed the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee that the Port Haj Committee should elect their own Chairman. But we have given power to the Local Governments to decide whether they will appoint a Chairman or will allow the Port Haj Committee to elect its own Chairman. That view is based on the argument, in which I think there is considerable force, that until the re-constituted Port Haj Committees have found their feet and are working smoothly, it is desirable that the Local Government should exercise a certain amount of control over their working, and the most effective method of doing that is that they should nominate the Chairman.

Again with regard to the appointment of the officers and servants of the Committee, the Haj Inquiry Committee recommended that the Executive Officer of a Port Haj Committee should be appointed by the Committee itself subject to the approval of the Government. Here again, after consulting the Local Governments concerned and acting on the advice of the Standing Haj Committee, Government have decided that at the outset the Executive Officer and other servants should be appointed by the Government and that the cost involved should be met from the Central Revenues. Clauses 14 to 16 of the Bill are designed to give effect to this proposal. The power to appoint Executive Officers and other servants will, as in the case of the Chairman, be helpful to the Local Government in securing the smooth working of these Committees. Another reason why it is desirable at the outset that the Executive Officer and other servants of the Committee should be appointed by Government who should meet their cost, is that we are not yet certain how far the funds which are being placed at the disposal of the Haj Committee, and which will be found enumerated in clause 20, will meet their needs. Experience alone can show that. I would submit in conclusion that we are not laying down a rigid method of procedure. What this Bill does is to convert the present Haj Committees, which are purely consultative and advisory bodies, into executive bodies with definite powers. What it also does is to enable Local Governments, as the Haj Committees prove their worth—I have little doubt they will—to enlarge their functions and to give them greater powers without the necessity of coming back to this House for amendments of this measure. I submit to the House that this is the best method of procedure. With these words I would commend this motion for the acceptance of the House.

[Sir Frank Noyce.]

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in the Preamble to this Bill it is stated: "to establish Committees in the principal ports of pilgrim traffic to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz". In the Statement of Objects and Reasons it is said:

"The Haj Inquiry Committee therefore proposed that the Port Haj Committees should cease to be merely advisory and consultative bodies and should be entrusted by law with the administration of all work connected with the pilgrim traffic at the ports."

If that is the object and if that is the principle, I have no quarrel and I fully agree with the general principles, but when I go through some of these clauses of the Bill I find that in clause 4 the Committees are constituted in such a way that there shall always be a majority of nominated members in all these Committees. I should like to make it perfectly clear, if that is the principle to which this House is to be committed, then I take exception to the principle. I have seen that in clause 4 there is a provision for 19 members for the Port of Calcutta for the composition of Port Haj Committees. Of these members 15 are nominated, and of them as many as five may be officials and only four members are to be elected by the Muslim members of District Boards in Bengal. The condition in Bombay is a little better. There, out of 19 members of the Committee, it appears, nine should be nominated members. I do not know why in Calcutta the proportion of nominated members is so very high. I wish the Honourable Member to explain to this House why, in these days of full Dominion Status and other high sounding phrases, in a small Committee where the Muslim members are expected to help Government by their advice for the assistance of the Muslim pilgrims going to Hejaz, there should be a majority of nominated members. Why should the Muslim members not be entrusted with the task of electing their own men in whom they have full confidence? Why should the Local Government usurp to themselves these powers, and why they should think that they are the best judges of the interests of the people, even in religious matters, where they are going to help their own co-religionists? As regards the composition of the Karachi Committee, I find the same thing. In that Committee, there are 17 members, of whom eight members are nominated by the Local Government. What special claim have the Local Government to nominate their own men on these Committees, when properly the Municipalities and in some places the District Boards should elect members to these Committees? That is the one general principle to which I have objection, and if that is the principle, I think the House will be well advised in opposing this measure going to the Select Committee unless Government explain that that is not the principle to which the House is committed.

There is a slight matter in clause 4 (2) (c) regarding elected Muslim members of the Bombay Medical Council. I submit this should not be confined to Muslim members alone. Here you want medical advice, I think non-Muslims also can offer their best advice in this matter. That is however a small matter. I should like to press on the House that the main ground for consideration of the House is that the Select Committee should be free to alter the composition of these Committees in a way that there should be not only a slight majority, but a large majority of elected members in the Committees of the different ports.

Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim (Chittagong Division: Muhammadan Rural): I had not the least idea of speaking on this motion, but it appears that Government in a quiet way have brought in such an important piece of legislation when they thought perhaps that in a thin House it would be possible for them to have it passed uncontested. As one who comes from a province wherefrom a large number of Hajis go over to Hejaz for pilgrimage every year, I think it would be pertinent on my part to say a few words on the principle of this Bill. We have been told, day in and day out, with regard to the coming millennium, that it is likely to come within the next one or two years where the rule would be that all the non-officials would be elected and so forth, but it appears to me, though in a disguised form, the Honourable Member who introduced this Bill has said that perhaps it is not likely to bind the coming Assembly, with regard to the principle of the Bill, but still I think the mischief will be committed if this Bill is allowed to go in this way even to the Select Committee without some sort of criticism. My Honourable friend Mr. Mitra has very pertinently pointed out that, whether it has been the result of a long thought-out deliberation on the part of the Department of my Honourable friend Sir Fazl-i-Husain, or whether it is the result of the deliberations of the majority of the Standing Haj Committee of this Assembly that this principle has been introduced, the mischief is there. If I am not giving out any secrets, it seems to me that with regard to the composition of the Port Haj Committee at Calcutta, the Government of India have surrendered body and soul to the representations of the Government of Bengal. It seems that some unfair pressure was put on the Standing Haj Committee of the Government of India, and perhaps that unfair pressure is responsible for this most unbusiness-like constitution which they have suggested for the Calcutta Committee. It surpasses one's comprehension that the Government of India, over which my Honourable friend Sir Fazl-i-Husain presides, should come to this Assembly with this form of constitution. You know to whom this Committee will be responsible: they will be responsible to the people in that tract of land starting from Sadiya in the North East, down to my place in the South East and Bihar to the West. That is a very large tract of land, and to have this huge tract represented at Calcutta in the manner proposed seems, to put it mildly, puerile. I am really surprised that the Government of India could only think of giving representation on that Committee to the extent of four non-official Muslims, who might perhaps be members of the District Boards. Perhaps the only exception is this: that the people who might be eligible for membership might be non-members as well; but it seems so bad that they could not think of any other method for giving the mofussil area of Bengal an effective voice in this matter except to the extent of allowing only four seats on that body. If you proceed a little further, Mr. President, you will see that perhaps the composition of the Committees at Bombay and Karachi is also not very happy; but still I think the Select Committee will be very well advised to take notice of the fact that in the year of grace 1932 this sort of retrograde thing is proposed and whether they should allow such a non-chalant Government like the Government of Bengal to ride rough shod over the wishes of the people. We have the advantage of legal luminaries like Sir Abdur Rahim and shrewd men like Mr. Ghuznavi on the Select Committee, and I hope and trust that they will modify this clause 4 at least, which relates to the composition of these Committees, in such a way that it might be agreeable to all of us. Mr. President, Bengal is a very large province, and the Muslim population is as docile, as could be imagined. They are a loyal band, and they could surely be trusted to elect their own men to serve on that Port Committee at Calcutta.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I am very much obliged to my friend, Mr. Mitra, for drawing my attention to this particular clause of the Bill which is sought to be referred to a Select Committee. It does strike one as rather strange that in Bengal, neither the Local Government nor the Government of India could find a large enough constituency for Muslims to elect a few members of the Committee for this purpose. It is not a question of principle. I take it the principle that is involved is that a Committee will be established in the principal ports of pilgrim traffic to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz; and it does not seem to be necessary even for Bengal that there should be a preponderance of members nominated by the Government. I take it that is a point more or less of detail which can be rectified in the Select Committee. If that is so, I think it may very well be left to the Select Committee to rectify the mistake.

Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan (Bakarganj cum Faridpur: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I have to congratulate the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill on having framed this Bill; but I cannot for a moment accept clause 4 of the Bill, whereby 15 out of 19 of the members are to be nominated. I do not see why what has been found possible in the case of Bombay and Karachi has been found impossible in the case of Bengal. I hope the House will agree with me when I say that there is no justification whatsoever for this kind of differentiation of one province from the other. By so doing, the Government have not formed a correct opinion about Bengal, which is one of the first and foremost in point of the huge number of pilgrims. At the last meeting of the Standing Haj Committee in Simla, I opposed the procedure of nomination vehemently; and some other members including Mr. Clayton supported me; but I now see that the Government of India have not heeded our joint opposition. I hope the Select Committee will mend the matter.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not rise to oppose this reference to Select Committee but to point out that the only representative from my party on the Select Committee is Sir Hari Singh Gour. I would suggest the name of Bhai Parma Nand also to be added to the Select Committee. I do not look upon this as an essentially Muslim business; it has no communal outlook at all, though the position as put in the Bill is only communal. I do not like the communal aspects of this Bill, for instance, if you refer to clause 4, you will find that it is communal throughout, including the Medical Council of Bombay—for instance where it says: "The elected Muslim members of the Bombay Medical Council". Communalism so far as Muslim doctors alone ministering to the Muslim pilgrims is open to very serious objection, and incidentally affords comment upon our ambition to develop democratic institutions in our country. I hope the Honourable gentleman will accept my suggestion in regard to Bhai Parma Nand being included in this Committee, because as our party has only one representative on this Committee, it is entitled to adequate representation; and whatever controversial clauses there may be in this Bill, it is not a matter to be discussed at this stage, but in the Committee; and the object of all the members of the Committee should be to ameliorate the conditions of Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz, a subject on which there can be no controversy whatever.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member agree to the addition of the name suggested?

Sir Frank Noyce: I am really in a somewhat difficult position, Sir. . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair will explain the position to the Honourable Member. A suggestion is made for the addition of a name. The Member in charge is entitled either to accept the name or to refuse to do so. If the Member in charge refuses to accept the suggestion, then the Member making the suggestion is entitled to move it in the form of an amendment. That is the correct procedure. The Chair wishes to know, in the first instance, whether the Honourable Member is agreeable to accept the suggestion of Mr. Ranga Iyer?

Sir Frank Noyce: I regret, Sir, that I am unable to accept the suggestion. We readily accepted the suggestion made this morning that Bhai Parma Nand should be added to the Select Committee on the Indian Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Bill, because that involves issues which do not entirely affect the Muslim community. This is

Mr. President: The Honourable Member need not give his reasons at this stage.

Sir Frank Noyce: I am sorry, Sir.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member has stated that he is not willing to accept the suggestion. If the Honourable Member who made the suggestion moves an amendment to add the name, the Honourable Member will be entitled to give his reasons in opposing it. This is not the stage when these reasons can be given.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: May I move, Sir, that the name of Bhai Parma Nand be included in the list. I can easily tell the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill that if he does not include the name that I suggest, so far as this particular Bill is concerned, it may be that at a later stage there may be difficulties in the passing of this Bill. My only object in making the suggestion is to avoid future difficulties in the passing of the Bill so that, whatever discussion there might be in regard to this Bill in camera, it will not be public property, but it will be so when the Bill emerges from the Select Committee. Therefore mine is a very helpful suggestion. I do not propose to press my motion to a division, but I thought it was my duty to tell the Government that all these matters could be better discussed inside the Committee than on the floor of this House before the Bill emerges from the Select Committee.

Mr. President: Amendment proposed:

"That the name of Bhai Parma Nand be added to the list forming the Select Committee proposed by the Honourable Member, Sir Frank Noyce. Both the original motion and the amendment are now before the House."

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Mr. President, I have been trying to find what is exactly at the back of my Honourable friend's mind when he suggests that Bhai Parma Nand's name should be included in the list of members of the Select Committee

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Bhai Parma Nand is a member of my party.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Bhai Parma Nand might be a very good man to advise us as to how legislation should proceed in matters which concern his own community, but I submit that in a matter like this, which exclusively concerns the Muslim community, he will not be able to give us much help

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Then why do you want Sir Hari Singh Gour?

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: If my friend's contention is that there should be some one from that side, I mean from the Nationalist Group, on this Committee, that is a different matter altogether.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: That is exactly my position; I stated so.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Therefore, I was going to say that there is already one Member, who is the Leader of the Nationalist Party, on the Select Committee, and I do not know why in spite of that, Bhai Parma Nand's name should be added.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I think, Sir

Mr. President: Are you speaking on the amendment?

Sir Abdur Rahim: Yes, Sir; I think we ought to accept the suggestion put forward by Mr. Ranga Iyer, which is, as I understood him, that he wants his party to be properly represented

An Honourable Member: Sir Hari Singh Gour is already there.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Supposing he is ill?

Sir Abdur Rahim: Supposing the Leader of Mr. Ranga Iyer's party is ill; or he wants some one else to be on the Committee to represent his party. From that point of view I do not think myself there can be any objection at all to this suggestion.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): I think, Sir, my friends the Muslim Members must welcome the suggestion made by my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer. When my friends find that the Hindu Members are willing to co-operate with us or to lend us any help, such help should be sincerely welcomed and appreciated, and there can be no objection whatever to the suggestion made by my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer. If there is any apprehension in the minds of certain Honourable Members that their views might be opposed by a man like Bhai Parma Nand then I should always welcome such a man who is always opposed to me to be with me to see that what I am doing is the right thing and convince him in private conversation while sitting in the Committee that we are right and shut up his mouth from publicly opposing any measures affecting our community without having an adequate idea of the peculiar difficulties affecting these pilgrims. I see no objection, therefore to the suggestion of my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer, rather I welcome it, and strongly support the motion.

Sir Frank Noyce: In view of what has fallen from Sir Abdur Rahim and Mr. Yamin Khan, I entirely withdraw my opposition to the proposal.

Mr. K. P. Thampan (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I should like to speak a word or two on the main motion. I am not interested in this Bill. I may also confess at the same time that I have not cared to go through the Report of the Haj Committee, but on going through the several sections of the Bill, it struck me that I might at this early stage venture to suggest that some kind of statutory provision may be made to appoint one Moplah on the Bombay Committee. Sir, the Moplahs on the West Coast form a peculiar community. They do not know the Urdu language or the language that is spoken in Arabia or Hejaz and they form by themselves a separate class. I know though they are very deeply religious they are illiterate and many of them go to Hejaz every year. If there is any class of Muslims who stand in need of protection and advice in such matters it is the Moplahs. I find there is provision for as many as 10 elected members on the Committee, but there is absolutely no chance for any Moplah to seek election into the Committee

Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinooy (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): May I inform the Honourable Member that the Deputy Protector of Pilgrims in Bombay is a Moplah?

Mr. K. P. Thampan: I am very glad to hear it, and I only want the same to continue in the future also. I am aware that my friend Mr. Uppi Sahab who represents them in their House is more competent and would have been able to deal with this matter much better than I can do but unfortunately I do not find him now in his seat here. I therefore take this opportunity to appeal to the Government and the general body of Muslim Members at this early stage that it may be statutorily provided to appoint at least one Moplah on the Committee in Bombay.

An Honourable Member: The question may now be put, Sir.

Mr. President: I accept the closure.

Before calling upon the Honourable Member to reply, I should like to ask Mr. Ranga Iyer whether in view of the fact that the addition of Bhai Parma Nand's name has been accepted by the Member in charge, he would withdraw his amendment?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Yes, Sir.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Sir Frank Noyce: Sir, I have very few words to say. The only important point which has been raised in connection with this motion is the constitution of the Haj Committee at Calcutta, Bombay and Karachi, and I need hardly say that this is a matter which is open to discussion in the Select Committee. Government are not committed to any definite figure under any of the various heads. The only other point, Sir, that I have to deal with is that made by Mr. Thampan, and I have little doubt that his proposal to appoint a Moplah to the Bombay Haj Committee will be duly considered by the Select Committee.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to establish committees in the principal ports of pilgrim traffic to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahab Bahadur, Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi, Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad, Lieut. Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan, Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan, Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinoy, Bhai Parma Nand, and the Mover and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

THE HEJAZ PILGRIMS (MUALLIMS) BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to regulate the activities of persons in British India who offer to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahab Bahadur, Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi, Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad, Lieut. Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan, Haji Chaudhuri Muhammad Ismail Khan, Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinoy, Bhai Parma Nand, and the Mover and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): This is a very important Bill. It imposes many restrictions on those muallims, who are generally foreign subjects. Not only that, but it gives powers of control to the Central Government and the Provincial Governments. Clause 3 deals with the power of the Governor General and Council to make rules. Clause 5 deals with the power of Local Governments to make rules. Clause 6 deals with the penalty for acting as a muallim without a licence. Clause 7 deals with presumption regarding motive, clause 8 deals with the penalty for contravention of the conditions of licence, and so on. At the same time, although this Bill has been brought forward on the recommendations of the Haj Committee, I will say that there were two kinds of recommendations. One was open recommendation and the other was confidential recommendation and as far as I remember, no comment has appeared in any paper on the confidential recommendations at any time. Further when such an important measure is referred to a State Committee, the opinions of the Local Governments and of the Ulemas and other Muslim institutions should be before the Committee for their guidance. I therefore request the Honourable Member in charge to at least circulate this Bill by executive order. If the Honourable Member in charge finds any difficulty even in doing so, then I suggest that a few copies in Urdu should be supplied to Members to send them out to different newspapers, Muslim institutions and Ulemas, or he should ask Members to give a list of the institutions, persons, newspapers, and Ulemas to whom the Bill can be sent for opinion, because this is a very important matter and muallims are generally inhabitants of a foreign country and they are restricted by this Bill. There are also other things in this Bill. So, the opinion of Ulemas and others must be taken, and I request the Honourable Member in charge to consider my suggestion.

An Honourable Member: What about Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi and Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahib Bahadur?

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: They are not Ulemas as far as I know. A man who is called a Maulana does not mean that he is an alim and he has read all the verses of the Koran. (Laughter.) When I said verses of the Koran, I mean a detailed study of the Koran with its several interpretations and meanings. There are many Hadises and things like that. There is one series which is called Sabah Silla contains many books and volumes. There are many other series in Hadis.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): I should thank the Honourable Member Mr. Maswood Ahmad for having given a certificate in favour of Maulana Shafee Daoodi and myself. (An Honourable Member: "Not a certificate".) Yes, it is a certificate saying that so and so are not Ulemas. We do not pose ourselves as highly cultured accomplished men so far as Islamic theology is concerned, but my Honourable friend should at the same time know that whatever is wanted for the observance of Islamic tenets Maulana Shafee Daoodi and myself are supposed to know. I should bring to the notice of the House in this connection that he has cast a slur on our Committee—I mean the last speaker, Mr. Maswood Ahmad. He said, I think that our committee submitted two reports, one being public and the other a confidential one. I repudiate that charge on the floor of this House. So far as we are concerned, we did not at all send any confidential report, and we do not know what confidential report was sent by our President. He may or he may not have sent any confidential report, but so far as we are concerned, we have sent only one report, and that report is the report which is before the public now. So, my friend Mr. Maswood Ahmad was wrong in having cast a slur on us.

Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim (Chittagong Division: Muhammadan Rural): I am grateful to you for allowing me to catch your eye, Mr. President, but I will not take more than two minutes. It is really surprising that Mr. Maswood Ahmad should come and inflict unnecessary remarks on some of the prominent and respectable members of my society who are Members of this House. Mr. Maswood Ahmad perhaps forgot himself in giving support to those gentlemen, the muallims who are parasites in our society that he had also a responsibility as a gentleman. The tyranny of the muallims is more or less a scandal at least in my part of Bengal. If this Bill does something to mitigate the hardship which is practised on poor Muslims, by the muallims, I think it will have done bare justice to some of the people of this country. Besides, the muallims are not all of foreign domicile—there are many local muallims, who carry on this trade as guides—I do not know if it will be possible to have the opinion of the Governments of Hejaz, and other Islamic countries within such a short time by any executive orders, but I feel that as we are mostly concerned on this side with the safety and tranquillity of the Indian pilgrims alone, this measure may be given a trial, and put on the Statute-book as quickly as possible.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: On a point of personal explanation, Sir. Some of the papers which were supplied to us as members of the Haj Committee were marked confidential. Apart from this I just now enquired and came to know that there are confidential recommendations. I did not say that there was another confidential report, rather I said there are confidential recommendations which cannot be denied. I repudiate the statement if any one claims that there is no confidential recommendation at all.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Of course, my Honourable friend has modified what he has said . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has already spoken.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: On a personal explanation, Sir.

Mr. President: Let it be a personal explanation only.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: When I said I repudiate his statement, of course, I said that the statement he had made was not a correct one, but so far as Kamraon quarantine and some other international matters are concerned there was a confidential recommendations as advised by the Government.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): I just wish to say one word. Though I have not performed a pilgrimage myself so far, I know as a matter of fact that a Bill of this character is extremely necessary and will be found to be very useful, especially to the Muslim population of Bengal. I have met some of these muallims who come now and then to India to canvass for clients, and we all know that the pilgrims, at any rate many of them, suffer very great hardships at their hands. So far as any of these hardships and difficulties may be mitigated, I think we ought to give every support to the principle and scope of this Bill.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, from the Western Punjab no man has been taken on the Select Committee. Sayyid Rajan Baksh Shah was a member of the Haj Committee and in the interests of the Mussalmans I propose that he should be taken on the Select Committee. He is a leader of the Mussalmans and a Pir of that part of the country. Unfortunately my province has not been represented and I do not like to mention my own name. If the Honourable Member in charge agrees, I shall offer myself. If not, I propose the name of Sayyid Rajan Baksh Shah.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I propose that Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan be also added to the Select Committee.

Mr. President: The first suggestion is Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Baksh Shah's name be added to the Select Committee. Has the Honourable Member in charge any objection?

Sir Frank Noyce: I have no objection.

Mr. President: The second suggestion is that the name of Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan be added.

Sir Frank Noyce: I have equally no objection.

I am very glad to have had the powerful support of the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party to the principle of this Bill. There has been no criticism which I have to meet, but I should like to be certain that I have understood exactly what my friend Mr. Maswood Ahmad said. If his desire is that the opinions of Local Governments which were, of course, duly obtained should be placed before the Select Committee, I need hardly say that there is no objection whatsoever to that course. I should be glad to know that I have understood him correctly. (Mr. Maswood Ahmad nodded assent.) That being so, I gladly accept his suggestion. I have nothing more to say except that as this is the last occasion on which I shall appear in my present capacity in this House, I am very glad that it has been in connection with such wholly beneficent legislation as the three Bills, the motions in regard to which I have moved to-day.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to regulate the activities of persons in British India who offer to assist Muslim pilgrims to the Hejaz be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin, Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulvi Sayyid Murtaza Sahib Bahadur, Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Mr. A. H. Ghaznavi, Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad, Lieut. Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan, Haji Chaudhuri Muhammad Ismail Khan, Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinoy, Bhai Parma Nand, Khan Bahadur Syed Rajan Baksh Shah, Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan and the Mover and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION TO AMEND THE PREVIOUS RESOLUTION ON ROADS.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore (Member for Industries and Labour): Sir, I move:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Resolution on roads adopted by this Assembly on the 4th February 1930, be amended by the deletion from clause 5 of the words:

'As an exception to this rule, the amount available for Burma may, for the present, be spent on any scheme of road development that is approved by the local Government with the concurrence of the local Legislature;'

and the substitution of the words:

'As an exception to this rule the amount available for Burma shall be apportioned separately in the ratio specified in clause 3 (b) (i) between the Shan States and the remainder of Burma. The amount available may, for the present, be spent on any scheme of road development that is approved, in the case of the Shan States by the Governor after consultation with the Federal Council, and in the case of the remainder of Burma by the local Government with the concurrence of the local Legislature'."

I will not detain the House long over this Resolution, which if it is somewhat formidable in appearance, is really in essence extremely simple. The House will note that under the Resolution of the 4th February 1930 in the form in which it was passed by this House, the share of Burma in the road development account accruing from the surcharge on the petrol actually consumed in Burma is to be spent on schemes of road development in Burma with the concurrence of the local Legislature and the approval of the Local Government. This Resolution, unfortunately, overlooked two facts. It overlooked first the fact that the Federated Shan States are a separate sub-entity from the rest of Burma, and secondly it overlooked the fact that under the existing constitution, that is, the Government of India Act and the notifications under the Government of India Act, the local Legislature of Burma is definitely precluded from discussing any expenditure in the Shan States. We have therefore to rectify this defect in the original Resolution, and what we therefore propose to do is this. We propose to calculate separately the share of the Federated Shan States in the Road Development Fund on the same principle that is adopted in all cases, namely the actual consumption of petrol, and we propose that this share shall be applied to schemes of road development in the Shan States by the Governor with the concurrence of the existing Federal Council of the Shan States. Honourable Members will thus see that all that I am doing in bringing forward this Resolution is to adapt it to the actually existing constitutional position. Without that, I am afraid that no money from the Fund can be spent on road development in the Shan States. Sir, I move.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I rise to support the motion moved by my Honourable friend, Sir Joseph Bhore. Sir, under the present constitution the method suggested in the new amendment entirely meets the position as the situation demands it, and I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi (Burma: Non-European): Mr. President, may I inquire from my Honourable friend, Sir Joseph Bhore, whether this amendment has been moved at the instance of the Government of Burma?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Sir, I do not quite see how that affects the merits of the amendment. If my Honourable friend has any reason to urge against the merits of it, I shall be very happy to answer any objections that he may put forward.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: The reason why I put this question to the Honourable Member is that it is the cherished aim and ambition of His Excellency Sir Charles Innes, the Governor of Burma, to dismember Burma perpetually into three parts—so-called Burma proper, which remotely corresponds to British India; the Shan States, which are supposed to be governed by the Shan Chiefs, and which correspond to the Indian States, and then comes the third and most amazing part of Burma, the “excluded areas”; up till now, these have been described as “backward tracts”; now they have been promoted to “excluded areas”: and the “excluded areas”, Sir, consist of nearly one-half of Burma! It would be of considerable interest to the House to know that these “excluded areas” contain practically the whole of the mineral wealth of Burma. The “excluded areas”, which so far have been referred to as “backward tracts”, are not within the control—even the partial control—of the Burma Legislative Council; and the constitution outlined by the Prime Minister at the close of the Burma Round Table Conference has threatened to perpetuate the dismemberment of Burma into three parts—the Shan States, which very remotely correspond to the Indian States, the so-called Burma proper which is about one-third of the whole of Burma, and the “excluded areas”, which amount to nearly one-half of Burma. That is the reason, Sir, why I asked my Honourable friend Sir Joseph Bhore whether this amendment has been dictated by the Government of Burma, because I have noticed recently that although other Provincial Governments may address requests to the Government of India, the Government of Burma dictates to the Government of India regardless of the real welfare of the people of Burma. I take it, Sir, from my Honourable friend’s hesitation in answering the question, that this amendment has been moved at the instance of the Government of Burma; and I strongly object to this House lending its support to the principle of dismembering Burma in this manner. (Hear, hear.)

Sir, I am afraid my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, when he lent his support to this motion, did not have this aspect of the position clearly before him. This is a matter, Sir, on which Burmans feel acutely. This is a matter on which the Burma Legislative Council also feels strongly, and I see no sufficient reason for going back on the original motion. The original motion permits the Government of Burma to spend the road development money after consulting the Burma Legislative Council; and whether the Burma Legislative Council is or is not allowed to have a say in the administration of the “excluded areas”, there is no reason to suppose that it will be found unreasonable in meeting the Local Government’s demand with regard to a fair apportionment of this money intended for road development in Burma. Although it is extremely difficult to carry any motion against Government in this House, as it is at present constituted, I must voice in this House Burmese national sentiment which strongly resents any effect to dismember Burma and to keep outside the control of the Legislature in Burma nearly two-third of Burma which contains practically the whole of the mineral wealth of Burma. (Applause.)

Mr. S. O. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I did not move my motion for postponement of the consideration of this Resolution because I thought that it did not refer to any constitutional question at all, and as I heard the Honourable the Mover of the Resolution I thought it was confined merely to the road adjustment fund without any reference to the constitutional questions at stake; but if this Resolution in any way anticipates the future of Burma and its federation, then I shall appeal to you, Sir, that this would be a very contentious and very important question which should not be taken up now. I should like to hear from the Honourable Member who moved it whether that is his intention.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bore: Sir, I shall be very glad to satisfy the doubt which has arisen in the mind of my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra. I can give him an assurance that there is absolutely no intention of prejudicing in any way and to the slightest degree the constitutional position of the future (Hear, hear). All that this motion does is that it takes account of the existing constitutional position, which makes it impossible under the existing Act and under the existing notifications for this expenditure to be incurred on the Shan States, if the Resolution is not amended. The only result of rejecting this Resolution will be that the Shan States will have to go without the money to which they have a moral right. I hope, Sir, that will put the case in its true light for my Honourable friend's information. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, after my Honourable friend, Mr. Munshi's speech, one would have thought that a red herring had been drawn across the trail, but after the assurance given by the Honourable Member in charge, I think every apprehension that has been unnecessarily raised has been laid at rest, and I think there should be no difficulty in agreeing to the passing of this motion.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Resolution on roads adopted by this Assembly on the 4th February, 1930, be amended by the deletion from clause 5 of the words:

'As an exception to this rule, the amount available for Burma may, for the present be spent on any scheme of road development that is approved by the Local Government with the concurrence of the local Legislature;'

and the substitution of the words:

'As an exception to this rule the amount available for Burma shall be apportioned separately in the ratio specified in clause 3 (b) (i) between the Shan States and the remainder of Burma. The amount available may, for the present, be spent on any scheme of road development that is approved, in the case of the Shan States by the Governor after consultation with the Federal Council, and in the case of the remainder of Burma by the Local Government with the concurrence of the local Legislature.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I understand that the Honourable Member, Sir Abdur Rahim, wishes to make a statement on the South African question. Sir Abdur Rahim.

STATEMENT RE SOUTH AFRICA.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): With your permission, Sir, I wish to make a brief statement of the position on this side of the House with reference to the statement that was made this morning as regards the South African situation. The Honourable Member who made that statement gave his reasons why the Government was not able to say anything until to-day with reference to what happened between the Delegation of this Government and the South African Government. Sir, we accept that as a good reason, but all that I wish to say is this, that this is a question in which this House is very deeply interested, as is well-known to the Government. If we have not raised any discussion upon the statement that has been made, it is simply because we had not the opportunity of studying what actually happened, what has been actually achieved, and we thought it desirable in view of the further fact that this is the last day of this session, or practically the last day, that we should have an assurance from the Government that not only full opportunity will be given to us at the next session in Simla to discuss the South African position but also that the Government will watch the course of events and see that nothing is done in the meantime which will prejudice the Indian case. That is the assurance which this side of the House would like to have from the Government.

The Honourable Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain (Member for Education, Health and Lands): Sir, the Honourable Member has asked for two assurances to be given: one is that a Government day will be given for the discussion of this statement in the Simla session. I have no difficulty whatsoever in assuring the House that if Honourable Members desire in Simla, after having studied the whole matter, that they wish to have a discussion, a Government day shall be provided for the discussion. The second point on which the Honourable Member has desired an assurance is, so far as I have been able to follow him, that nothing shall be done between now and the discussion which will in any way alter matters in South Africa. Have I understood the Honourable Member aright?

Sir Abdur Rahim: I said nothing would be done to prejudice the Indian case and that Government will watch the situation.

The Honourable Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain: As for watching the situation I can assure him that we will do it very very thoroughly. The position is this, that to-day Dr. Malan has made this very statement in the Houses of Parliament in Cape Town. As mentioned in our statement, the Transvaal Bill has been reintroduced in a modified form and that has to pass through their Parliament. That is their law. I have not the slightest doubt that the Honourable Members feel that the Parliament there has to get through their legislation just as we here have to get through our legislation. As our Agent informs us from time to time whether any amendment is coming on which might prejudice our case, we at once give him instructions to do what he can in making representations to the Member-in-charge. Of course, we have no Indian representative in the Union Parliament and therefore we can do nothing in that way. But I assure him that our Agent there and we ourselves here will keep a very watchful eye on how this legislation progresses and if it is necessary to take any action, we shall have to take that action forthwith. I have no doubt from the assurances received when we were in South Africa, that the amendments that Dr. Malan has told us he has incorporated in the Bill will be passed. Yet, it is impossible for any one to say that the Parliament has no right to refuse to pass them just as it would be impossible for me to commit the whole House. All that I can say is that I have assurances from all parts of the House that they will be passed. I think that is about all that any Government can say, and I trust that Honourable Members will find it suitable.

[Sir Fazl-i-Husain.]

REPORT ON FINANCIAL QUESTIONS ARISING OUT OF THE PROPOSED SEPARATION OF BURMA FROM INDIA.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Report by the Standing Finance Committee on financial questions arising out of the proposed separation of Burma from India be taken into consideration".

Before I say anything in explanation of this motion, I must make some reference to an amendment which is down on the paper to the effect that consideration should be postponed till the Simla session. I wish to make it clear at the outset that we, on this side of the House, are most anxious to meet the wishes of the Honourable Members in this case, and if it is the desire of the House that this discussion should not proceed, or at least that the debate should not be concluded now, but should be adjourned till the Simla session, then, so far as Government are concerned, they will certainly not endeavour to make such a course impossible. But before the House expresses an opinion on this issue, I am bound to explain to them exactly what the position is and why it is that we felt it to be essential to give the House an opportunity to discuss this motion this session. If therefore I speak now at any length on the general subject, I want to make it clear that it is not because I am prejudging the case as to whether the motion is to be postponed or not, but merely because we, on the Government side, feel that the House cannot really be asked to express a view on that issue before we have explained to them exactly what is involved. We regret as much as any Honourable Members opposite can possibly regret that it has not been possible to bring this motion forward earlier in this session. But I would remind Honourable Members that throughout the session we, on this side of the House, have done our best to adapt the proceedings to suit their conveniences so far as it lay with us to have any influence on the matter, and that it really has not been possible to bring this motion forward at any earlier date, after the date on which the Standing Finance Committee completed their Report. On the other hand I might also remind the House that we did give notice of our intention to bring this matter forward some considerable period ago, and therefore it cannot be said that we have sprung it as a surprise at the last moment. Now I wish at this late hour to be as brief as possible; but I feel that in introducing this motion I really must, as shortly as possible, put the issues before the House. In the first place I would remind the House that any consideration of the financial issues at this stage is purely hypothetical. We can merely consider what would be the financial issues or consequences if separation is to take place. No one is asked to commit himself in any way on the issue of separation; and that point has been very clearly brought out by the Standing Finance Committee themselves in their Report. Paragraph 2 of that Report reads as follows:

"In the first place the Committee recorded that its consent to take the memorandum into consideration implied no expression of any views on the merits of the question of separation as such. It merely discussed the financial consequences which would ensue if Burma were separated from India."

Turning to a second point, I would like to remind the House of what has been the procedure by which we have reached the present position and what that procedure involves for the future. In the first place there were certain recommendations made from India to the Round Table Conference. The Government of Burma themselves suggested a definite procedure for the examination of these financial questions. In paragraph 10 of their letter to the Government of India dated the 13th August, 1930, they said:

"It is believed that by correspondence and negotiation between the two governments it will be possible to reach, not indeed agreement on all points at issue, but an agreed statement of the case, and it is proposed that this agreed statement of the case, or if even this measure of agreement cannot be reached, the views of the two governments, should be laid before a board of neutral or impartial arbitrators."

The Government of India themselves took very much the same view of the situation. The Government of India in paragraph 93 of their constitutional despatch of the 30th September, 1930, wrote as follows:

"It is clear that the separation of the finances of the country will raise extremely difficult issues requiring close expert analysis, in the decision of which it will be essential to hold an even balance between what may be conflicting claims. We agree with the local government that the best method of approaching this difficult problem is to endeavour by mutual cooperation between the Government of India and the Government of Burma to draw up an agreed statement of the case for reference to an impartial tribunal. The subjects requiring settlement will be of a technical nature and would include, besides the normal questions of the adjustment of revenue and expenditure, such matters as the allocation of debt charges and the adjustment of currency arrangements. No constitutional commission can deal satisfactorily with those questions, for its functions would be entirely different, as also its probable methods of inquiry."

So that, both we and the Government of Burma agreed that the best method of dealing with this matter was that the two Governments should endeavour to settle an agreed statement of the case, and that that case should be submitted to an arbitral tribunal. We on our side felt very strongly that the issues involved were so important and that we ourselves were in a somewhat difficult position in arriving at a settlement on points about which it would be impossible for us in all their details to consult the Legislature or to obtain support from public opinion in India; and we therefore felt that it was much to be preferred that the whole matter should as far as possible be decided by an independent arbitral tribunal.

That remains the outstanding feature in the whole situation to-day. From those two despatches which were written before the Round Table Conference assembled, I would turn to the actual recommendations of the Burma Sub-committee of the Round Table Conference. That Sub-Committee practically accepted the recommendations of the Government of India. They said:

"The questions are very difficult and technical and the sub-committee consider that they should be dealt with in the manner recommended by the Government of India in paragraph 93 of their despatch. The sub-committee also recommend that when the case has been thoroughly explored by the experts of the two governments the statements prepared by those experts should be laid before the Standing Finance Committees of the Indian Legislative Assembly and the Burma Legislative Council respectively, and that representatives of these committees should be associated with the experts in the proceedings of the arbitral board."

This is a point to which I would call the special attention of the House,—that the Burma Sub-Committee recommended not only that the experts' statement of the case should be considered by the Standing Finance Committee, but that the two Standing Finance Committees should be actually associated with the proceedings before the arbitral tribunal.

[Sir George Schuster.]

Then lastly in order to make clear exactly what the present position is, I would remind the House of what the Prime Minister said in his speech winding up the Burma Round Table Conference. He said:

"It is on these general lines that His Majesty's Government will be prepared to frame for the approval of Parliament a constitution for Burma separated from India. But the first stage is to ascertain whether the people of Burma endorse the provisional decision that separation should take place. To enable them to take a decision on this matter, they should be aware not only of the general nature of the constitution proposed but also of the financial consequences of separation. The experts' report on the financial problem has already been published. His Majesty's Government will take steps in co-operation with the Government of India and the Government of Burma to press on the consideration of the question to a decision. With this material before them, the people of Burma will be in a position to decide whether or not they are in favour of separation from India. His Majesty's Government consider that the decision might best be taken after a general election in which this particular issue has been placed before the electorate. The life of the present Legislative Council has been extended for a year so that the election must be held before the end of the year."

Now, it is in connection with that that I wish to put to the House the reasons for our considering it necessary to bring forward this motion this session. The House is aware that the Government of Burma will probably hold elections on the lines indicated in the Prime Minister's statement, in October of this year; and they will also appreciate the fact that it is important that when the people of Burma are asked to vote at that election which will be an election for creating a Council which will have to consider the issue of separation,—they will realise that it is most important that the people of Burma should know exactly what the practical consequences of separation will be; and among the most important parts of those practical consequences are the financial consequences. Therefore we feel that if the Government of Burma press us to proceed with the consideration of this financial issue and press also for the setting up of that arbitral tribunal during this Summer, so that its award might be known before the elections in October, we felt that we could not possibly resist: we should indeed be guilty of obstruction if we put ourselves in a position of making it impossible for them to proceed on those lines. Therefore we feel that we may be forced to deal with this financial issue in the course of the Summer months. That being the case, we could not possibly allow this session to close without putting the position before this House. I may inform the House that I took the opportunity of sounding the opinions of members of the Standing Finance Committee on this question, and they all agreed that the Government of India would really be treating the Legislative Assembly in a manner which might be open to serious criticism if they allowed this session to close without bringing this matter forward.

That is the actual position with which we have to deal. I would now remind the House of exactly what has happened on the lines of the procedure which was accepted by the Burma Round Table Conference. Two financial experts, one on behalf of the Government of India and one on behalf of the Government of Burma, were appointed to make a study of the technical issues involved; and the results of that study are embodied in the Report which has been before the House for some time, which we normally refer to now as the Howard-Nixon Report. I would remind the House in that connection that this Report does not purport to be anything more than a statement of the case. It is true that the two financial experts, in their desire to clear the ground as far as possible of controversial issues, went so far as to reach what they have described as an agreement between themselves on certain issues. But the actual position is that so far as the Government of India are concerned, they are not in the least bound by anything which Mr. Nixon has said or recommended in that Report. The issues on all the points are still entirely open. That Report, I think Honourable Members will agree, is a very clear and I might say, a very excellent Report, and it really does state the issues in a way which under each head brings home exactly what is involved. Following out the procedure recommended by the Round Table Conference, we submitted that Report for consideration by the Standing Finance Committee, and the Standing Finance Committee has submitted its own Report upon it. Those are the documents which are before the House in the matter, and I think that any one who has found time to read those documents will feel that at least the issues are clearly stated.

Now, Sir, the real question is, how far this House wishes to express views now on this question, and I think it might be of value to consider in what way such views could be expressed. Honourable Members can of course, if they so desire, criticise the whole plan of procedure, but I do not really see how any reasonable man could do that. If the basic idea is accepted,—and I believe it is accepted by the Indian public,—that if Burma wants separation, then India should not stand in the way, I find it impossible to imagine a fairer method of procedure than the submission of the financial issues to an absolutely impartial arbitral tribunal. Anyhow, that particular proposal has been before the country since the publication of the Government of India's despatch in 1930, and I personally have not seen any criticism of it. So I think we may fairly take it that, as far as the general procedure is concerned, there is not likely to be any criticism of that.

The second possibility is that Honourable Members might have views to express as to the nature of the arbitral tribunal. If they have, and if this debate should proceed, I can give the House an assurance that we should convey such views to H. M. Government, to whom we will submit a report of this debate.

Again, as a third possibility, views might be expressed as to the method in which Indian interests should be represented before the tribunal. As to this, we have a definite recommendation already before us made by the Round Table Conference, a recommendation to which I have already referred, that the Members of the Standing Finance Committee should actually be associated with the Government of India's representatives in arguing the case before the tribunal. This again is a suggestion which has been before the public for a long time, and again I have not seen any criticism of it. I think therefore that, I may take it, that this also is accepted as a suitable suggestion by Indian public opinion.

Then as a fourth and last possibility, Honourable Members may wish to express views as to the actual technical issues involved. Here they would have, as I have already said, to guide them the Howard-Nixon Report and the Report of their own Standing Finance Committee. I may remind them again, as I have already done, that the views expressed by Mr. Nixon in this Report in no way commit the Government of India, and I would further remind them that the Standing Finance Committee has in some important respects differed from Mr. Nixon's views, and I would say that the Government of India would certainly take account of the Standing Finance Committee's views in arguing the case before the tribunal. Equally the Government of India would take account of any views that might be expressed in the course of the debate on the floor of this House. It must, however, I think, be generally admitted that, to secure anything like an exhaustive examination of the actual financial issues, which are involved, in the course of a debate in this Assembly would be extremely difficult. The issues are extremely complicated and we should want a very great deal of time to discuss them, and I think every one would agree that an Assembly of this kind is really not a suitable place in which to attempt to thresh out issues of that kind. So, speaking for myself and the Government, we should attach more importance and think it of more practical value if we were to get an expression of opinion on the other three points to which I have referred. In the long run, if the matter is to be handled, as recommended, by an impartial tribunal, India must rely for getting a fair deal, first on the fairness of the tribunal, and secondly on the efficiency with which Indian representatives argue their case before the tribunal, and I doubt if it will be possible to evolve from a debate in this House anything like an intelligible brief on which those representatives could argue their case.

Now, Sir, although I have dwelt on the difficulties of dealing with the technical issues in a debate in this House, I think it would be right for me just to call the attention of the House to what are the main points involved in those issues. One may say that points on which discussion would have to concentrate may be divided under five heads. There is, first of all, the question of currency, then the question of pensions, then the question of military burdens, fourthly the question of debt, and lastly the consequences on the revenue position of the two countries—though these last are not so much matters for argument as calculations of what will be the result of the settlement on the other four heads.

Now, as regards currency, the question is indeed a very technical one. Honourable Members will find that the subject has been fully reviewed in the Howard-Nixon Report, and that the reporters have considered what should be the conditions which the Government should accept, whichever of the two possible alternatives are adopted,—the two possible alternatives being either firstly that Burma should continue to use Indian currency, or secondly that Burma should decide to create a separate currency system of her own. The Standing Finance Committee in paragraph 4 of their Report have made some observations on this question, and I think they may be said to have stiffened up the directions which would be given to the representatives of the Government of India in arguing the case. Undoubtedly Government will press the point of view embodied in paragraph 4 of the Standing Finance Committee's Report.

Then we come secondly to the question of pensions. That is the biggest point at issue between the representatives of the two Governments. Mr. Nixon on behalf of the Government of India took up an entirely different position to that which Sir Henry Howard on behalf of Burma found it necessary to take up, and there is a great deal of money involved in that particular point. Very briefly, I might put the issue in this way, that Mr. Nixon considered that the Government of Burma should bear a proportionate part of the Government of India's charges in respect of all pensions which had been already earned. Sir Henry Howard thought that Burma should only bear the actual burden of pensions earned in respect of actual service in Burma. The financial difference involved in that part of the issue is this, that according to Mr. Nixon's calculation which would make Burma bear about 10½ per cent. of the total charges, Burma would pay annuities for a period of 15 years, at a gradually decreasing rate, starting with a payment of 105 lakhs per annum, whereas according to Sir Henry Howard's plan, the initial payment would be only 35 lakhs per annum.

That concerns pensions which have already been earned. There is another possible controversial point as regards Burma's share of part-earned pensions. There if we adopt the principle advocated by Mr. Nixon in respect of pensions which have already been wholly earned, we should stand on the same ground and say that Burma ought to bear 10½ per cent. of the value of the part-earned pensions at the time of separation, and Mr. Nixon has calculated that the capitalised value of those pensions would be something in the neighbourhood of 4½ to 5½ crores of rupees,—that is to say, Burma share in the capitalised value would be that amount. Mr. Nixon has taken the line that Burma might have a reasonable counter-claim against that payment in respect of their share of what I may describe as "unproductive assets". I do not want to go into details on that matter. I am merely referring to it now because that is another point in regard to which the Standing Finance Committee has thought that the advocates of the Government of India's case might take up rather a stiffer line than Mr. Nixon himself had recommended. But I wish to impress upon the House that the allocation of the pensions burden is perhaps the biggest point at issue between the two countries.

Then, as regards military burdens, it is, of course, clear that Burma would have to undertake the actual cost of troops actually employed in Burma. But some members of the Standing Finance Committee have raised a wider issue. They contemplate that the Government's representatives might at least claim some general contribution from Burma on account of the general services of defence which India will render. That is an extremely difficult issue, and I should not like to say more now than that we will see that that point of view is put before the arbitral tribunal.

Then, we come to the question of debt. There Mr. Nixon has taken the line that in attempting to evaluate the debt by the historical method of approach, that is to say, by going back over the whole of the past history and trying to separate out those items of the public debt of India which could be said to have been incurred on behalf of Burma—Mr. Nixon has taken the view that the historical method of approach would be impossible; that in fact, it would be impossible to arrive at a practical result by this method. He has suggested another and much simpler line of dealing with the debt question. He said in the first place that so far as Burma takes over the actual productive assets she should take over the corresponding debt against those assets. That I imagine is a clear proposition to which every one would assent. He then goes on to suggest that as regards that portion of the public debt of India which is not covered by productive assets, Burma should take over a proportion representing Burma's share in the general revenues—both what are now central and provincial—representing Burma's share in the general total revenues of India. That would be a 10½ per cent. share in the so-called unproductive debt, and that would be the same percentage which Mr. Nixon has applied in the case of the pension liability with which

[Sir George Schuster.]

I have already dealt. On that basis the total amount of debt which Burma would take over was at the time when this Report was compiled about 62 crores, and it would be now on the latest figures about Rs. 66½ crores.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Do the pensions include military pensions also?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am now talking about debt Pensions would of course apply to military pensions also.

On that point there may be room for differences of opinion. Some of the members of the Standing Finance Committee have recorded a dissentient note in which they say that they are not satisfied that the historical method of approach is impossible, and they wish the Government of India to attempt to follow up that method. I imagine they consider that by following up the historical method of approach India would be able to establish a much higher claim than under the method which Mr. Nixon has suggested. I wish to leave the House in no doubt as to what is my own opinion on that matter, and that is, that it would be in practice impossible to establish a satisfactory claim based on the historical method of approach, and I consider that the Indian representatives would be well advised not to attempt to base their claim on arguments of that kind. But, Sir, we must preserve an open mind on this question, and if the representatives of the Standing Finance Committee are to be associated with the Government of India in arguing India's case, then clearly they will have a right to put forward their point of view. I imagine that if we proceed on those lines, there will be many opportunities for preliminary consultation before the arbitration actually starts, and in that case I believe that on further study of the matter, those who now hold the view that the historical method of approach would be possible will be convinced that what we have suggested is the best method. But for the present I confine myself to stating what our view is and I assure the House that the view which some of their representatives have put forward in the Report of the Standing Finance Committee will receive full consideration.

I have now dealt with the four heads of currency, pensions, military burdens and debt, and the fifth head remains,—the consequences of the revenue position. There, according to the figures of 1929-30 on the basis of which Sir Henry Howard and Mr. Nixon made their Report, they worked out that India would on balance be worse off by a sum ranging between 2½ crores and 3½ crores after the separation. The difference between those two figures is really the difference between the alternative methods of dealing with the pension question. That, as a matter of fact, presents the position from our point of view rather worse than it really would be, because if Burma were separated and Burma took over 66 to 70 crores of rupees of India's debt, the provision for reduction and avoidance of debt which we are now making would be reduced proportionately and we should save Rs. 80 lakhs or so under that. The amount of that reduction, whatever it may be, should be taken off the figure of the financial loss in India, namely of the figure between 2½ crores and 3½ crores to which I have already referred. I refrain from giving an exact figure because it would depend on what the amount of the debt was at the time of separation.

That, Sir, very briefly puts before the House what are the main issues involved in this question. Before I conclude, I would like to read to the House one passage from the report of the Burma Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference which stresses a point which it is important to bear in mind in dealing with this whole question. The Sub-Committee report as follows:

"The Sub-Committee also endorse the view expressed by the Government of India in paragraph 82 of their despatch regarding the great desirability of adjusting the relations between the two countries in a spirit of reason and mutual accommodation so as to avoid as far as possible the ill effects which might arise from so great a change in long established practice".

Now, the point that I want to make is, that in considering the separation of Burma from India, if it is to take place, we should be concerned not only with adjusting matters like our financial relations; we should be concerned with trade agreements and various other matters which will affect the future relations of the two countries, and if the House were to consider now what instructions they would wish to give to their own representatives in arguing the case before the arbitral tribunal, I should trust that they would instruct them somewhat on the lines of the passage which I have just read out. We feel on this side it is most important that this matter should be approached in a spirit of fairness and in a spirit of give and take. It is perfectly possible to argue the case on theoretical grounds and take a so-called firm line and refuse to give way on every single detail; but we are dealing with a very difficult relation, the separation of a large area which has hitherto been treated as a single and indivisible part of the greater whole from which it is being separated, and if we try to be too strict and technical in our methods, I am afraid we may do harm to the future relations between the two countries. Clearly we in the Government of India would instruct our representatives to make the very most of the case. We must be fair to the Indian taxpayers, but I think it is important to put this point because I think it will perhaps help the House to deal with this matter now, if the general feeling is that the matter should be dealt with in a spirit of fairness and give and take. For on that understanding it would become less necessary to give absolutely precise instructions on every point. Therefore, I would wind up by saying this to the House, that the House is not being asked now, if it considers this motion, to express any views on what is or is not a fair settlement. It would be asked to accept the principle that the matter shall be decided by an impartial tribunal and the most that it could do would be to give general instructions to the Government of India as to how they were to argue their case before that tribunal. If the House takes that view and if the House also remembers a feature in the procedure to which I have already several times called attention that according to the recommendations of the Round Table Conference, members of the Standing Finance Committee will be associated with the proceedings. I think, Sir, they may perhaps agree that to have had the matter brought forward in this way at the final stages of this session has not put them into a really embarrassing position, and that they can fairly accept that position after a very short debate.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I move that the consideration of this motion be postponed till the next Simla Session. I shall confine my speech to the narrow issue about postponement. It is admitted beyond all controversy that this is a very important matter and it is clear that it is also contentious, because the Standing Finance Committee was not unanimous. So far as I know, Mr. Aggarwal, Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda and my friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, who is unfortunately absent to-day, have all submitted dissentient notes. I am grateful to the Honourable the Finance Member that he has left it to the decision of the non-official Members whether the consideration should be postponed. The only point that he argued in favour of the consideration at present is that the Burma Local Council will be asked to come to a decision about separation in August, both on financial and political grounds. In this Report we have the views of two experts from the British India side and also from the Burma side. I think we will be prejudicing the issue rather than helping it if this House now goes into a detailed criticism of the particular items for financial settlement. I think the House will be well advised to wait and see what the Burma Legislature decides, and there is no urgency why the House should be asked to come to a decision at present. Sir, I move.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi (Burma: Non-European): Mr. President, I rise to support my Honourable friend Mr. S. C. Mitra's amendment that consideration of this motion be postponed to the Simla Session. My first concern is the interest of the province of Burma which I represent in this House; and at the outset I would like to express my gratitude and the gratitude of the province of Burma to my Honourable friend Sir George Schuster on the fair attitude that he has displayed in the course of the debate to-day. He has shown that, so far as he is concerned, he will adopt a fair and reasonable attitude towards my province; and my concern on this question of financial adjustment is the interest of my province and my province alone. Whether the Honourable the Finance Member's attitude pleases all the other sections of the House or not is a matter with which I am not concerned.

Sir, I am at present labouring under a severe handicap, as the official nominated Member from Burma, Mr. R. R. Brown, has gone to England. He naturally would have, if the necessity arose in this House, put the case of the Government of Burma. Then the European representative from Burma, Mr. John Tait, has also gone to England, and he is better qualified to speak on the technical financial aspects of this question than I am; and furthermore my two Burman colleagues are not here; U. K'vaw Myint has gone back to Burma and U Tun Aung has not been able to attend this session; and I shall find it extremely difficult to shoulder the sole responsibility of tackling this important and difficult question in this House if the debate assumes a technical aspect. So, I support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr. S. C. Mitra mainly on the ground that I have not the assistance and the benefit of the presence of my four colleagues from Burma.

Furthermore, the Burma Legislative Council has not so far had an opportunity of expressing its opinion one way or other on this important question. As a matter of fact, although the question has been before the public for some time, sufficient attention has not been devoted to it in Burma, and I have not been able to ascertain the points which my constituency would like to urge on this important question.

As regards the motion itself, I wish to mention briefly just one point; Mr. Nixon has been blamed by a certain Indian critic and the charge against him is that he has made Burma a gift of something like 50 crores of rupees. Mr. Nixon is quite capable of looking after himself; but as far as my province is concerned, I emphatically repudiate any suggestion that the Howard-Nixon Report gives more to Burma than should have been given. As a matter of fact, representing my province's standpoint, I really must regard Mr. Nixon as a Shylock who has been too hard on my province. (Laughter.) At this stage I do not propose to say anything more on the motion itself, and I do ask the House to help me by supporting my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra's amendment for postponement of the discussion on this motion to the Simla Session. (Applause.)

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support this motion; and my chief ground for supporting it is that the demands that we have put forward before Burma are rather too small. They have not calculated in this report the amount which we spent on Burma out of our revenue expenditure from year to year. Of course that is the way in which we can calculate it over a series of past years. We have been pressing this all this time, and until this is done I do not know whether we can actually calculate the amount which we have been spending out of our revenue during the last so many years. The second point which we have not thoroughly calculated concerns the military expenditure. We must have a fair share from Burma in connection with all the military expenditure that we have been incurring all these years, and this calculation has not yet been done. The third point is that it is also desirable that we should have some kind of fiscal relationship between Burma and India, and this is a very important point; that is, that if we have these customs barriers between these two countries just as they are having between the smaller countries of Central Europe, then it will be to the mutual disadvantage of both. This is a point which ought to have been considered. I take this opportunity, when we are saying good-bye to the Honourable the Leader of this House and when he is now going to represent us at the Ottawa Conference, of suggesting to him that one point which he may remember is that if we consider every country to be a single unit, then the problem of customs will become very complicated. Customs may be looked upon from two points of view,—either as a measure of protection of industry to a country, or as a revenue-yielding proposition. For protection levying customs duty is all right, but if you consider it as a revenue-yielding proposition, then you will have to consider the desirability of having a much larger unit. I would of course very much like to have the whole world as a single unit . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. The Honourable Member is going into the merits, and it is very nearly 5 o'clock. I should like to know whether the House desires to discuss not only the motion for the adjournment of the debate but to go into the merits of the whole question which has been put before the House by the Honourable the Finance Member. In that case the Chair will adjourn the House till to-morrow.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I shall finish in one minute, Sir . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): I do not want the Honourable Member to finish: if the House decides to go into the merits of the case, then the debate cannot obviously be finished to-day. But if the House generally agrees to postpone consideration till the Simla Session, then we can finish to-day. The Chair wishes to know—it is nearly 5 o'clock now—as to what the wishes of the House are.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): We want the discussion to be postponed to the Simla Session.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, everybody directly or indirectly wants to discuss the merits of the case, but there can be no real discussion now?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, if the House is really anxious for an immediate decision, I suggest that some Member might move the closure.

An Honourable Member: I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair cannot accept the closure because there has not been a fair debate. The Chair wishes to know what the general feeling in the House is.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Sir, if the Government are going to oppose this motion for postponement, then we should like to debate it. But if the Government accept the motion, then there is no difficulty.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I made it quite clear, Sir, that the Government certainly would not oppose a motion for postponement, but at the same time in making that clear I tried to make the House understand what might have to be done in the course of the Summer and what is involved in refusing to discuss the matter now. We put ourselves entirely in the hands of the House in the matter.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Whatever, Sir, has been said up to now has not made it very clear as to why exactly it should be postponed. Of course some Honourable Members have raised the plea that they have not studied the question properly. That may be good ground. I find of course that there are certain Members who have not yet studied this question thoroughly and are very anxious to postpone consideration; but unless we find that there is something more which can be said on the point, we can decide one way or the other.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable the Finance Member has made his position quite clear, which is that he welcomes a full discussion either to-day or tomorrow, if the House desires to discuss this matter. If, however, a postponement is decided upon, then I understood the Honourable the Finance Member to say that Government intend to proceed during the Summer months with the appointment of arbitrators. Is that the position?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The point is, Sir, that we may be forced to a particular course: it is not for us to decide, it is for His Majesty's Government to decide.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muham-madan Rural): I would suggest, Sir, that it is much better to proceed with the discussion, because the object of any such adjournment will also be served.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I think, Sir, that the motion ought to be discussed, especially as the Honourable the Finance Member says that the Government will go on with the appointment of arbitrators,—whether the whole question should not be postponed till the September Session?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): If that is the Government's position, the Chair will adjourn the House till Eleven of the Clock tomorrow. If the Government's position is that the status quo will be maintained and that nothing will be done in the meantime till the House discusses it at the next Simla session, then I take it that the House wishes to postpone it. If Government intend to proceed with measures of arbitration and otherwise, by which the country might be committed to certain things, then the non-official section of the House desires a discussion immediately. It is for Government to decide what course they wish to be adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I think I made it quite clear, Sir, that the power of settling this matter does not rest with us. If we could meet the wishes of the House, we should be very glad to maintain the status quo and let this matter rest over till September; but His Majesty's Government are anxious that the financial issue should be cleared up before the elections take place in Burma for the new Council which will have to decide the separation issue. I am not in a position to say whether arbitration will actually be set on foot before September, but I have thought it right to tell the House that it is quite possible that that might be the case and we should have no power to stop it. That is our position.

Mr. President: I take it that the House wishes to discuss the subject and the Chair will have to adjourn the meeting till 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 6th April, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 6th April, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.

EMPLOYMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1117. Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Are Government aware that Sir Hasan Suhrawardy submitted a memorandum to the Railway Court of Inquiry regarding the present position of Muslim employment in the East Indian Railway? Was the memorandum considered by the Court of Inquiry? If so, what was its decision?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: The reply to the first part is in the affirmative. The Government of India presume that the Court considered the memorandum to the extent to which its contents were relevant to the inquiry. The findings of the Court on the issues referred to it by Government will be found at paragraphs 388 to 412 of the Report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I read the Report of the Court of Inquiry, but I find there is no reference anywhere to the contents of this particular document.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: Nor have I been able to find any reference.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: So, practically the memorandum was not considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: The following message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State:

"I am directed to inform you that the Council of State has, at its meeting held on the 5th April, 1932, agreed without any amendments to the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly at its meeting held on the 30th March 1932."

DEATH OF SIR BOMANJI DALAL.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, it has fallen to my lot during the last two years on a number of occasions to refer to the death of present or former Members of this House. But I little thought that on the last occasion on which I shall sit in this House it would fall to me yet once again to perform the same melancholy duty. All Members must have heard with the greatest possible regret of the death of Sir Bomanji Dalal who for eight years was a most respected Member of this House and one who, I think I may say, was personally beloved by Members in all sections of the House. I had no personal acquaintance with Sir Bomanji Dalal until I became a Member of the Assembly, but from the time I first joined, I always found him a most friendly counsellor and a Member of the House who was widely influential and who could therefore in times of difficulty often give helpful advice. It is well known that in his own home he took an active interest in agriculture, and at his own expense he introduced valuable experiments and took an active part in promoting colonization and development in unbroken areas. Those of us who were Members of this House some three years ago, will recollect that he was the only Member who was so unfortunate on the occasion, when the bombs were thrown in this House, as to receive personal injury, and it is at any rate a satisfaction to know, and I believe it is so, that the injury he then received was in no way responsible for his death. I feel, Mr. President—I always feel—that to multiply words on these occasions serves no purpose, but I shall always miss Sir Bomanji Dalal with the feeling that I have lost a personal friend. I am sure, Mr. President, the House will wish that you should communicate to his relatives their deep sympathy and regret.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): I rise to associate my party and myself with the observations made by the Honourable the Leader of the House about the mournful and sorrowful passing away of Sir Bomanji Dalal. Sir, he was a gentleman from top to toe and everyone on this side of the House who came in contact with him learnt to love him and to admire him and to respect him. His quiet dignity and his frequent entertainment of friends at social functions revealed to us that we had in him a very good friend and not merely an excellent counsellor. We all deeply mourn his loss and sympathise with the bereaved family in their sorrow.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I never had the privilege of personal acquaintance with Sir Bomanji Dalal, but I have no hesitation in associating myself whole-heartedly with what has fallen from the Leader of the House.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I am very sorry to hear just now of the death of my old friend, Sir Bomanji Dalal. He was a great figure in this House for many many years. His genial spirit and his great entertainments which he used to give here were well known to all the Members of the Legislature. Only in the last Assembly we found that he was one of the victims who suffered from the bombs which were thrown in this House. Even after the injuries he received, he showed a great spirit of courage and he was cheerful throughout when we saw him in the hospital. His place had been taken by one of his cousins, Dr. Dalal, and though we always welcome Dr. Dalal, we certainly missed Sir Bomanji in the present House greatly. I do not find adequate words to express the sorrow which I felt when I just heard, as soon as I came up to my seat, that Sir Bomanji passed away. With these words, I associate myself and my party with what the previous speakers have said about him.

Mr. J. Ramsay Scott (United Provinces: European): The European Group wish to be associated with the condolences which will be sent to the relatives of Sir Bomanji Dalal. I personally have not had the pleasure of knowing Sir Bomanji, but some of my group have had, and I feel certain that they will miss him much, now that he is gone.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, as an old and personal friend of the late Sir Bomanji Dalal, I rise to associate myself with all the sentiments that have been expressed in this House. I had the privilege of knowing him in the early days of this Assembly till the day he left it. I can recall to memory that day when bombs were thrown in this House, the wonderful courage and spirit displayed by him in utter disregard of his own injuries and his concern for others who were wounded. This House possessed in the late Sir Bomanji a not frequent speaker, but as the Honourable the Leader of the House said, a true counsellor and a genial friend whom every one respected. I echo the sentiments that have been expressed by my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer when he described the late Sir Bomanji Dalal as a gentleman from top to toe and it is with great pain and grief that I mourn the loss of my dear friend, Sir Bomanji Dalal.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair wishes to associate itself with all that has fallen from Honourable Members, and wishes to join in the sentiments which have been expressed on the lamentable loss which has been sustained. The Chair will communicate to the relatives of the deceased the unanimous feeling of sorrow and sympathy to which the House has given expression.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

UNDISTRIBUTED CREDIT BALANCE OF A DRIVER IN A MULE CORPS.

Mr. J. R. Blair (Government of India: Nominated Official): Sir, I lay on the table, a statement giving the information promised in reply to starred question No. 1083 asked by Mr. S. C. Mitra on the 30th March, 1932, regarding undistributed credit balance due to Driver 431 of the 37th Mule Corps.

I presume that the Honourable Member is referring to undistributed credit balances due for services rendered during the Great War and Waziristan Operations 1919-24. If my presumption is correct, the answer to his question is as follows:

(a) Yes, but obviously identity has to be established.

(b) Yes.

(c) None can be traced.

(d), (e) and (f). In 1928 inquiries were made through the Deputy Commissioner, Rawalpindi, who reported that the relatives of a driver of the same name stated that the man had died on service. It was established that this was not the man to whom money was due, and no further inquiries were made until January, 1932, when a claim was received through a third party empowered to receive payment. Before making any payment, the Officer-in-Charge, Records, satisfied himself as to the genuineness of the claim.

(g) Balances must be retained until claims are established. Entitled persons who bring their claims to the notice of civil officials, commanding and recruiting officers and District Soldiers' Boards should not ordinarily require to employ paid agents. Payment has been made to agents only in cases where the civil authorities have been unable to trace the person entitled to the credit balance.

(h) Since the publication of Army Instruction (India) No. A-16 of 1927, a total sum of Rs. 6,22,145-0-10 has been paid out. Of this, only Rs. 1,991-7-3, have been paid through a third party.

REPORT ON FINANCIAL QUESTIONS ARISING OUT OF THE PROPOSED SEPARATION OF BURMA FROM INDIA—contd.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the motion* and amendment.†

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I was supporting this motion for postponement, and as I said yesterday, I do not like to enter into any details of the various proposals, but shall confine myself to mere general observations; and in case the motion is not accepted, then I hope that I will be able to enter into various details. . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member should address the House on both the motion and the amendment. There cannot be two discussions.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Then I will take my chance. The next thing that I should like to make quite clear is that, by my participating in this discussion, I should not be assumed or misunderstood as being in favour of separation. In fact I am neither in favour of separation nor against it. But I believe that this is a question for the Burmans to decide, and not for the people of India or for the Legislative Assembly; but I do maintain that if artificial propaganda is carried on, then we Members of the Assembly ought to resent it. The first thing that I should like to consider is the question of the customs between Burma and India. In this connection. . . .

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member cannot go into the question of the separation of Burma on this motion. The only issue before the House is the financial adjustments between Burma and India if separation materialises by the vote of the Burma Legislative Council. That is the issue before the House, and the amendment is that the House should postpone consideration till the next session in Simla. The question of separation of Burma is not relevant to the present discussion.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: In case Burma is separated from India, I should like to mention one or two indispensable conditions which must be laid down before we can agree to the separation, and that is the only point which is the subject matter of the Nixon-Howard scheme, under what conditions financially we should agree to it.

*"That the Report of the Standing Finance Committee on financial questions arising out of the proposed separation of Burma from India be taken into consideration."

†"That the consideration of this motion be postponed till the next Simla Session."

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The question is what should be the financial adjustments between India and Burma if Burma decides to separate.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am just taking up those financial adjustments. The first question that I should like to take up is the question of currency. That is really an important thing. I maintain and am very strongly in favour of the arrangement that the Government of India should continue to be the currency authority both for India and for Burma, until such time as our dues are paid up and until some better arrangements may be found; and in case the Reserve Bank is established, then the Reserve Bank should be the currency authority and it should have a special branch at Rangoon for carrying on the business. Until such time, the Imperial Bank may carry on the work on behalf of the Government of India. But I consider it is rather important that the currency policy should be one for both countries. That, I think, is one of the financial adjustments which we should have before we can agree to any separation.

The second thing which is referred to in this question is about the allocation of debts. I believe that the calculations have omitted certain very important items, and they ought to be included; and the amount of charge now shown is much less than really we ought to claim. They have only allocated the present debts of the Government of India; but I think they should have included not only the expenditure we have incurred out of our revenue accounts, but the money actually spent in Burma during the first and second Burmese wars and also the overhead charges, by which I mean the maintenance of the Government of India and the charges for the maintenance of the Secretary of State and his office. All these things have to be calculated and they ought to be debited to the account of Burma; and for this purpose as my friend, Mr. Raju, suggested in the Finance Committee a historical approach is unavoidable; though it may be difficult, still we have to calculate some figures which may be accepted by us; and it is therefore desirable to have a historical approach and calculate the expenditure we have incurred on Burma as well as the overhead charges since Burma came into India. This figure will be much bigger and it is one of the reasons for which I am going to support the notion of my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra, because this calculation is exceedingly desirable and perhaps it may be ready by the time we meet at Simla.

Another question is the question of pensions. This also is not a very simple matter and I think the recommendations involved in the Nixon Report do not go far enough; still we can have some kind of adjustment of this particular question. We started with the suggestion that all these persons who are now serving in India irrespective of the fact whether they have their service in Burma years before, we may take them and be responsible for all the pensions that may accrue in future. Similarly Burma may be responsible for the pensions of persons who are now serving in Burma irrespective of the fact whether they served partly in Burma and partly in India. But the calculation of pensions of persons who have served partly in Burma and partly in India depending on the length of service may be difficult. Therefore this is a thing which requires more careful consideration, and this is another reason why I support the motion for postponement.

My next argument is on the question of defence. This point was also raised by the Finance Member. I notice that practically all our income from Customs is equivalent to our expenditure on the Army approximately; and I also notice that if you take the figures of customs receipts in Burma alone, they come to about one-fifteenth of the total income derived from Customs in all the ports of India. Therefore we can make adjustment in either of two ways: either India may take the responsibility of the entire Army and may give such Army as may be necessary for the internal administration in Burma; but in that case India should have complete control of Customs duties in Burma and all the customs collected in Burma should come to India. The second method of adjustment, which is also to be calculated and which we cannot hurry over is this: that the Customs may be realised by the Government of Burma and they should, by some mutual agreement, pay us a certain amount of money for the maintenance of Burma. It is really to the mutual advantage of both Burma and India if we pool together in matters of defence. If an Army is maintained for the defence of Burma from India, or if an Army is maintained in India for the defence of India expecting a possible attack from Burma on India, then expenditure for both countries will be very high. Therefore, it would be to our advantage to pool together in matters of defence, and the two methods which I have suggested may be considered carefully by the time we meet in Simla. If we pool together in matters of defence, then both India and Burma would be mutually responsible for the defence of either country.

Then the last point is the question of customs. If these two countries are separated, then there ought to be no customs between India and Burma. This will also be to the mutual advantage of both countries. We may pool together in customs and in defence, and both countries will be benefited by this arrangement. Here I may say that there are two kinds of Customs duties, one is for the sake of protection like the duty on wheat. The income for this duty is practically nil. The same is the case with regard to the duty on sugar. But there are also other duties called the revenue-yielding duties, and in this case it is very desirable that we should, if possible, take the whole world as one unit and adopt free trade, and if that is not possible, the next unit which we will have to consider is the unit of the British Empire. That might be taken to be the unit, and I hope in the Ottawa Conference the Honourable the Leader of the House will consider the question and put forward a claim. We know that 55 per cent. of our articles are imported from the British Empire and 45 per cent. come from outside the British Empire, and if the whole of the British Empire forms one unit as regards Customs duties, it will be to the mutual advantage of the countries forming part of the British Empire. At this stage we should very much like that Burma and India should form one unit and there ought not to be any customs barrier. Therefore, this is a point which has to be very carefully considered when discussing the Nixon-Howard Report, and the broader question of the British Empire forming one unit can be discussed at the Ottawa Conference.

Before closing my observations, Sir, I should like to say a few words as this is perhaps the last occasion when we can meet the Honourable the Leader of the House. I want to pay my tribute to the services which he has rendered to this House and also to individual Members, and when he leaves the shores of this country, I hope he will remember us and will continue to render his help and advice to this country, and that he will always think of us while enjoying his well earned rest at Home.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Sir, the matter of this motion is of very great importance. It is very complex and controversial in character, so controversial that the decision will have to be taken not by an agreed conclusion between the two countries but by a third party. The matter is also one for financial experts to decide. The Standing Finance Committee have considered the matter, and some of us have appended a separate note to it to stress some of the more important points which should be considered by Government. In fairness to ourselves and to all, I must say that the matter can be properly handled only by financial experts, and the Report of the Standing Finance Committee in so far as it represents the views of the non-official Members and our separate note, do not represent Indian expert opinion. The Honourable the Finance Member has said that this matter does not lie entirely in the hands of the Government of India, but in those of the British Government. That being so, the case for India and Burma will have to be placed before a tribunal which will have to be appointed either by the British Government or by agreement of the two parties. The Government of India have not stated what their views are and what case they are going to put before the tribunal. The case for India which should be put before the tribunal would be the case for the people of India, because it is the people of India who would eventually have to bear the burden of the decision which the tribunal will arrive at. It appears to me, therefore, that in order to settle this matter properly, Government should appoint a committee of Indian experts consisting of two or three people like Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, who would consider the matter, investigate the entire question and come to a decision, and that decision should be submitted in the form of a brief which should be handed over to the counsel who will argue the Government of India's case before the tribunal. I am sure Government will accept the decision and the conclusions which the Indian experts will arrive at because the interests of the Government of India and of the people of India in this matter are identical. I am of opinion that the Government should entrust this matter to two or three Indian financial experts and take their opinion and place that opinion before this House. If however there is not enough time for it and the tribunal is appointed in the meantime, and that tribunal proceeds to consider the matter, then the opinion of the experts and the final instructions of the Government of India should be placed in the hands of the counsel who will argue India's case before the tribunal and he should be asked to do so on the strength of the facts which are placed in his hands.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, we are discussing a hypothetical question. It is seldom that this House discusses hypothetical questions but the Honourable the Finance Member made it clear that his hands are tied in this matter as were the hands tied of the Indian members of the Conference at the Round Table Conference in London. So we have to express our opinion on a hypothetical question—in case such and such a thing would happen, how the financial relations between Burma and India should be adjusted. When I express my views about the adjustment of financial relations, whatever views I have expressed before on the other aspects of the question relating to the separation of Burma, I stand by the same.

Sir, before I go into the merits of the question, let me say I was surprised to find my friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad bringing out extraneous matters like the Ottawa Conference, the Imperial Conference and Free Trade, which do not arise when we are considering the problem about the financial adjustment of the future Burma and future India. If they will be separated, Burma will be a sovereign country and India too will be a sovereign country and their trade and commercial relations would be adjusted according to their commercial exigencies, by their sovereign Legislatures. Nobody wants that India should separate from Burma, nor Burma should separate from India; nor does India want to separate from the Empire. But if Burma is separated from India by Britain, I will wish Burma good luck. When my friend the Honourable the Finance Member spoke yesterday, he was labouring under certain difficulties as most of us are labouring under similar difficulties. The Honourable the Finance Member pointed out three courses open to the House; one was to discuss the matter fully to-day, the second was to adjourn the question, and the third was to express our views about the difficulties that Members feel, and then the question can be adjourned till the next session. Sir, I adhere to the third course suggested by my Honourable friend, the Finance Member. I am equally labouring under difficulties and I shall point out certain difficulties which will have to be solved if the grand Moghul in London appoints an arbitral tribunal to settle the financial relations between India and Burma. Whether the grand Moghul will be allowed by the members of the Round Table Conference to do that, I am not concerned at present.

Sir, my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi was rather hard on my friend Mr. Nixon. He mentioned that Mr. Nixon had been a Shylock, and that he had been very hard on Burma. The difficulty that I find is that there are seven or eight opinions about the adjustment of the financial relations between Burma and India current in the public press. There is the extreme view of Sir Henry Howard, who does not want to concede anything to India, who rather adopts the line of the Congress and wants to repudiate all financial responsibilities to India and even debts to India. Then there is the middle course which my Honourable friend Mr. Nixon has adopted. He has tried to apply his mind as best as he could and he does not want to go into the historical analysis of the situation. He has suggested a mid-way and he has assessed the debt position at Rs. 66 crores. Then the Standing Finance Committee considered it and they came to two different views. One view was urged by my Honourable friend Mr. Raju, and three other members afterwards signed a minute of dissent on those lines, and the other view was expressed by the main Committee. The four gentlemen stick to the idea that the historical analysis should be followed up. Then, there are two other views that are public property not only in India but in England. It is the Report on the financial obligations between Great Britain and India which was made by three financial experts of the Congress Select Committee appointed by the Indian National Congress. My Honourable friend the Finance Member the other day quoted in his Budget speech from Mr. K. T. Shah's "Federal Finance of India", and Mr. Shah, in his minute of dissent which is to be found in volume 2 of the Report of the Congress Select Committee, has put the figure at Rs. 100 crores as public debt against Burma, while the majority of the Congress Committee has assessed it at Rs. 80 crores. I do not know if my friend Mr. Nixon has had access to these Reports. I am glad to know that he has seen them, and I hope that he will agree with Mr. Shah's findings. These are difficulties which can be solved by an arbitral tribunal. But who will appoint the tribunal? Not the Secretary of State, not Great Britain. The fact is that the Congress Committee has found that part of the debt should be a charge on England. Then how can Great Britain appoint an arbitral tribunal, which will go and decide against Great Britain herself? So, I would suggest if there is to be an arbitral tribunal, it should be appointed by the League of Nations, and there should be a representative of Great Britain, a representative of India and a representative of Burma on it. In that case the different aspects of the question can be examined and all fears, suspicions and apprehensions can be met, and the findings of the Chairman of that tribunal would be acceptable to us.

When I read this Howard-Nixon memorandum, I was faced with certain difficulties. I find at page 4 :

"The proportions of gold, securities and silver receivable by the Government of Burma would have been approximately—

Gold 21 per cent.

Sterling securities 30 per cent.

Indian securities 11 per cent.

Silver, 38 per cent."

If Burma's revenue is 10½ per cent. of the total revenue of India, I cannot understand why Burma should expect a 21 per cent. share of the gold reserves or 38 per cent. of silver. I am not concerned with the question of separation, but I do not agree with that part of the recommendation that if Burma is separated the two countries should have a combined currency, or should have a combined Reserve Bank. It will create a lot of bad blood and friction if the two countries are not directly responsible to a central authority, if they have to operate on the same bank and operate on the same currency. I cannot understand the logic of Sir Henry Howard when he wants to pay only 5 per cent. of the pensionary charges, and at the same time claims 21 per cent. of the gold reserves. I think there must be equity. If the representatives of the Burmese Government do not want to pay the other obligations to the same extent, then why should they claim on the reserves so much? There is another thing. The Standing Finance Committee has not expressed its final view on the military charges. If separation be a settled fact, as Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has said elsewhere, then I do not understand why India should bear any responsibility for the defence of Burma.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: It should be borne by the English Exchequer.

Mr. B. Das: The military expenditure of India should be reduced by 10½ per cent. at least, if not more. As I understand the military charges of India, half of them are on the Western frontier and the other half on the Eastern frontier. Considering the frontier that Burma has, I think that Burma should bear 20 or 30 per cent. of the present military charges, because a good deal of money is spent on the Eastern frontier. Therefore, I say that the Chairman of the tribunal should be an independent man who does not belong to the British Empire, because at every stage the interest of Great Britain comes in, and knowing as I do that Burma, if she is separated, will have to run her administration at a serious loss for years and years. We have run the administration of Burma for many years at a loss, and we will not grudge it if she continues to remain as part of British India. But if she is to be separated, Great Britain will have to bear all future losses and all obligations and not India. As we object to the Indian Army being transferred to the Chinese frontier or the Egyptian frontier, or anywhere else in case there is war in any other portion of the globe, without our specific sanction and approval, so we will not like Indian armies to go and defend Burma or the Burmese frontiers. Burma will be a separate entity then like South Africa or any of the British Colonies and we will be only tied together through the silken Imperial tie or through the League of Nations. I recognise that Burma has great religious ties with India. Burma is entirely a Buddhist country, and for centuries the sons and daughters of Burma will look to Budh Gaya as their sacred place for religious and cultural inspirations. If there is separation, let it be peaceful and harmonious and let the financial adjustment be done in justice and equity. Let it not be in the interest of the poorer member which is to-day forced to be separated through high Imperial policy and I trust that the authority which will preside over the destinies of India and Burma would so assess the debt position in a manner which will be fair to both countries and India will not be asked to forego money spent on account of Burma or Great Britain.

My friend Mr. Harbilas Sarda suggested that Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and other experts from India should give their opinion. My friend Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, being a member of the Round Table Conference, cannot very well be an independent arbitrator at present, and so I think my original suggestion will be the best for the settlement and adjustment of financial relations. The Standing Finance Committee made certain mention of tariffs and my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin talked glibly of free trade, which is indirectly a pressure on Burma. I have made my position clear. No pressure should be applied on either country and India will not ask for any "most favoured" treatment from Burma. For long India will consume Burma rice and teakwood and other timbers. (An Honourable Member: "and kerosine oil.") Of course kerosine oil to-day has an excise duty, and probably next year the excise duty will equalise the import duty, and if separation comes, it will be surely equalised. That situation does not arise and India will also supply Burma with steel and other articles of Indian manufacture. I do not want any favoured treatment for Burma on the tariff matter, nor would I suggest that Burma should ask the Government for that. If the two countries enjoy equal status, Dominion Status, then the two countries can negotiate for favoured treatment like what Canada does to-day with Germany and Japan, and what Australia or South Africa do with sovereign nations but if Burma is not created sovereign State and asks Great Britain for favoured treatment, we will also be asked by Great Britain to show similar favours to Burma and that will create other difficulties and raise other complications. These are some of the difficulties which are facing me. My friends may raise other points in regard to difficulties facing them, and if the British Government are going to settle everything in their own way, let them at least appoint as Chairman of the tribunal some one from outside the British Empire.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I was on the Standing Finance Committee and was one of the signatories of this Report, and I thought it desirable that I should make one or two matters clear and submit a little explanation before the House on the five specific points raised by the Honourable the Finance Member so that this House may give such direction as it may think proper for the representatives of the Standing Finance Committee in accordance with the wishes of the Round Table Conference to submit their case. At the very outset, it must be stated that the question of Burma separation was not in issue before the Standing Finance Committee, and it is not in issue here either. That issue of separation has been eluding our grasp. There is another question which is intimately connected with the question of separation and which is in the nature of a financial obligation. That is the question of Madras. Madras has by Andhra labour and Chetty gold made Burma what it is and it is very important to know to what extent money has been invested by the Chetties of Madras in Burma. I am told it approximates to 80 crores and when the question of financial obligations is considered, I think it might be desirable to have some sort of assurance or safeguards for those who have invested large sums of money in that country. The matter that was referred to the Standing Finance Committee was as to how the financial obligations between the two countries should be taken up from the point of view of the Governments of both countries. In that light, the Howard-Nixon Memorandum was prepared. I must confess that we were not financial experts on the Standing Finance Committee. With our knowledge we might have made mistakes. If mistakes were made, they were made unintentionally. We were guided by the points raised in the Howard-Nixon Memorandum and we thought that the approach of that subject from the point of view of the two Governments in its adjustment of financial obligations should be approached as was shown by the Howard-Nixon Memorandum. Accordingly we proceeded on that Memorandum. There was some difference of opinion on some issues but on the whole it was a fairly unanimous Report. I should say. The questions which engaged our attention and which also showed that there was some difference of opinion were the question of the historical approach. The other was the financial obligations with the maintenance of the Army in India, and the third was about the pensions. With regard to the historical approach, I would like to refer to this paragraph:

"The Committee was not in a position to arrive at any definite conclusion on the question whether it is possible to make a historical analysis of the elements composing the public debt in order to calculate Burma's liability to India in the matter of the so-called 'unproductive' debt."

To this I expressed my dissent which is found in the footnote which was referred to by my Honourable friend Mr. Das. I thought that such a historical approach was possible, but in all fairness to Government, it must be said one formidable argument that was brought to bear upon that question against the view that I then took and I still take was that the question of going into this historical approach was largely complicated by the exchange. Sometimes the exchange was at Rs. 10 a pound and sometimes Rs. 15 a pound. Then, Sir, some difficulty was expressed on the part of the Government in making that historical approach that it might not be possible to go into that record because, even in the records which were available to the Government of India, there were statistics which were sometimes shown under pounds and sometimes under rupees and on account of that, complication with the exchange question, the exchange being at various rates, it was contended on behalf of the Government that such a historical approach was not possible

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Can you not show pounds and rupees separately?

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: I am simply putting forward the view of the Government as to why they thought a historical approach was not possible. That was, as I said, the only formidable argument that could be brought to bear upon that question. Now considering the announcement made by Mr. Shah in the Congress memorandum referred to by Mr. Das, and considering also that those periods were specific periods when exchange was at certain periods at Rs. 10 and at certain other periods at Rs. 15, I thought it was quite possible, since those periods were specific, that we could approach that question from the historical point of view and thus be able to see how far we have incurred expenses on account of Burma and how much Burma is liable to pay under those conditions. That was one question which this Assembly in giving a direction to the Standing Finance Committee might consider. If they think that it is quite possible for a historical approach to be made notwithstanding that objection that the exchange situation has complicated matters, I think a specific direction should be given to its representative to press that point before the impartial tribunal.

The second question on which some difference of opinion was expressed by some Members who appended a note concerned the military charges. Sir, this particular paragraph on the military charges in the Standing Finance Committee's Report runs as follows:

"15. It is of course accepted that Burma must bear the cost of any military garrison to be maintained in Burma and that this garrison must be maintained at sufficient strength to provide for all the normal requirements of Burma. The Committee particularly having regard to the uncertainty as to the future constitutional position in the matter of the defence of India did not feel able to make any final recommendations on the wider issue as to whether beyond this Burma ought to contribute to the general cost of the Army to be maintained in India, but it recognized that there might be grounds on which such a contribution might be demanded."

Sir, that was the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee. In their minute of dissent some Honourable Members have expressed the view that a contribution should be levied from England and also that a portion of that contribution should be borne by Burma as the Army maintained in India is an Imperial Army. Sir, that possibility was not excluded in the paragraph I refer to, but some explanation is necessary for me to explain the point. If there was any mistake in making any recommendation on behalf of the Standing Finance Committee, I take the full responsibility because the original draft was in accordance with the minute, but I requested the Standing Finance Committee to consider it in its present form and it was approved namely, that as the constitutional position of India is still uncertain, we do not know what shape the future control of the English Army in India will take. If we were to say that the Imperial Government should bear a portion of the cost, then it could reasonably be contended that the Imperial Government should have control over that expenditure and over that Army; but in view of the fact that it is our earnest desire that we should assume complete control over the military expenditure, and in view of the uncertainty of the future constitution, we thought that question might not now be decided. Further, there was no question of India bearing any portion of Burma's share of the cost. It will be seen from the Howard-Nixon Memorandum, that Burma said that she would be satisfied with the cost of about Rs. 2 crores on the score of its defence, but, Sir, we have been spending several crores of rupees on army purposes,—so at the rate of 2 crores of rupees for Burma, the ordinary cost for the whole of India on account of the Army would be something like 17 crores of rupees only—a cost which was once considered to be adequate by Lord Ripon's Government. But since we are spending so much money now, the question arises whether all this expenditure on army purposes is being incurred for India's sole benefit and sole interest. It is not so; and therefore the extra cost should either be chucked out and our cost should be reduced on the analogy of Burma, or, if it is to be carried as an Imperial charge here, then somebody else must be got to pay for it; and therefore, Sir, in that light I request that the House may consider this paragraph, and they will, I submit, find that all possible objections can be met by the wording of the paragraph itself. So far as the Congress is concerned, it is not my desire to go into this Congress memorandum at great length, because the whole question was reviewed here in the Report of the Committee on financial obligations presented by the Congress, at great length. The majority of that Committee were of the opinion that it is not Burma but England which has got to pay for all these things, because it is really for Imperial purposes that the whole cost arising on the conquest of Burma has been incurred. I consider that, having regard to the fact that Honourable gentlemen have not yet come forward with any definite recommendation with regard to the specific points raised, there is a great necessity for this debate to be adjourned to the Simla Session to enable Honourable Members to have the specific points specifically raised before the House in the shape of specific motions, and then give directions on them. Otherwise it would be impracticable for any directions to be given now on all the five points together, because honest differences of opinion may be expected on some of these points. Therefore I submit that it is desirable that we should postpone the debate of this subject till the Simla Session.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I support the motion of my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, that the consideration of this memorandum, which has been described as the Howard-Nixon Memorandum, should be postponed till the Simla Session.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): May I remind the Honourable Member that the motion is not for consideration of the Howard-Nixon Memorandum but for consideration of the Standing Finance Committee's Report on that Memorandum.

Sir Abdur Rahim: If I am technically incorrect, I would ask that the consideration of the Report on that Memorandum should be postponed till the Simla Session. Sir, it seems somewhat difficult to realize the necessity for bringing forward this motion at this stage. The separation of Burma admittedly has not yet been decided upon. There is to be an election, I understand, in Burma to which this specific question will be referred; and it will greatly depend, if not entirely, upon the result of that election—that is, the broad and general issue as to whether Burma should or should not be separated from India will be decided upon. That undoubtedly is the position now. On a previous occasion we had made it absolutely clear

12 Noon. that, so far as the separation of Burma from India was concerned, we should not stand in the way of Burma if she decided to separate. That is the position we have taken up and we adhere to it. We, Indians, do not desire the separation of Burma, but if she desires to separate, we shall not stand in her way. If Burma desires separation, then the financial adjustments between two countries must be carried out on this principle that it must be fair and reasonable to both parties. There is no question of generosity. We are not here to sacrifice the financial interests of India in order to help Burma to separate. I am not sure that the Honourable the Finance Member also will not agree with this proposition. He is the custodian of the finances of the country, and I am sure he will be the first person to see that adjustments between the two countries are made on a fair and impartial basis. We on this side of the House cannot agree to sacrifice the financial interests of India to help Burma to separate. I believe it is not the desire of Burma, nor does she expect, that we should make sacrifices in that direction. In fact, so far as the representatives of Burma in this Assembly are concerned, they seem to be strongly opposed to separation, and we do not want to do anything in order to help the party which wants separation from India. But if separation is to be made ultimately, that is, if Burma decides on separation, she must agree to a fair adjustment of the financial questions that arise. We are not in a position to express ourselves on the five propositions which the Honourable the Finance Member has laid down for our consideration. It is evident that the questions involved are all extremely complicated and difficult in character, and the Honourable the Finance Member will himself realise that it is not possible for this House now to formulate propositions which will really help in arriving at a proper settlement even in a very general way. We fully recognise that a Board of Arbitration has to be ultimately appointed. But we cannot agree to the appointment of this Board before we have had opportunities of more fully considering this matter. I should go further and say that no such Board should be appointed until Burma has decided to separate. Sir, if the Board be appointed before the question of separation has finally been decided, it really amounts to this, that we should be either throwing away all that has been done in the meantime, or we should be forcing the hands of Burma. Either of two alternatives this House cannot agree to. It is quite as well that the financial position has been examined by my friend Mr. Nixon and Sir Henry Howard, and we have got a valuable Report before us. We have also the Report of the Standing Finance Committee. This has given us certain facts and figures and we shall have to consider those facts, but if we are to go to arbitration now, that really means that we commit ourselves to whatever decisions the Board may arrive at. Surely if the Honourable the Finance Member does not want to commit us at this stage to the appointment of the Board and to a reference to this Board of the questions that have been raised in the Memorandum and in the Report of the Standing Finance Committee, there should be no difficulty in having the consideration postponed till the Simla Session. But we cannot on any account commit ourselves to referring very important financial questions that would arise if Burma is separated to any tribunal before the question of separation itself has been finally decided upon. Sir, the amount involved according to the estimate given us by the Finance Member is 66½ crores, but according to the Congress Report, at any rate according to the Report of Mr. Shah which has been referred to by my Honourable friend Mr. B. Das, it amounts to 100 crores. Surely no decision should be taken even of a general character in the shape of directions or advice to any tribunal on a matter of such importance and such magnitude without giving the House and the parties concerned proper and full opportunities

o consider the whole situation and all the issues that are involved. I may incidentally observe that my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad has made some observations regarding free trade and the Ottawa Conference which the Leader of the House will attend as one of the members and my Honourable friend Mr. B. Das has taken objection to what he said. I am sure what Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad said was merely his personal opinion and he did not want that his opinion should be accepted either as the opinion of this party or of any sections of the House. As regards the question before the House, I do hope that my Honourable friend Sir George Schuster will have due regard to the position in which this House is placed, for instance there is not a single Member of the European Group present now, and yet questions involving crores and crores of rupees are involved, and the same is the case with many Members on this side of the House. Surely in a House like this, the Honourable the Finance Member will not try to tie our hands in any way or to commit us to any sort of proposition whatever at this stage.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I wish to say only a few words as regards the procedure to be adopted in settling this question. The question of the separation of Burma first came up for discussion in the Round Table Conference and therefore that question, if it is to be finally settled by any organisation or any party, must be settled by the Round Table Conference. The Prime Minister gave an assurance, and a definite assurance, that the Round Table Conference would have an opportunity of discussing the question of the separation of Burma before a final decision was taken on the whole constitutional question.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): There is a separate Round Table Conference for Burma now.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I am quite aware that there was a separate Round Table Conference for Burma; but if the separation of Burma is to be given effect to, both India and Burma have to be parties to the deed of separation. That deed cannot be signed by Burma alone. I therefore feel that the final settlement of this question has to be arrived at the Round Table Conference and. I am quite prepared to admit, in a Round Table Conference consisting of the representatives of India and the representatives of Burma. But I fail to understand how the Government of India and the Government of Burma come in in this affair. I thought, and the whole country understood, that the constitutional question was going to be settled by the Round Table Conference and not by the Government of India or the Government of Burma. I quite realise that this question of financial adjustment is a complex one and a difficult one; and the Round Table Conference will require the assistance of an expert body in order that this question should be properly discussed, decided and settled. But, I feel that that expert assistance can be made available to the Round Table Conference, and the two sides of that Conference, with the help of the experts which they may possess, will come to a decision, and if they fail to come to a decision, then I admit the question will have to be decided by arbitrators. But as regards the arbitrators themselves, I agree with my Honourable friend the Leader of the Independent Party, that that arbitration should take place after it is decided that Burma should be separated. Otherwise, in my view there is a great danger and that danger is this: who is to appoint the arbitrators? I heard some Members say the Secretary of State for India will appoint the Board of arbitrators. Now, I feel that the Secretary of State for India, as well as the British Government, is interested in the question of separation. The question of separation has been forced upon the Round Table Conference primarily by the British Government. When they found that India had to be given self-government, they decided in their minds to create some difficulties for Indians before they got self-government. They decided that, before we got self-government we must accept the control of the Indian Princes. Secondly, they decided that if we are to get self-government at all, we must at least part with Burma. Therefore the British Government, as represented by the Secretary of State, is interested in this question. If he is interested in that question and if he is to appoint arbitrators, the decision of the arbitrators is not likely to be approved of by the British Indians and by the whole of India. (Opposition cries of "Hear, hear.") We want the arbitrators to be appointed by an impartial body, a body which is not interested either in the separation or in keeping Burma and India together. It is then only that the arbitration will be accepted by India, and I may say, even by Burma. I therefore feel that this question of procedure is a very important one, and I would like the Honourable the Finance Member to tell me how the Government of India come in in this affair. The Government of India did not take part in the Round Table Conference; the Government of Burma did not take part in the Round Table Conference; this question is a question before the Round Table Conference, and I want to know from the Honourable the Finance Member how the Government of India came in. Even accepting for a moment that the arbitrators will be appointed by an impartial body and the case of India and the case of Burma will have to be put before the Board of arbitrators by some people, I claim that it is not the Government of India and it is not the Government of Burma who are to place the case before the arbitrators of India and of Burma respectively. It is that section of the Round Table Conference which represents India and that other section of the Round Table Conference which represents Burma which should put the case before the Board of arbitrators. I am quite aware of the fact that the Round Table Conference does not consist of financial experts. But the Round Table Conference will have the assistance of such experts. They have on their own body some financial experts; on the staff of the Conference there are financial experts; and, if even they are not enough, these sections of the Round Table Conference can appoint committees of financial experts, who will help them to place their respective cases before the Board of arbitrators. I feel that this financial adjustment is not going to affect the present Government of India as it is, and the present Government of Burma as it is; but the financial adjustment is going to affect the future Government of India and the future Government of Burma; and what position has the present Government of India to represent the future Government of India? And what position has the present Government of Burma to represent the future Government of Burma? It has been admitted by everybody, including the British Government, that the future Government of India is going to be decided by the general Round Table Conference, and I therefore feel that the only party competent to place the case of the future Government of India and the future Government of Burma before the Board of arbitration is the Round Table Conference or any of its Committees—the Federal Structure Committee or even the Consultative Committee—with the experts which they can command, and not the Government of India or the Government of Burma.

I do not wish to touch upon the question of the debts and currencies and other matters. I would only say just a word or two on that point and it is this. On the whole it is much better both for Burma and for India if we can, in a joint conference, accept some simple principle on which we can make a division of our debts and can arrange other financial matters, instead of going into the correct historical past of the two countries. I am quite aware there is a feeling that Burma should pay for the Burmese wars. I was very glad to hear from my Honourable friend, Mr. Raju, that there is not much justice in that. If anybody is to pay for the Burmese war, it is Great Britain, and neither India nor Burma; and as a Burmese friend reminded me a very short time ago, Burma will be morally right if she claims some compensation from India when India claims that Burma should pay for the Burmese wars. The Burmese were enslaved by the help of Indians with the help of Indian money, and the Burmese will be entitled to claim compensation. I therefore feel that no useful purpose will be served by going into the historical events to settle the question of the adjustment of debts between Burma and India. Let us adopt some simple principle which will be acceptable to both, and the question will be decided very easily. Mr. President, I have done.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, it is not necessary to make a very long speech on this occasion, but it is very necessary to indicate the complications that are involved in this issue. The question of financial adjustment between India and Burma of the future is a very important question, both from the Indian and the Burman financial point of view. It ranges over a wide field such as currency arrangements in the case of Burma, retaining the course of Indian currency arrangements in the event of Burma introducing a separate currency system. Then there is the debt question, the amount of the debt, the allocation of portions of the debt against productive or commercialised assets, apportionment of certain specific assets and liabilities on territorial grounds, the apportionment of the unallocated debt, the ascertainment of the rate or rates of interest payable on the portion of the debt assigned to Burma, the settlement of the form which Burma's share of the debt should take under the terms of repayment. Then, Sir, there is the question of the pensions. We have the observations on these matters both of Mr. Nixon and Sir Henry Howard, also the opinion of the dissentients in the Standing Finance Committee. Again, Sir, there is the question of reparation and of defence and the general financial results so far as India is concerned on the defence settlement, for it is an obvious fact that India has been paying for the defence of Burma. It is a very old question, and there are references to it even in Mr. Montagu's diary and in the earlier debates of the old Imperial Legislative Council, when you, Sir, the late Mr. Gokhale and others used to take part in the discussions. The Congress has already expressed its opinion in voluminous documents regarding the historical aspect which Mr. Munshi ought to have taken notice of before he described Mr. Nixon as asking for a pound of flesh without a drop of blood, for the historical aspect, I am certain, did not appeal to Mr. Nixon, though the historical aspect involves something to the extent of 90 crores of rupees, as revealed in the Appendix to the financial Report of the Simon Commission, in which the following passage occurs:

"On the question of the debt there has been much discussion. . . . From the time of the conquest of Burma onwards that the cost of these wars is debited to Burma she has practically throughout her association with India been a deficit province and these deficits accumulated. . . . and at compound interest the amount is now 90 crores. . . ."

I do not want to read much from that document. I only mention these facts, because these facts have got to be carefully gone into. The Government of India in their despatch, relevant passages from which are quoted both in the Memorandum of the Nixon Report and also in the discussions by way of footnote to the Round Table Conference, had stated: "We believe that a Committee of the Privy Council would be the sort of tribunal most likely to satisfy Indian opinion". Sir, a Committee has got to be appointed, and the very fact that they want to appoint a Committee of the Privy Council shows that they are inclined to the Opposition view that the Committee has got to be impartial. The opinion on this side is that it would be good to refer the matter to the League of Nations and an impartial tribunal appointed by the League of Nations. There are difficulties in this matter, and I for my part have no definite opinion as to whether it should be left to the League of Nations or to the Privy Council Committee, for the very simple reason that both Burma and India are not going out of the British Empire, and therefore they should be able to find an impartial tribunal from within the British Empire itself. (Hear, hear.) At the same time, every attempt should be made to see that the Commission is impartial. The Finance Member has said that the members of the Standing Finance Committee would be associated in this matter, and I would strongly suggest to the Finance Member to take Members of the Opposition Benches, who are in the Standing Finance Committee. I am not particular either about supporting the motion for postponement or for that matter opposing it; but what we are really concerned with is this, that Indian interests must be protected now that Burma is cutting the painter so to say so far as India is concerned. The moment Burma cuts the painter, it becomes necessary for the Government of India to see to it that Indian interests are adequately protected. Mr. Nixon has been a moderate in that respect, and in my own opinion Sir Henry Howard has been something in the nature of an extreme advocate of Burmese claims. With these observations, I resume my seat.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Sir, the present motion before the House is to consider the Report of the Standing Finance Committee on the Howard-Nixon Report, and this side of the House desires that the consideration of the whole question should be postponed till the next session. But the argument advanced by the Honourable the Finance Member yesterday was that this House ought to consider this question now because there is no knowing when the Government of Burma might force the hands of the Government of India and ask them to decide what precise amount was to be paid by Burma to India in the event of separation. For that purpose the appointment of an impartial tribunal will be necessary, and the deliberations of the tribunal will take some time, and as the Government of Burma may desire that the decision should be put before their elections take place and as the figure of the debt of India due by Burma will be one of the arguments for or against separation that figure should be made known. That is, as I understand the position, the argument of the Finance Member. I may point out, Sir, that this argument does not appeal to me. If Burma wants separation from India, it ought to be on the ground whether the connection of Burma with India is advantageous to her or not. If it is not advantageous to her, and if Burma expects that she can advance her interests adequately and more favourably by separation, then of course she has the right to separate from India. But if the Burmese people find that their future advancement will lie with the advancement of India, they will be perfectly justified in deciding that Burma should remain with India. The question of how many crores of rupees should be paid by Burma to India does not come in at all. Is it the argument of the Finance Member, or for that matter of the Government of Burma, that the question of the separation of Burma from India is to be decided by the amount of the debt? If it is a bigger debt, then Burma will not like to pay that big amount and would like to remain with India, and if it is a smaller amount, is that to be an inducement for Burma to go out of the Indian Empire? I do not think that the Government of Burma will be justified in forcing the hands of the Government of India in asking them to decide this question this summer, and for that reason I claim that the consideration of this question ought to be postponed till the next session. There is no hurry about it. Let the Burmese people decide whether they would like to remain within the Indian Empire or to go out of the Indian Empire, and then there will be time enough, before the actual separation takes place, to decide what amount is due by one side or the other. I have to say that the connection of Burma with India was not of India's own choosing. India was under a perpetual tutelage of the British people, and I do not know how long that tutelage is going to continue. We have been put under guardians, and our guardians chose that a foreign member should be introduced into the family. Burma was given in adoption to India against her will, and for that purpose a huge amount of debt was incurred and India was saddled with that debt as if the whole estate was managed for the advantage of India. Burma now wants to go out, or it has been shown that Burma wants to separate, and I think it is the desire of the guardians of both the countries that they should now separate. But on what terms? Burma has not become a major. Burma was once a major, but in order to bring her under the guardianship of the British Government her ruler was taken a prisoner and brought to Ratnagiri. In that way Burma was reduced to the position of a ward and was taken under guardianship. Now, this farce of joining Burma to India and separating Burma from India is to be carried on, not in the interests of India, nor in the interests of Burma, but perhaps in the interests of Great Britain, the trustee, the guardian. I for my part am not satisfied with the whole procedure that is being carried on in the special Burma Round Table Conference, and now in the Howard-Nixon conversations, and the future tribunal that is going to be appointed. I want to press again that the whole thing, the settlement of the financial questions, ought to be postponed till the question of separation of Burma is decided by an independent vote of the Burmese themselves. India never wanted Burma and would not like to keep her against her will within the Indian Empire, but if Burma wants to go out, she ought to be free to go out and seek her own destiny. I think that the consideration of this question ought to be postponed till the next session, and as I see it, there is no hurry to decide it now.

An Honourable Member: Let the question be now put.

(At this stage Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi rose in his seat.)

Mr. President: You have already spoken.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I spoke only on the amendment, Sir.

Mr. President: The whole question was before the House. Sir George Schuster.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: While it is still fresh in my mind, I should like to reply to my Honourable friend from Bombay who has just spoken. He referred several times to "my arguments". According to him I was responsible for certain arguments for pressing the consideration of this business at the present stage. I would remind him that I tried yesterday to explain the position very clearly to the House. And the position is this. We understand from the results of the Round Table Conference and from the statement made by the Prime Minister in his speech winding up the Burma Round Table Conference that the general view accepted then was that, before the public of Burma were asked to decide on the issue of separation, they should have the financial issues put before them. That is the position with which we are confronted. It is not our decision, and it is not my argument. That being the position, we felt that it was right, and in fact it was our duty to put the matter before the House in the course of the present session because, as a result of the procedure which apparently is going to be adopted, it may be necessary to advance the consideration of this question in the course of the next Summer months.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: May I know whether it is a reasonable one?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am only putting this to my Honourable friend because it is important in discussing the whole matter in this House to remember that this is not our argument, it is not our position, and we are not really in a position to decide on this question. It is a question with which the Round Table Conference has been seized and on which the Round Table Conference has decided that a certain line should be adopted. I shall come back to that point again, but I wish to correct my Honourable friend's apparent misunderstanding of what the position is.

On the question of the whole debate, I think on the whole we may congratulate ourselves on the debate having served a very useful purpose. The House in arguing for the postponement of any discussion has in fact managed to have quite a useful discussion on the main issue, and I feel from the speeches that I have heard that there is a good deal to be got and that it will be useful to us to have those speeches on record. But I am in some difficulty in understanding precisely what the general opinion of the House on this matter is. I think it may be definitely said that, so far as any one has spoken on this matter, no one is really opposed to the principle of referring these issues to arbitration.

Sir Abdur Rahim: But not now.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am coming to that point afterwards. The principle of decision by a Board of Arbitrators can, I think, be taken to be generally accepted. My Honourable friend Mr. B. Das has made a suggestion as to how those arbitrators should be appointed, and I confess that I was very glad to hear what fell from the Leader of the Nationalist Party on that question. This is really an Empire question and it is an amazing suggestion of my Honourable friend that it is necessary to go outside the Empire in order to get an impartial tribunal for deciding a question of this kind.

Another point on which I tried to get some guidance was whether the House was satisfied with the proposal that the Standing Finance Committee should be associated with the arguing of the case before the Board of Arbitration. Honourable Members were on the whole very silent on that point. Judging from what was said by certain members of the Standing Finance Committee itself, I gained the impression that they were not very favourably disposed to that proposal because they were so very anxious to disclaim any right to describe themselves as financial experts. They have even written of themselves in some apologetic tone in their own Report. I must say, having heard the speeches that they made to-day, I was left in some doubt as to whether they felt themselves qualified to represent the case before the arbitral tribunal. Nevertheless, that is the recommendation of the Round Table Conference, and in the absence of any definite decision to change that, that recommendation will be carried out. But I have heard in addition to that, the suggestion that other representatives might also be associated with the arguing of the case. That is a point which the Government of India could certainly take up and represent to His Majesty's Government.

Then finally,—for I leave aside the actual discussion of the issues involved, because for one thing I do not want to enter into any further argument on these, and for another I would remind the House that the essence of the case is that those issues should be submitted to arbitration—finally I come to the main point asking for delay. I would ask the House what precisely they expect to gain by delay. Certain suggestions have indeed been made as to what should be done, but I would remind the House that there has already been a considerable amount of time spent over considering this matter. The financial experts' Report was actually put before the Standing Finance Committee last September. The Standing Finance Committee did not wish to discuss it then: they wished to have time to study it, and since then I have certainly done my best to secure a proper discussion of that Report. I mention that fact not in any way to criticise what has been done or to criticise the delay, nor indeed as suggesting that we are not willing to listen to the demand which has been made for further time for consideration, but I would ask Honourable Members to appreciate the practical difficulties. Here we have got a Committee of this Assembly, which is peculiarly qualified to study financial questions. It is elected for that purpose, and that Committee has had this Report before it for considerably over six months. There has been ample time to study it, and it is a criticism that could be made of our procedure from outside that it is not reasonable for us to be asking for further time when we have already had so much time to consider the matter. Therefore I want to put this to the House, that in asking for further time they ought to be very clear in their minds what precisely they propose should be done, and whether we really can advance this matter any further at the present stage, always having in mind that the procedure which is proposed is that the issues should be decided by a Board of Arbitration, and that all that is necessary is to prepare a brief for those who are going to argue India's case before the Board of Arbitration. As regards that, although as I have said I do not wish to go into the purely technical issues, I can say this, that having heard the line that some Members would like to take, we will certainly take account of that line on such a question as to whether India's claim as regards the debt is to be assessed by the historical method or not. I told the House yesterday that that point having been raised and certain opinions having been expressed in favour of that method of approach, we should certainly give it further consideration and the Government representatives, if Government is represented before the tribunal, will further discuss that matter with the representatives of the Standing Finance Committee.

Now, Sir, perhaps the most useful way of concluding what I have to say now would be to take the speech of my Honourable friend the Leader of the Independent Party, who took a very definite line on the whole question. I should like to take the points that he made. In the first place he said that the adjustment must be fair; that we cannot afford to be generous, nor should we make separation unduly attractive to Burma by making the financial settlement a generous settlement, a settlement which went further than it ought to go on the strict merits of the case. I entirely agree with every word that fell from my Honourable friend. I will only add this,—picking up what I said myself in my speech yesterday—that if separation is a settled issue, if the public of Burma has decided in favour of separation,—and my Honourable friend agrees that if they do so decide India should not stand in their way,—then we shall have to consider not only the mere financial issues, but we shall have to take account of the future relations between the two countries, and, taking that into account, I think it is important that the financial adjustment should be made in a reasonable way, in a way which is likely to lead to amicable relations in future. I think that all that I have said on this matter is included in my Honourable friend's own description that the settlement must be fair.

Then, Sir, my Honourable friend further went on to say that he was not in a position to express himself, nor were his party in a position to express their views on the five propositions which I laid down. I would remind him that I laid down no propositions. I merely called the attention of the House to what were the main issues in this whole question.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Propositions laid down for consideration. That is all I said.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I apologise. I understood my Honourable friend said that I had laid down certain propositions, and I do want to remind the House that, so far, we, the Government of India, have accepted no particular line in dealing with these issues. We have before us the Howard-Nixon Report, and we have before us the Report of the Standing Finance Committee, which—and I would remind my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer of this,—which, not only in its lissentient minute, but in the body of the Report, differs in some very considerable respects from the suggestions made by Mr. Nixon in his Memorandum. We have these before us, and we think that it is on the basis of these propositions that we can argue our case before the arbitral tribunal. In this connection I would draw the attention of the House to what the Standing Finance Committee themselves said on this matter,—and this is a Committee of the House which presumably the House is prepared to support:

“The Committee has felt some difficulty in performing the task allotted to it owing to the highly technical nature of many of the issues which are involved. For this reason and also because it has had no opportunity of hearing arguments on the other side, it has been reluctant to express final views. Moreover, it strongly supports the view expressed by the Government of India in their despatch on Constitutional Reforms of September 20, 1929, that the main issues should be submitted to an Arbitral Tribunal.

The Committee wishes its expressions in this report to be interpreted in the light of the foregoing observations. Such expressions must be regarded essentially as advice to the Government of India as to the manner in which the case should be argued from the Indian side, and not necessarily as indicating that this Committee would not consider acceptable any other solutions than those which it has indicated.”

That, Sir, I submit, is as far as any one can go at the present stage, and after that, if we are going to submit to an arbitral tribunal, the actual decision will rest in their hands, not in the hands of the two parties to the arbitration.

Then, Sir, my Honourable friend further went on to say that he accepted the principle of the Board of Arbitration but he could not agree to the appointment of the Board before his party and the House generally have had a further opportunity of considering the matter, and further he argued that the Board should not be appointed until the actual issue of separation has been decided by Burma. Now, Sir, on that point I take note, and the Government will take note, of the position adopted by my Honourable friend, but I would remind him, as I have already reminded the House, that the power to decide this point as to when the arbitration is to take place does not rest with this House and it does not rest with the Government of India. We can represent the views expressed by this House to His Majesty's Government at home and that we shall certainly do; but we cannot decide here whether arbitration is to be postponed or not.

That really brings me to the point which will arise when we have to consider what action is to be taken on this motion. This House of course can perfectly well decide to postpone discussion of this motion, but I must put it to the House that it is not in their power to decide whether arbitration is to be postponed or not. We wished in bringing this motion before the House to ascertain the views of the House and certainly not to out-vote the House on the matter, and if the House wishes to postpone the discussion, we on this side will certainly not stand in their way. But we cannot go further—and I should be misleading the House if I said more than this—we cannot go further than undertake to represent to His Majesty's Government the views that have been expressed today. I can assure the House that we shall do that, and that we shall take note of all the other suggestions that have been made; and I hope if the arbitration does proceed, and if the Government of India are led to argue the case, that we shall be able to do it in a way, and to gather to ourselves assistance of a nature, which will satisfy the House that we have made the best effort that was possible to present the case and to secure a fair decision. (Loud Applause.)

[Sir George Schuster.]

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the consideration of the motion be postponed till the next Simla Session."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned sine die.

RULING(S) BY MR. PRESIDENT (THE HONOURABLE SIR IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA)—

Ballot—

Honourable Members whose names were called can exercise their right of voting till the — is closed. 378.

Bill(s)—

An Honourable Member is perfectly entitled to give expression to his own view as to what principles are underlying a — as it stands before the House. 185.

Previous sanction of the Governor General is necessary to move an amendment to extend the period of taxation. 689.

The Chair is bound to protect the rights and privileges of the House and would not allow any very controversial measure to be sprung upon the House at the last moment, but public business has to be done and it is for elected members to decide whether they will avail themselves of the opportunities provided for contributing towards it. 2921.

Cut Motion(s)—

In the case of —, the Mover is entitled to reply. 1329.

Demand(s) for Grant(s) — General Budget—

The question of subvention to the North-West Frontier Province is out of order under the — in respect of the Legislative Assembly and Legislative Assembly Department. 2289.

Demand(s) for Grant(s)—Motion(s) for Reduction—

Motions for practical elimination of the whole Demand will be entertained on the only ground that the Honourable Member wishes to refuse supplies because he does not approve of the whole policy underlying the Demand.

Motions for a cut of a nominal figure can be moved to ventilate a specific grievance, but the attempt to obtain priority for cut motions ventilating specific grievances, by moving for whole cuts or practically whole cuts, or very large cuts, cannot be allowed and it is desirable, in order to facilitate the arrangement of priority, that Honourable Members moving for cuts to ventilate specific grievances, should adopt a uniform figure of cut of Rs. 100. Honourable Members, in giving notice of such a cut motion, should restrict themselves to one specific grievance, but there is no limit to the number of cut motion which an Honourable Member may move to ventilate specific grievances. Honourable Members are entitled to move that a Demand be reduced by any amount with a view to effect economy, but in discussing such motions, it is relevant to discuss only how that economy can be effected. 1321-22.

Demand(s) for Grant(s)—Motion(s) for Reduction—Railway Budget—

The subject dealing with the specific grievance of coal purchases cannot be held to be relevant to the motion re favouritism in the railways as that word, as explained by the Honourable the Mover, cannot be construed to cover the particular subject which the Honourable Member (Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi) wishes to raise. 1437.

Demand(s) for Supplementary Grant(s)—

No Honourable Member can move a cut motion if the subject matter which he wishes to discuss does not arise under the provision for which a — is asked for. 1829, 1830-31.

Executive Council—

As the — is in charge of the entire policy of administration of the Government of India, Honourable Members are in order, when discussing the Demands under the General Budget, in criticising the policy pursued by the — in the administration of collieries which supply coal only to the railways. 2163.

Interruptions—

- In the interests of good debate, Honourable Members should abstain from interrupting very frequently. 2250-51.

RULING(S) BY MR. PRESIDENT (THE HONOURABLE SIR IBRAHIM RAHIM-TOOLA)—(contd.)List of Business—

With the unanimous consent of the House variations in procedure can be allowed. 938.

Miscellaneous—

An Honourable Member cannot ask another Honourable Member to get up and give answers to him. 2154.

As directors of companies, Honourable Members are not personally and directly interested in the contract of the managing agents of such companies and are in order in taking part in the discussion. 2159.

As this House is concerned with public business only, Honourable Members cannot deal, and ought not to deal, in the House with matters which may happen inside parties at their meetings or even inside meetings held by them outside the House. 2295-96.

Honourable Members should restrict themselves to the issue before the House. 1541, 1547-

It is not desirable that any discussion of what happened at party meetings should take place in the House as far as possible, and unless the question of principle is involved, it should not be brought on the floor of the House. 2250-51.

It is perfectly parliamentary to say that the statement made by an Honourable Member is incorrect. 422.

It is unparliamentary to attribute personal motives to Honourable Members. 1964.

Newspapers are not allowed to be read even if they concern the subject under discussion. 2631.

Newspapers should not be read in the Chamber. 1878, 2830.

No Honourable Member can introduce new matter in his reply; he can reply duly to the points which have arisen in the debate. 1462.

No offensive expression is permitted in the House and if the word "rubbish" is believed to be offensive to anyone, it must be withdrawn. 296.

Personal remarks are not permitted. 558.

Repetition in regard to one issue cannot be allowed. 1453.

Responsibility for mentioning private talks in the House rests with the Honourable Member who divulges them. 1438.

The Chair cannot deal with matter appearing in the Press except what directly affects the business of the House. 1080.

Time spent in interruptions cannot be added to the time allowed to each Honourable Member. If he objects to the interruptions, he need not yield. 1267.

Point of Order—

Honourable Members must give way on a ——. 1342.

Honourable Members must give way when a —— is raised. 1342.

Honourable Members raising a —— should take adequate care to ascertain the facts before making allegations. 2159.

Question(s)—

Honourable Members in asking —— are not allowed to make suggestions for action. 27.

It is open to any Honourable Member when a supplementary —— is put to raise a point of order as to whether it was a proper supplementary question, but such points cannot arise at a later stage. 1617.

No —— can be asked when a point of order is raised. 1610.

Replies to —— however long are to be read out in the House. 1312.

Replies to —— laid on the table cannot be read in the House. If any Honourable Member wishes to elicit further information on the subject, he should give notice to get it. 1610.

RULING(S) BY MR. PRESIDENT (THE HONOURABLE SIR IBRAHIM RAHIM-TOOLA)—(concl'd.)

Question(s)—(concl'd.)

The practice of sending answers to certain questions to only the Member concerned is not correct procedure. An Honourable Member asks questions with the authority of the Assembly, and the Assembly as a whole is entitled to know the replies to admitted questions given by the Treasury Benches. It is therefore necessary that all questions which have been put in the Assembly should be replied to in the Assembly. 612.

When an Honourable Member asks a question whether Government are aware of certain things, it is perfectly open to Government to say, no they have no knowledge about them. 2214.

Resolution(s)—

An amendment to a resolution, which widens the scope of the original resolution, is out of order. 844-45.

Select Committee(s)—

Honourable Members are not entitled to discuss the proceedings of —. 1890.

Honourable Members whose names are included in the proposal to serve on a — are entitled to get up and say that they should be excused from such service. 434.
